The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 95.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that 95 gentlemen having passed between the tellers in favor of taking the yeas and nays, a sufficient number supporting the demand, it is not necessary for those opposed to pass between the tellers.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the Senate bill 843, to amend section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes. The yeas and nays being ordered, those in favor of the passage of the bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 137, answered "present" 1, not voting 117, as follows:

YEAS—177.

Ackerman	Dupré	Leatherwood	Riordan
Almon	Echols	Lee, Ga.	Robertson
Anderson	Ellis	Lehlbach	Rodenberg
Andrews, Nebr.	Favrot	Lineberger	Rosdale
Arentz	Fields	Little	Sandlin
Aswell	Fish	Logan	Scott, Tenn.
Atkeson	Fisher	Luhling	Shreve
Barbour	Focht	McArthur	Sinnott
Beedy	Fordney	McCormick	Sisson
Blakeney	French	McDuffie	Slemp
Bland, Va.	Fuller	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Smith, Idaho
Bowers	Garrett, Tenn.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Smithwick
Brennan	Gensman	McPherson	Stevens
Brinson	Glynn	Maloney	Stevenson
Britten	Goodykoontz.	Mapes	Strong, Kans.
Brooks, Ill.	Green, Iowa	Martin	Strong, Pa.
Brooks, Pa.	Griffin	Mead	Summers, Wash.
Brown, Tenn.	Hadley	Michener	Swank
Bulwinkle	Hammer	Miller	Swing
Burdick	Hardy, Colo.	Millsbaugh	Taylor, Ark.
Burtness	Harrison	Mondell	Taylor, Tenn.
Cable	Hawes	Montague	Temple
Cantrill	Hawley	Montoya	Ten Eyck
Carew	Hayden	Moore, Ill.	Tillman
Chandler, Okla.	Hersey	Moore, Ohio	Timberlake
Clague	Himes	Moore, Va.	Upshaw
Clark, Fla.	Hudspeth	Moore, Ind.	Valle
Clarke, N. Y.	Hull	Mudd	Vinson
Classon	Humphreys	Murphy	Ward, N. Y.
Codd	Jacoway	Newton, Minn.	Ward, N. C.
Cole, Iowa	Jeffers, Ala.	Newton, Mo.	Watson
Collier	Johnson, Wash.	O'Brien	Weaver
Colton	Jones, Pa.	O'Connor	Webster
Connell	King	Oldfield	Williamson
Cooper, Wis.	Kinkaid	Osborne	Wilson
Crago	Kirkpatrick	Overstreet	Wingo
Crisp	Kissel	Padgett	Wise
Curry	Kline, N. Y.	Parks, Ark.	Woods, Va.
Dallinger	Knutson	Pou	Wright
Darrow	Kunz	Pringley	Wyant
Deal	Lankford	Raker	Yates
Denison	Larsen, Ga.	Ransley	Zihlman
Dickinson	Larson, Minn.	Reece
Driver	Lazaro	Rhodes
Dunbar	Lea, Calif.	Riddick

NAYS—137.

Andrew, Mass.	Blanton	Campbell, Kans.	Coughlin
Anthony	Boies	Cannon	Cramton
Appleby	Bowling	Chalmers	Davis, Tenn.
Bankhead	Box	Chindblom	Dempsey
Barkley	Browne, Wis.	Christopherson	Dominick
Beck	Burroughs	Clouse	Dowell
Begg	Burton	Cole, Ohio	Drewry
Benham	Butler	Collins	Dunn
Bird	Byrnes, S. C.	Conna'ly, Tex.	Dyer
Black	Byrns, Tenn.	Cooper, Ohio	Elliott

Evans	Kelly, Pa.	Parker, N. Y.	Stafford
Foster	Kincheloe	Perkins	Steagall
Frear	Klecza	Quin	Steenerson
Frothingham	Kline, Pa.	Radcliffe	Summers, Tex.
Fullmer	Kraus	Ramseyer	Sweet
Gerner	Lampert	Rankin	Taylor, N. J.
Gilbert	Lanham	Rayburn	Thomas
Goldsborough	Lawrence	Reavis	Tompson
Graham, Ill.	Layton	Reber	Tinker
Greene, Mass.	Longworth	Reed, N. Y.	Tinkham
Greene, Vt.	Lowrey	Reed, W. Va.	Towner
Hardy, Tex.	McClintic	Ricketts	Underhill
Haugen	McFadden	Robison	Vestal
Hicks	McLaughlin, Mich.	Rogers	Volk
Hill	MacGregor	Rose	Walsh
Hogan	Magee	Rosenbloom	Wheeler
Houghton	Morgan	Rouse	White, Kans.
Huddleston	Nelson, A. P.	Sanders, Ind.	White, Me.
Hutchinson	Nelson, J. M.	Sanders, N. Y.	Williams
Ireland	Norton	Scott, Mich.	Winslow
James	Ogden	Shaw	Wood, Ind.
Jones, Tex.	Olpp	Siegel	Woodruff
Kearns	Paige	Sinclair
Keller	Park, Ga.	Speaks
Kelley, Mich.	Parker, N. J.	Sproul

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Luce

NOT VOTING—117.

Ansorge	Flood	Kopp	Rucker
Bacharach	Free	Kreider	Ryan
Bell	Freeman	Langley	Sabath
Bixler	Funk	Lee, N. Y.	Sanders, Tex.
Bland, Ind.	Gahn	Linthicum	Schall
Bond	Gallivan	London	Sears
Brand	Garner	Lyon	Shelton
Briggs	Garrett, Tex.	McKenzie	Smith, Mich.
Buchanan	Gorman	McSwain	Snell
Burke	Gould	Madden	Snyder
Campbell, Pa.	Graham, Pa.	Mann	Stedman
Carter	Griest	Mansfield	Stiness
Chandler, N. Y.	Hays	Merritt	Stoll
Cockran	Herrick	Michaelson	Sullivan
Connolly, Pa.	Hickey	Mills	Tague
Copley	Hoch	Morin	Taylor, Colo.
Crowther	Hukriede	Mott	Tilson
Cullen	Husted	Nolan	Treadway
Dale	Jeffers, Nebr.	Oliver	Tyson
Davis, Minn.	Johnson, Ky.	Parrish	Vare
Doughton	Johnson, Miss.	Patterson, Mo.	Voigt
Drane	Johnson, S. Dak.	Patterson, N. J.	Volstead
Edmonds	Kahn	Perlman	Walters
Elston	Kendall	Peters	Wason
Fairchild	Kennedy	Petersen	Woodyard
Fairfield	Ketcham	Porter	Wurzbach
Faust	Kless	Purnell	Young
Fenn	Kindred	Rainey, Ala.
Fess	Kitchin	Rainey, Ill.
Fitzgerald	Knight	Roach

So the bill was passed.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. FLOOD.
 Mr. HUKRIEDE with Mr. SEARS.
 Mr. FREE with Mr. SANDERS of Texas.
 Mr. ROACH with Mr. RUCKER.
 Mr. SNYDER with Mr. TAGUE.
 Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota with Mr. BELL.
 Mr. KENNEDY with Mr. TYSON.
 Mr. TREAWAY with Mr. GARNER.
 Mr. FAIRFIELD with Mr. CULLEN.
 Mr. KRIEDER with Mr. STOLL.
 Mr. EDMONDS with Mr. GALLIVAN.
 Mr. SHELTON with Mr. BRIGGS.
 Mr. MADDEN with Mr. KITCHIN.
 Mr. FESS with Mr. GARRETT of Texas.
 Mr. WALTERS with Mr. SULLIVAN.
 Mr. KLESS with Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania.
 Mr. FAUST with Mr. DOUGHTON.
 Mr. GORMAN with Mr. MCSWAIN.
 Mr. MORIN with Mr. LONDON.
 Mr. PORTER with Mr. COCKRAN.
 Mr. PATTERSON of Missouri with Mr. SARATH.
 Mr. FAIRCHILD with Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi.
 Mr. VARE with Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.
 Mr. SNELL with Mr. BUCHANAN.
 Mr. PATTERSON of New Jersey with Mr. DRANE.
 Mr. NOLAN with Mr. LINTHICUM.
 Mr. KENDALL with Mr. BRAND.
 Mr. PERLMAN with Mr. MANSFIELD.
 Mr. KAHN with Mr. PARRISH.
 Mr. GRIEST with Mr. STEDMAN.
 Mr. BACHARACH with Mr. CARTER.
 Mr. FITZGERALD with Mr. LYON.
 Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota with Mr. OLIVER.
 Mr. HAYS with Mr. RAINEY of Alabama.
 Mr. GAHN with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.
 Mr. HICKEY with Mr. RAINEY of Illinois.
 Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. BRIGGS. I was not, but I wish to state that I would have voted "no" if I had been here.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. RHODES, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS FOR BALANCE OF DAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with business under the Calendar Wednesday rule for the balance of the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to dispense with business under the Calendar Wednesday rule for the balance of the day. Is there objection?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask if it is the purpose of taking up the reclassification bill if consent is given?

Mr. MONDELL. That would be the unfinished business.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I will state that I have no intention or desire to retard the consideration of the reclassification bill. However, I wish to state that I have in mind a great many important amendments which I have prepared, and others that I have not had time to prepare but wish to prepare before consideration of the bill is again taken up under the five-minute rule, and under the circumstances I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the business under Calendar Wednesday rule for the balance of the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with the business under the Calendar Wednesday rule for the balance of the day.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there were 107 ayes and 74 noes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 209, nays 84, answered "present" 3, not voting 136, as follows:

YEAS—209.

Ackerman	Evans	Little	Sanders, Ind.
Anderson	Fairchild	Longworth	Sanders, N. Y.
Andrew, Mass.	Faust	McArthur	Sandlin
Andrews, Nebr.	Favrot	McCormick	Scott, Mich.
Anthony	Fish	McFadden	Scott, Tenn.
Appleby	Focht	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Shaw
Arentz	Fordney	McLaughlin, Pa.	Shreve
Atkeson	Foster	McPherson	Siegel
Barbour	Frear	MacGregor	Sinclair
Beck	French	Magee	Sinnott
Beedy	Frothingham	Maloney	Smith, Idaho.
Begg	Fuller	Mapes	Smithwick
Bird	Funk	Michener	Speaks
Blakeney	Gensman	Miller	Sproul
Boies	Gerner	Mills	Steenerson
Bowers	Glynn	Mondell	Stephens
Brennan	Goodykoontz	Montoya	Stiness
Briggs	Green, Iowa	Moore, Ill.	Strong, Kans.
Britten	Greene, Mass.	Moore, Ohio	Strong, Pa.
Brooks, Ill.	Greene, Vt.	Moore, Va.	Summers, Wash.
Brooks, Pa.	Hadley	Morgan	Swank
Brown, Tenn.	Hardy, Colo.	Mudd	Sweet
Browne, Wis.	Harrison	Murphy	Swing
Burdick	Haugen	Nelson, A. P.	Taylor, N. J.
Burroughs	Hawley	Nelson, J. M.	Taylor, Tenn.
Burtess	Hill	Newton, Minn.	Temple
Burton	Himes	Newton, Mo.	Ten Eyck
Butler	Huddleston	O'Brien	Timberlake
Cable	Hudspeth	O'Connor	Tincher
Carew	Hull	Olpp	Tinkham
Chalmers	Hutchinson	Osborne	Towner
Chandler, Okla.	Ireland	Parker, N. J.	Underhill
Chindblom	Johnson, Wash.	Parker, N. Y.	Vaile
Christopherson	Keller	Patterson, Mo.	Vestal
Clague	Kelly, Pa.	Perkins	Volk
Clarke, N. Y.	King	Pringle	Volstead
Cole, Ohio	Kinkaid	Purnell	Ward, N. Y.
Colton	Kirkpatrick	Radcliffe	Watson
Connell	Kissel	Ramseyer	Webster
Cooper, Ohio	Knutson	Ransley	Wheeler
Cooper, Wis.	Kopp	Reavis	White, Kans.
Coughlin	Kraus	Reece	Williams
Crago	Lampert	Reed, N. Y.	Winslow
Cramton	Lankford	Reed, W. Va.	Woodruff
Curry	Larson, Minn.	Rhodes	Woodyard
Dallinger	Lawrence	Ricketts	Wurzbach
Darrow	Layton	Riordan	Wyant
Denison	Lazaro	Robertson	Yates
Dickinson	Lea, Calif.	Rosenberg	Zihlman
Dowell	Leatherwood	Rogers
Dupré	Lehlbach	Rosenbloom
Echols	Lineberger	Rossdale
Elliot

NAYS—84.

Almon	Black	Bowling	Bulwinkle
Aswell	Bland, Va.	Box	Byrnes, S. C.
Bankhead	Blanton	Brinson	Byrns, Tenn.

Cannon	Goldsborough	Logan	Sanders, Tex.
Cantrill	Graham, Ill.	Lowrey	Sisson
Clouse	Hammer	Lubbing	Stafford
Connally, Tex.	Hardy, Tex.	McClintic	Stearns
Crisp	Hayden	McDuffie	Stevenson
Davis, Tenn.	Bumphreys	McLaughlin, Mich.	Taylor, Ark.
Deal	Jacoway	Mead	Thomas
Dominick	James	Montague	Thompson
Drewry	Jeffers, Ala.	Oldfield	Tillman
Driver	Johnson, Miss.	Padgett	Upshaw
Dunbar	Jones, Pa.	Park, Ga.	Vinson
Dunn	Jones, Tex.	Parks, Ark.	Ward, N. C.
Ellis	Kearns	Pou	Weaver
Fields	Kilne, Pa.	Quin	Wilson
Fulmer	Kunz	Raker	Wingo
Garner	Lanham	Rankin	Wood, Ind.
Garrett, Tenn.	Larsen, Ga.	Rose	Woods, Va.
Gilbert	Lee, Ga.	Rouse	Wright

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Overstreet

Treadway

NOT VOTING—136.

Ansorge	Fairfield	Ketcham	Petersen
Bacharach	Fenn	Kless	Porter
Barkley	Fess	Kincheloe	Rainey, Ala.
Bell	Fisher	Kindred	Rainey, Ill.
Benham	Fitzgerald	Kitchin	Rayburn
Bixler	Flood	Kline, N. Y.	Reber
Bland, Ind.	Free	Knight	Riddick
Bond	Freeman	Kreider	Roach
Braud	Gahn	Langley	Robison
Buchanan	Gallivan	Lee, N. Y.	Rucker
Burke	Garrett, Tex.	Linthicum	Ryan
Campbell, Kans.	Gorman	London	Sabath
Campbell, Pa.	Gould	Luce	Schall
Carter	Graham, Pa.	Lyon	Sears
Chandler, N. Y.	Griest	McKenzie	Shelton
Clark, Fla.	Griffin	McSwain	Slemp
Classon	Hawes	Madden	Smith, Mich.
Cockran	Hays	Mann	Snell
Codd	Herrick	Mansfield	Snyder
Cole, Iowa	Hersey	Martin	Stedman
Collier	Hickey	Merritt	Stoll
Collins	Hicks	Michaelson	Sullivan
Connolly, Pa.	Hoch	Mills	Summers, Tex.
Copley	Hogan	Morin	Tague
Crowther	Houghton	Mott	Taylor, Colo.
Cullen	Hukriede	Nolan	Tilson
Dale	Husted	Norton	Tyson
Davis, Minn.	Jefferis, Nebr.	Ogden	Vare
Demsey	Johnson, Ky.	Oliver	Voigt
Doughton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Paige	Walters
Drane	Kahn	Parrish	Wason
Dyer	Kelley, Mich.	Patterson, N. J.	White, Me.
Edmonds	Kendall	Perlman	Wise
Elston	Kennedy	Peters	Young

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. TREADWAY with Mr. COLLIER.

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. TILSON with Mr. SUMNERS of Texas.

Mr. REBER with Mr. HAWES.

Mr. LUCE with Mr. FISHER.

Mr. FREE with Mr. KINCHELOE.

Mr. HICKS with Mr. RAYBURN.

Mr. SHELTON with Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. SABATH.

Mr. WHITE of Maine with Mr. GRIFFIN.

Mr. CONNOLLY of Pennsylvania with Mr. DOUGHTON.

Mr. DYER with Mr. BARKLEY.

Mr. BIXLER with Mr. WISE.

Mr. ANSORGE with Mr. COLLINS.

Mr. PAIGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present, listening, when his name was called?

Mr. PAIGE. I was not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote. I was called out just before my name was called—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER]. I wish to know whether he is recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is not.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then I desire to withdraw my vote of "yea" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. TREADWAY was called and he answered present.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present, listening, when his name was called?

Mr. COLLIER. I was not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

CLASSIFICATION OF CIVILIAN GOVERNMENT POSITIONS.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8928) to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8928, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOOD of Indiana moves to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That this act may be cited as 'the classification act of 1922.'"

"Sec. 2. That the term 'compensation schedules' means the schedules of employments, grades, and salaries as contained in section 9 of this act."

"The term 'department' means an executive department of the United States Government, a governmental establishment in the executive branch of the United States Government which is not a part of an executive department, the municipal government of the District of Columbia, the Botanic Garden, Library of Congress, Library buildings and grounds, and the Smithsonian Institution."

Mr. LEHLBACH (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman,

I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. This is an amendment to strike out all of the sections of the bill and to insert other matter. The only section of the bill which has been read is section 1. The rule of the House is that opportunity to perfect succeeding sections must be first accorded before a motion to strike out may be entertained. For that reason I make the point of order that the amendment of the gentleman is not in order at the present time.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the motion to strike out is comprised in some degree and in very large proportion of the present bill, and I offer it at this time for the purpose of expediting this business. I think the gentleman from New Jersey will agree that if we are to have a proper consideration of this matter, the scheme should be considered as a whole and not by piecemeal. I think that some of the changes which I suggest in the motion the gentleman from New Jersey would agree to, or at least that the House would. If so, if these amendments are agreed to, the other clauses being inconsistent therewith, that would make the bill in its present form not a desirable one to vote for. I have attempted in this motion to strike out and to insert in order to make a concrete whole and to make the bill what it ought to be, in my opinion. In doing so I submit that the motion is in perfect order. Suppose, instead of using the printed bill that is before the House for consideration and those sections which I think are germane, I had written an entirely new bill, it would be just simply a matter of manual labor. This is simply the difference of using the bill which we now have, and changing it, taking the matter already printed. For the purpose of expediting business and for the purpose of elucidation so that Members may know what they are considering, I think it best to adopt the scheme which I have outlined, and I submit that it is in order.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Indiana is to strike out all of the sections of the bill. Only one section has been read, and that section is now under consideration. The others can not be dealt with until we reach them by reading them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has offered an amendment to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and substitute an entirely new bill. The first section of the bill has been read. It is clear under the precedent that the gentleman can not offer a motion to strike out all of the sections, when only the first section has been read.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Then I understand the Chair to sustain the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Then I move to strike out the section that has just been read and insert in lieu thereof the matter which I have sent to the Clerk's desk, and I give notice now that if my amendment be agreed to I shall at the proper time move to strike out the sections which are inconsistent with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Wood of Indiana moves to strike out section 1 of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That this act may be cited as 'the classification act of 1922.'"

"Sec. 2. That the term 'compensation schedules' means the schedules of employments, grades, and salaries, as contained in section 9 of this act—"

Mr. LEHLBACH (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I understand that section 2 of this bill has not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is now reading the amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. But section 2 of the bill itself has not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment to the first section to strike out the section and substitute the entire bill which he has sent to the desk, giving notice that he will subsequently offer motions to strike out the subsequent paragraphs when read. The Clerk is now reading the amendment offered, which would be an entire substitute.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Do I understand that the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Indiana is to strike out section 1 of the bill and substitute the entire bill that he is offering?

The CHAIRMAN. With notice given in the event the amendment is carried that he will thereafter offer motions to strike out subsequent paragraphs of the pending bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, enough having been read, that the amendment pending is not germane to the section of the bill which it purports to amend.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the Clerk has not read enough of the amendment for a basis to formulate an opinion.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the Chair pleases, section 1 of the bill which has been read is this:

That this act may be cited as "the classification act of 1922."

The various amendments now being read in the amendment are a series of definitions to be used in the act, which clearly are not germane to the section under consideration.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, the evident intention is to delay by the offering of these amendments. As I understand it, it is an amendment to each section of this bill, requiring the reading of the entire bill by the Clerk before consideration of the first section. It is merely delay. If the gentleman is desirous of saving time, as he stated in his first proposition, he will not require the reading of this entire bill, because he can offer his objections and amendments to each section as they are read. I question the gentleman when he stated to the committee that he was trying to save time by now seeking to have the Clerk read the entire bill in the amendment he is offering, and I raise the further objection and make the point of order that the amendment is for the purpose of delay.

The CHAIRMAN. There has not been sufficient of the amendment read to determine whether or not it is germane. Since it is a substitute for the entire pending bill, the fact that there are some definitions in the first paragraph the Chair does not think is sufficient to indicate it is not germane. However, when the Clerk has read into the bill sufficiently to form a basis for his point of order the Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman further.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the Chair will indulge me for a moment, I understood the Chair to say that the purpose of this reading is to see whether the amendment is germane to the bill, it being in the nature of a substitute bill. My point of order is that the amendment is not germane to section 1 of the bill under consideration, which merely establishes a short title for the act, and the amendment now pending must be not only germane to the whole bill but must be germane to the paragraph to which it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment which consists entirely of a new bill is not judged by the ordinary rule in reference to germaneness to the particular section; but the Chair will reserve a ruling on the point of order until the amendment is read further.

Mr. DOWELL. Just a moment, please. This is offered as an amendment to the first section. There is no consideration of any other section of the bill whatever. It is an amendment to the first section, and it must be germane to the identical section or it is not in order at this time, even if it is in order later to some other section of the bill. The first section is under consideration, and it is the only one on which to determine its germaneness.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, this is not a new proposition. It has been before the House a great many times. There is no other way under the rule of arranging a substitute motion than the one properly used by the gentleman from Indiana. If gentleman will turn to page 340 of the Rules and Digest, they will find this reference:

An amendment germane to a bill as a whole, but hardly germane to any one section, may be offered at a proper place with notice of motion to strike out the following sections which they supersede.

That is, of course, directly in point to this case. The question as to whether or not the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is germane to the question as a whole can not be determined, as the Chair very well suggests, until after the whole amendment is read for consideration. That it is not germane particularly to the first paragraph would not be a sufficient reason for excluding it from consideration if it is germane to the bill as a whole. If it is offered as a substitute for the first section with notice that subsequent sections, if the amendment is adopted, will be stricken out, then it is within the rules of procedure of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has well stated the rule, and the Chair will reserve a ruling in reference to germaneness until sufficient of the amendment has been read to determine. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The term "department" means an executive department of the United States Government, a governmental establishment in the executive branch of the United States Government which is not a part of an executive department, the municipal government of the District of Columbia, the Botanic Garden, Library of Congress, Library Buildings and Grounds, and the Smithsonian Institution.

The term "the head of the department" means the officer or group of officers in the department which is not subordinate or responsible to any other officer of the department.

The term "position" means a specific civilian office or employment, whether occupied or vacant, in a department other than offices or employments in the Postal Service and teachers under the board of education of the District of Columbia.

The term "employee" means any person temporarily or permanently in a position.

The term "compensation" means any salary, wage, fee, allowance, or other emolument paid to an employee for service in a position.

SEC. 3. That the compensation schedules shall apply only to civilian employees in the departments within the District of Columbia, and shall not apply to employees in positions the duties of which are to perform or assist in apprentice, helper, or journeyman work in a recognized trade or craft and skilled and semiskilled laborers, except such as are under the direction and control of the custodian of a public building: Provided, That the President may, by Executive order, extend the application of this act to all persons employed in the field services.

The head of each department shall, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, allocate all positions in his department in the District of Columbia to their appropriate grades in the compensation schedules and fix the rate of compensation of each employee thereunder. If the compensation schedules contain no specifications exactly defining the work of a particular position to be allocated, the head of the department shall allocate such position to the grade which in his judgment contains the specification of work most nearly comparable to that pertaining to such position, giving due regard to the mental and physical requirements of the position and to the preparation and training necessary therefor. From and after the effective date of this act no employee shall be paid a salary exceeding the maximum rate or less than the minimum rate prescribed for the grade to which his position is allocated: Provided, That during the probational employment of a new appointee, or during the first six months' service of any employee on new work, the head of a department may, in his discretion, fix the salary of such appointee or employee in the next grade below that to which his position is allocated.

SEC. 4. That the President shall promulgate suitable rules and regulations for carrying this act into effect, and he is authorized to supplement the compensation schedules from time to time as may be necessary, to the end that they shall be current and readily applicable to all positions covered by this act and to the further end that all rates of compensation shall be fixed upon the basis of equal pay for like or similar services and of just and reasonable compensation for all employments: Provided, That this shall not be construed to authorize the President to increase or to decrease the number of grades specified in the compensation schedules, or to alter or modify the salaries or the salary ranges pertaining thereto.

SEC. 5. That the rates of compensation of all employees to whom the compensation schedules are made inapplicable by section 3 hereof shall be fixed and readjusted from time to time by Executive order.

SEC. 6. That, subject to such rules and regulations as the President may from time to time prescribe, an employee may be transferred from a position in one grade to a vacant position within the same grade at the same rate of compensation, or promoted to a vacant position in a higher grade at a higher rate of compensation, any provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to authorize or permit the transfer of an employee of the United States to a position under the municipal government of the District of Columbia, or an employee of the municipal government of the District of Columbia to a position under the United States.

SEC. 7. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to make permanent any temporary appointments under existing law.

SEC. 8. That the Bureau of Efficiency shall aid the President, as he may request, in the preparation of amendments and supplements to the compensation schedules, in preparing the rules and regulations for carrying this act into effect and in the enforcement of such rules and regulations. Said Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate and report to the President upon all matters touching the enforcement and effects of such rules and regulations, and it shall publish from time to time, as the President may determine, and with his approval such precedents, rulings, and statements as may be necessary to the preservation of uniformity and equality of pay among employees of different departments and services. It shall make annually a report to the President, for transmission to Congress, setting forth all action taken, the rules and regulations and exceptions thereto in force, and the practical effects thereof, and making recommendations for the more effectual accomplishment of the purposes of this act.

Sec. 9. That the compensation schedules be as follows:

Sec. 10. That the head of each department is authorized to expend during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, from any money appropriated for personal services in such department, such sums as may be required to pay the rates of compensation fixed in accordance with this act; and the President shall from time to time submit to Congress estimates of such additional amounts as may be necessary during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for this purpose: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect the limitations placed by existing law upon the total number of persons to be employed in any department or in any branch thereof.

Sec. 11. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1922.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if we can not agree on some time for a discussion of this, not to interfere with the 5-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think the committee would be interested in knowing the changes that have been made by this proposal, and I think it well it should be presented now and it can not be in five minutes, and I desire to see if we can not agree upon some time for discussion.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Has the full amendment been read?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Of course it is impossible to follow the reading, absorb it, and understand every provision and the full import of every word in it. Of course the gentleman is entitled and will be accorded all the time he wishes to discuss his amendment, but the proposition is a new bill, not a soul has read it or seen it, there are no copies present that would be conducive to discussion on the other side, so we will let the discussion run along.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to any time being used except the time allotted under the rule. This is entirely a new bill, as was stated by the chairman. No one has had any opportunity to investigate it, and if the gentleman desires he has an opportunity to present an amendment to each section of the bill as read.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think that the very reason he gives is a good reason for giving the gentleman from Indiana a fair and reasonable time to let the House know what is in his amendment?

Mr. DOWELL. He will have the opportunity to present his amendments to the sections when the sections are read.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That can not be done.

Mr. DOWELL. It can certainly be done. It can not be done in the other way, I will say to the gentleman, because I intend to object.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order to the bill offered as a substitute in the shape of amendment.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose that this substitute bill, as I understand it, were adopted, then there would be no way whereby an amendment to this bill could be acted upon, would there?

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute bill?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the adoption or rejection of this proposed amendment by way of substitute, of course an amendment may be offered as a substitute.

Mr. BEGG. An amendment may be offered as a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment may be offered as a substitute in the ordinary way that substitutes are offered to an amendment. If the amendment were adopted—

Mr. BEGG. I appreciate that this question I am about to ask is not strictly a parliamentary one, yet it does have some phases of such a question. How are we to be in a position to offer an amendment when we have not the bill and can not get a copy of it?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the rules of the House permit any amendment to be offered that is germane. That there are some difficulties in knowing the nature of an amendment does not change the rules.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think anybody ought to have any disposition to railroad either one of these bills through the House. I take it that there are the fewest number of men who understand the provisions in either one of the bills. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] has a bill which he has thought out and presented, and this is the only opportunity to present it, and I think the Members of the House ought to be willing to give him a reasonable time to present the features and provisions of his bill to the House. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may have 30 minutes in which to explain his bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may have 30 minutes in which to explain his bill. Is there objection?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I regret exceedingly that any gentleman would have a desire to attempt to keep the greatest possible amount of information from this House with reference to this measure, which to my mind is the most important measure with which we will have to deal, during the present session at least.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Can not the gentleman offer his amendment to any section or strike out a section that is read in the ordinary way?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. You can not do it, I will say to the gentleman, because of the fact that we would have a conglomeration that nobody would understand, and if I could have the time to present the subject in a concrete way, then you would understand the single amendments at the time they were offered. I will try to explain, hamstrung as I am by being compelled to offer these separate amendments, when the time comes, but the gentleman ought to be at least interested in having information on this subject himself, and I would attempt to give it to him had I the opportunity.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, it was impossible for me to follow the reading by the clerk, and my attention was distracted from time to time. If I am taking the time of the gentleman from Indiana, I will do my best to secure him ample time. I would like to know whether his bill, which he is substituting for the bill under consideration, contains a compensation schedule?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. I will say to the gentleman this: I am not substituting my bill and have not attempted to substitute it, except for a very few provisions of it. It is a misfortune that this proposal of mine is not placed in form so that you can consider it. That is the reason I thought that I could explain it in a short time. The fact is that three-fourths of the matter read by the clerk in this proposal is the Lehlbach bill. I have taken that bill and have prepared an amendment which I think will very materially improve the measure, and it is in accord, as I think, with the spirit of economy that we are, professedly, at least, interested in. If this proposal of mine were adopted, this bill would be so simplified that a way-faring man could understand it, and it will not take an expert to do it. It is simplified so as to be entirely understandable. If you will look at the pages as I turn them over, you will see that all of page 9, all of pages 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26 are stricken out.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield? There is no use enumerating the number of pages. The classification in the bill under consideration has been stricken out. As a substitute therefor, does the gentleman's bill provide that the classification shall be made, substantially, by the Bureau of Efficiency?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It does.

Mr. LEHLBACH. At the proper time, under my reservation, I shall make the point of order that that is not germane, because in the bill under consideration Congress classifies the services. Under the bill here it delegates it to an irresponsible agency.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, I do not know whether I fully understand what the gentleman said, but if he will take and read he will see that it strikes out the descriptions of the grades and jobs in this bill, and it also provides for the schedules and the manner in which the same shall be created.

I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to this proposition. It is the amendment offered on page 3, and is a substitute practically for section 4 of the original bill:

If the compensation schedules contain no specifications exactly defining the particular positions to be allocated, the head of the department allocating—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman having opportunity to present his amendments at the proper time, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in my experience in this House I have never known an occasion when a Member was prevented from proceeding who was in good faith offering an amendment in the way that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] has just offered his amendment, namely, as I understand it, after the first section was read, offering to strike out and submitting a substitute and giving notice that a further substitute would be offered later on, and where he has confined himself to the amendment and was acting in good faith. I say this is the first time in my experience where a gentleman, under those circumstances, has been prevented from doing that. It is not the attitude of the gentleman that has caused that. Progress can not be made that way. I presume that the gentleman is a friend of the amendment that is pending. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and four Members are present—a quorum.

Mr. LEHLBACH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New Jersey rise?

Mr. LEHLBACH. To oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the proposition before us, that has been offered by way of amendment to the first paragraph of this bill, is an entirely new classification bill, with entirely different methods of classification, a different plan underlying, in the first place, the way in which the classification shall be made, by whom it shall be made, and the application of the salary ranges. It contains undoubtedly modifications of salary ranges to be paid for the positions requiring a certain character of work and qualification. I may say that if these changes in the bill that have been read, that we are asked to vote on, "sight unseen," are to prevail and are like the bill introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] earlier in this session, they would mean, in many instances, drastic increases in salary over those provided for in the bill now under consideration, which was reported by the committee.

Furthermore, as near as I can tell, the amendment provides that the classifying and grading of the personnel of the civil service of this Government shall not be done in the bill itself, as provided for in the original bill by Congress, and subject to be modified by Congress and controlled by Congress, but is to be made by the Bureau of Efficiency, without any opportunity for review, modification, or control by Congress. I do not know what other provisions are in the amendment; I do not know, excepting the broad distinctions between the bill and the amendment. I do not know what sweeping powers are conferred upon a bureau of the Government, which without reading and without knowing what we are doing we are supposed to shear ourselves of.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How are we to know unless the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] shall be given opportunity to explain his bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am not objecting personally to his doing that, and I have asked unanimous consent that 10 minutes more time be given him, and I have been ready to ask for more time to be given him later.

But when I was interrupted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] I was going to make this proposition: Let this amendment be considered pending; let it be printed. We shall not finish this bill this afternoon. Let this amendment be considered pending, and let it be considered germane to whatever section of the bill may be under consideration when the bill again comes up. Let it be considered pending, so that we can act upon it intelligently and compare the fundamental principles of classification, the comparative schedules of salaries, the method of making the classification and reviewing and revising allocations under the classification, so that we may compare them and study them and know what they are, and know to what extent we are surrendering the power of Congress to control the pay rolls of the Government. Let that be done. The amendment will be germane, under the ruling of the Chair, to any section of this bill. When it is printed and when we have had it in our hands and know what it contains, then we can intelligently consider whether it ought to be considered as a substitute for this bill or not.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. From what source would the Bureau of Efficiency secure reliable information upon which to make the classification?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am not discussing the merits of giving this function to the Bureau of Efficiency, and I do not want to be diverted from the proposition that I am now making to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood], namely, to let this amendment be considered pending; let it be considered germane to whatever section of the bill is under consideration when we take the bill up again after to-day; let it be printed; and let us have it before us. The legislative proposition, the parliamentary proposition is this: Should this amendment be adopted, under parliamentary law no section of it, no provision of it, is subject to further amendment by this committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. We would have to rise and report a bill that we have not read, with which the chairman of the committee having charge of the legislation can not be furnished a copy, without any amendment whatever, without any further revision, and without any opportunity to amend.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to assure the gentleman that I have no purpose other than the purpose of good legislation here, and I do not want to stop the consideration of this measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New Jersey be extended five minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from New Jersey to answer the question of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Wisconsin, who has obtained the floor under a pro forma amendment, can not yield any part of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. A Member obtaining time under the five-minute rule can not yield time.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to say that I have not yielded time to the gentleman from New Jersey only to answer a question which was propounded by the gentleman from Indiana. I am within my rights, and I do not need to be instructed by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I want to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin the same question that I asked the gentleman from Indiana. Suppose he does take all the time that he wants and from his viewpoint describes in general terms what the substitute bill does. We have not the bill before us, we do not know what language it is couched in, we do not know whether the clauses and phrases will have the effect which he thinks they have, and why should we be asked to consider and adopt a bill as a whole which after adoption will not be subject to amendment?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think the gentleman will get along with me all right. I do not want to take up the time, but I do want Members to understand the measure, and in order that they may understand it I have introduced the whole amendment at this time because it is a complete proposition. I think it will conserve the best interests of this body and save time if this matter could be printed and copies furnished each Member so that he could have it to-morrow. I am willing to agree to any proposition to expedite the business. But here is a thing I do not want to agree to: Suppose we go on and consider this measure under the five-minute rule, read section by section, and each section open to some amendment. Amendments might be made which would be entirely inconsistent with the proposition I have made.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that the gentleman from Indiana is not discussing the motion.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield for the purpose.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment I have read be printed as a separate document for the use of Members, to be at their disposal to-morrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the amendment be printed as a separate document.

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, we do not know what is in the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, and since some of us think that in all probability it will make the bill better, because it makes it shorter, why not lay aside the discussion of this bill until that is done?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think that would be the best thing to do.

Mr. RAYBURN. It is offered to the first section, but before we vote for it or any other amendment we ought to have the matter offered as a substitute before us. It would save a great deal of time, because the discussion that goes on this afternoon would be of no purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in response to the inquiry I will state that I just overheard a colloquy between the gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Indiana, and the gentleman from New Jersey states that it is his desire that we go on with the consideration of the original bill under the five-minute rule. How long would the gentleman suggest that we continue the consideration of the bill to-day?

Mr. LEHLBACH. We would then consider the amendment as in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long would the gentleman want to go on this afternoon?

Mr. LEHLBACH. For the usual time.

Mr. DOWELL. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Indiana desire to withdraw his amendment from consideration at this time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I want to have it pending.

Mr. DOWELL. And the unanimous-consent request is that it be passed and not considered at this time.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The proposition is to have the amendment printed and pending.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to make a motion that the committee do now rise?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor. It would be if he should yield for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish to be presumptuous, but I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey to make a unanimous-consent request along the line that he has stated.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana may be considered as pending; that it shall be in order when the committee again takes up the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8928), no matter at what stage of the bill, and with the understanding that when we meet in the House unanimous consent will be asked to have the amendment printed for the use of Members; that in the meantime the committee proceed with the consideration of the bill section by section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana be considered as pending and in order at any point during the consideration of the bill by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. DOWELL. That would be subject to points of order.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that such a request can not lie. If we pass any section of this bill and amend it, the only way that section can be returned to or changed is by unanimous consent. The unanimous consent request did not include that. It is to hold in order an amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana at any point in the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. That is not the question.

Mr. BEGG. Suppose that every section in the bill except the last has been disposed of and then you come along to the last section and take the amendment that remodels and amends the whole bill already passed upon. I make the point of order that such a request can not be made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard upon the point of order. I believe the precedents will bear me out that it is within the privilege of a Member at any time after the first section has been read, or after all of the sections of the bill pending for consideration in the Committee of the Whole have been read, to offer a substitute. I was out of the Chamber at luncheon when the discussion took place in respect to this matter previously, and I am not apprised of what occurred at that time. The gentleman from Indiana, as I understand, as soon as the first section was read, offered his bill as a substitute, giving notice that when the other sections had been read he would move to strike them out. I think that practice is supported by good parliamentary procedure. He could have waited until the entire bill had been considered by sections and then offered his amendment as an entirely new proposal, as a substitute.

What is the unanimous-consent agreement which the gentleman from Ohio says is not in order? It is that we proceed with the consideration of this bill. Suppose we have considered two or three sections, and that then the gentleman from Indiana rises and moves to strike out all of the sections that have been submitted and offers his substitute, giving notice at that time that when the other sections are read he will move to strike those out, and in that way test the sentiment of the committee. I think he would be within his rights to do that. I do not think there is any serious parliamentary tangle that would arise by reason of the adoption of the unanimous-consent request submitted by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman a question. Suppose the unanimous-consent agreement should be agreed to and that the committee should proceed and perfect eight or nine sections of the bill or all of the remaining sections of the bill. Does the gentleman think that it would then be proper under the unanimous-consent agreement to return to the first section, entertain a motion to strike out that section, and consider this amendment; and, assuming that the amendment were adopted, it would then be proper to take up serially each section which has been perfected, and strike it out?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to either of the alternative motions which are within the range of submission by the gentleman from Indiana. If he had desired, under well-established practice he could have waited until all of the sections of the bill had been read and perfected, and when the last section had been read and no other perfecting amendment was offered he could then rise and offer as a substitute for the bill the measure which he has sent to the Clerk's desk. I take it there is no question about that. This bill, as I understand, is well within the range of substitutes. The Chair would have to hold that it was within his province to offer the bill as a substitute for that which has been perfected. Perhaps that is the better practice. Perhaps it is better to allow the committee to perfect all of the sections of the bill before they vote on a substitute, so that opportunity may be had to perfect the original bill. Then the committee could determine once and for all whether it wished to accept a substantive substitute or the original bill as it has been perfected. There is one notable precedent which I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] argued or decided, where as soon as the first section of the bill had been read a Member rose and offered a substitute, giving notice that when the other succeeding sections were reached he would move to strike them out, and that practice was confirmed. With that exposition I think the Chair will see that the proposal of the gentleman from New Jersey is within the rules of procedure in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the floor under my original five-minute reservation and ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Has the Chair decided the point of order as to whether or not the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, this substitute, is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. That question has not been presented. The point of order is under reservation by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. STEENERSON. I was going to say that it has been the uniform rule heretofore that it is only in order after the whole bill has been considered section by section. I have the authorities here.

The CHAIRMAN. The question as to whether or not it was in order after the first paragraph had been read has been decided by the Chair. The Chair held that it was proper to offer a germane amendment after the first section had been read, if the germane amendment proposed to strike out the first section and substitute an entire bill, with notice that thereafter motions would be addressed to each section as read, that it be stricken out.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think that is contrary to the rule. I think you can not offer a substitute for a bill and strike out all after the enacting clause until the bill has been perfected and read. Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, section 4933, is directly in point.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair still has the question under consideration, let me call his attention to page 400 of volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents, where the Speaker pro tempore, Hon. James D. Richardson, of Tennessee, presiding, held that a substitute would be in order after the reading of the bill by sections for amendment, but not before.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; and that is the same ruling as is to be found in volume 3, paragraph 4933, Hinds' Precedents.

The CHAIRMAN. Hinds' Precedents, section 5795, reads as follows:

Sec. 5795. When it is proposed to offer a single substitute for several paragraphs of a bill which is being considered by paragraphs, the substitute may be moved to the first paragraph with notice that if it be agreed to motions will be made to strike out the remaining paragraphs.

Sec. 5796. An instance wherein a substitute text for a bill was offered as a substitute for the first section and agreed to, the remaining sections being stricken out afterwards.

Mr. STEENERSON. Manifestly this is not a motion to substitute for the section, but for the whole bill, which can not be offered as a substitute for section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is offered to section 1, has been read as a substitute for section 1, being an entire bill, with notice that motions will be made to strike out the other sections.

Mr. STEENERSON. Has the Chair examined the authority cited, volume 4, section 4933, Hinds' Precedents? It is directly in point that you can not offer a substitute until the bill has been perfected under the five-minute rule.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, with regard to the parliamentary situation as to whether under the unanimous-consent request it would be possible to return to the various sections of the bill which have been read under the section, when the consideration of the substitute comes up at a subsequent session, I would say that a unanimous-consent request, the purpose of which is perfectly clear, must be considered to be made with the intent and purpose which it has in mind, in order that it may be made effective and that return may be had to each paragraph serially, to be stricken out. I think there is no parliamentary difficulty with the request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Ohio is overruled. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] be in order at any time during the consideration of the bill and that the present pending bill be read for amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Be in order at any time after this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Be in order on any subsequent legislative day. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I did not understand just what the proposition was.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Lehlbach] asks unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, which is an amendment to strike out the first paragraph and insert an entirely new bill, be in order at any subsequent legislative day at any point at which it is offered, and that it shall further be in order, if the amendment is agreed to, to strike out the perfecting paragraphs. Is there objection?

Mr. DOWELL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wyoming rise?

Mr. MONDELL. To submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the amendment been presented in writing?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been offered, read by the Clerk, and 10 minutes' debate has been had on the amendment—5 minutes for and 5 minutes against.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken on the amendment I make the point of order, which I have heretofore reserved, that the amendment is not germane. I will hold the point of order in abeyance.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact I have had no opportunity to present this matter, and, of course, gentlemen would not be justified in voting in favor of my amendment without some consideration, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have not had an opportunity to consider it at all.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly evident there are at least a few Members of the House who seem desirous of, I was about to say, "railroading" the pending bill through this House. Now, I dare say there are not 25 Members of this House who are entirely familiar with all of the provisions of the pending bill. I dare say there are very few Members who are not members of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service who are fully familiar with the so-called Lehlbach bill. Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] has presented an amendment as a substitute for the bill, with which I am not familiar, except as read from the Clerk's desk, and I for one am unwilling to vote for it without having read it, just as I am unwilling to vote for this Lehlbach bill until I am given some further information in regard to it. I am unwilling to vote for it, as some have said it is going to increase the expenditures of this Government more than $8,000,000 and will not equalize the salaries of the smaller employees, but will greatly increase the salaries of many of those who now draw high salaries from the Government.

Now, I submit, gentlemen, in all fairness, that the House ought to be given an opportunity to judge between these two bills and to register its vote in an intelligent manner. Gentlemen, while they have the right to do it, ought not to deny to other Members of this House the opportunity to form an intelligent and competent opinion in regard to these two bills—

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the pending matter. He is attempting to lecture Members of this House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would not seek to lecture the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee will proceed in order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Some may be able to know all about a measure without even reading it or hearing it discussed. Others prefer to have a little light before they cast their vote. The gentleman from Iowa seems to have all the information he wants, and what I am complaining of is that the gentleman from Iowa is not willing to give other Members of the House an opportunity to get some information which they desire before they are called upon to vote upon this bill. [Applause.] Now, I submit, gentlemen of the committee, there ought not to be any disposition to rush this matter through. We are passing legislation here not for to-day or for to-morrow but for years to come. We are undertaking at this time to fix salaries for all the employees here in the District, and it is a matter that ought not to be passed upon in an hour or two. We ought to consider it for several days, if necessary, in order that we may know exactly what we are doing. I may be for this Lehlbach bill, if I am given opportunity to know what is in it, but it was only reported from the committee three or four days ago, and I have not had an opportunity to read it or even to hear the general debate, because I have been serving on hearings before the Appropriations Committee, and I am appealing now in the spirit of fairness. Give the gentleman from Indiana an opportunity to present his bill, upon which he has put much time and to which he has given much thought. I wish to repeat, I do not know whether I am for the Wood bill or the Lehlbach bill. I do not know whether I will vote for either one of those propositions, but I want, before I am called upon to cast my vote under my oath, to have an opportunity to know just what is in those two bills. Now, there is objection to the gentleman from Indiana withdrawing his amendment. It is proposed to vote it down without opportunity for explanation. Later on, at the conclusion of the consideration of this bill, when he again offers it as a substitute, the point of order will be made that it has already been rejected, and the House will have no opportunity to intelligently pass upon it. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition. I do not quite understand the logic of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns]. He says he is not familiar with this bill. It has been reported from the committee more than two weeks and notice of its consideration was given nearly a week ago. The gentleman, as I understand it, is not willing to consider this bill, and if I follow the logic of his remarks, he would prefer to consider a bill that never has been before the House, that nobody knows anything about except as it has been read here to-day.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no objection in the world to considering this bill. What I am pleading for is the opportunity for the gentleman from Indiana to present his bill and let the House pass upon both bills and accept one or the other, as it prefers.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Tennessee has had legislation before this House many times, and the gentleman from Tennessee never arrived at a condition of mind where he was willing to have another bill presented alongside of his and given a privileged status with the idea of comparing the two. It is a practice that, so far as I know, has never been indulged in in this House. The gentleman from Indiana will have an opportunity, as all other gentlemen will have, to present amendments to this bill. The gentleman from Tennessee said something about "railroading." What does he mean by "railroading"? This bill was reported two weeks ago—

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I mean this, if the gentleman will permit me to tell him, as the gentleman was out of the Chamber temporarily. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] offered his amendment, constituting an entire bill, and asked the privilege of being permitted to discuss it for a few minutes. There was objection raised, and he was confined to five minutes to discuss the bill, of 15 or 20 pages.

Mr. MONDELL. Very naturally the House did not want to go from the discussion of a measure that it had before it, that had been carefully considered by the committee, and which the House was proposing to consider section by section, and take up instead of that a measure that had never been considered by a committee, give several days, perhaps, to the consideration of that measure, finally, possibly, only to return to the measure that had been considered by the committee. Now, all that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Lehlbach] and his committee propose to do is to proceed with the consideration of this bill in an orderly way under the rules of the House. There is no disposition on the part of anybody to hurry the passage of this bill; no disposition to curtail discussion of each and every provision in it. Personally, I hope there will be some amendments made to the bill. The bill is entitled to consideration. There have been before the Congress measures of this kind for more than a year, and any Member who is not fairly familiar with this legislation has never given consideration to the question of reclassification. A bill very similar to this was before the House during the entire last session of the last Congress. This bill has been before the House for some time, and, as I say, was reported more than two weeks ago. We are proposing to take it up in an orderly way and proceed to its consideration. The gentleman from Indiana will have an opportunity as the sections are reached to offer his amendments, and if they appeal to the judgment of the committee they will be adopted, and if they do not other amendments that appeal to the judgment of the House may be adopted. We are proceeding in the discussion and consideration of this measure under the rules of the House, and I hope we will take plenty of time in the consideration of the bill. But let us do it in an orderly way. [Applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that I had heretofore reserved, that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] is not in order. This bill is a bill to classify by Congress in the bill itself the civil service personnel of the Federal Government within the District of Columbia. The purpose of his bill, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana, a copy of which I or no one else, so far as I know, has seen, is to have the classification of that personnel not made by this legislation but to delegate it to the committee on efficiency. That is an entirely different proposition, not germane, and therefore not in order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will state to the gentleman that I misunderstood his question at the time he propounded it to me, with reference to what this proposed amendment of mine did. The bill proposed by the gentleman is entitled a reclassification bill, reclassifying the civil service of the United States employees. At the time this measure was introduced I introduced a measure which provided for reclassification. The proposal that I am introducing now by way of amendment is a reclassification bill, and I wish to state that the proposal I make for reclassification in this substitute is the identical reclassification that was included in the measure that I introduced in this House. Perhaps the gentlemen are familiar with it. I desire to state at this time, however, that in sending up my amendment to the Chair I omitted to send up the schedules of the reclassification, fixing the various classifications, and I ask unanimous consent, in order that it may be complete, that the schedules which were omitted in the reading be included.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I was unable to follow and know—

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I stated this: That at the time the Clerk read the amendment, when it came to page 8, what would be section 9, the various classifications provided in my original bill should have been read at that point, but they were not read because of the fact that I inadvertently failed to send them up, and in order that the amendment may be complete I ask unanimous consent that they be considered; not take the time to read them, but to consider them as having been read and inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to be permitted to modify his amendment as indicated.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, the question now is to consider an amendment which has been read by the Clerk, but a copy of which neither the chairman of the committee in control of legislation nor any other Member of this body has had opportunity to peruse. It is now further asked that that amendment, which is apparently out of order, be now further modified by some provision which the Clerk is not even to read. I am constrained to object.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to set the gentleman right. I understood that the gentleman, in fairness, desires—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has objected.

Mr. LEHLBACH. In view of the fact that this amendment is about to be disposed of, I do not see the wisdom of discussing it further, except to say that I understand it is to be a classification of the entire personnel of the Federal employees in the District of Columbia, to be read and voted on, and I feel constrained in the interest of orderly procedure to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey objects. Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Then I desire to speak with reference to the point of order. I understand a point of order is raised here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman. The Chair would be glad if the gentleman would indicate in a general way how his proposed substitute differs from the pending bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The proposed substitute differs from the proposal of the gentleman from New Jersey only in a few particulars which are vital. It is a reclassification, just as complete as that proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey. My proposal does away with the new bureau that has been provided for in this bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. There is no use in misstating the provisions of the bill under consideration in the House. There is no bureau provided in the bill before the Members of the House.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Then the gentleman has been most unfortunate in using his language, for he does provide for a wage board, and out of the wage board comes the bureau, just as in the packers' bill we provide for the control of that law under the Department of Agriculture, and out of it came a bureau.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question was asked wherein the proposal in my amendment differs from the bill offered by the gentleman from the State of New Jersey. There is no difference so far as they are both complete measures of reclassification, both of them providing for a reclassification of the civil service of the Federal Government in the District of Columbia. The gentleman's measure provides where certain technical employees may be classified and their salaries provided by a wage board, which is not provided in the amendment. The amendment proposed by me takes and gives definitions of jobs or defines the amount of work for which a certain amount of salary shall be received. It does not provide positions, but it does provide pay for men doing work to be done, and that is what is set out in this classification schedule to which I have called the attention of the Chair.

It differs from the present bill in this further particular, that instead of having the matter administered, so far as efficiency is concerned, through the Civil Service Commission and through the Budget Bureau, it provides that the efficiency of the employees shall, under the order of the President, be determined by the Bureau of Efficiency.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care about the details; just a general statement for the purpose of ruling on the point of order.

The Chair is ready to rule. The bill under consideration is a bill for the reclassification of employees, and provides for certain machinery to bring this about. The bill offered as a substitute is for a reclassification of Federal employees in a somewhat different way, to be sure, but all amendments differ.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, may I at this point call to the attention of the Chair, before he proceeds further with the ruling, the fact that in the bill under consideration the classification is made by the bill itself, and is enacted by Congress, if the bill passes. In the substitute the reclassification is not made by Congress, but is delegated to a bureau.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is entirely wrong, and if he would be as fair as he pretends to be and would let this schedule that I have referred to be included in the amendment—

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is not before the committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It would be in the amendment if the gentleman did not object.

The CHAIRMAN. While a different method of procedure is provided by the proposed amendment, the Chair is inclined to think that it is germane as a substitute. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps I am a little in advance, but if this amendment that has just been voted down as a substitute were to-morrow offered in a somewhat changed form again, would it be in order, notwithstanding the action of the committee at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. I think we had better await until that question arises.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That the term "compensation schedules" means the schedules of positions, grades, and salaries, as contained in section 12 of this act. The term "department" means an executive department of the United States Government, a governmental establishment in the executive branch of the United States Government which is not a part of an executive department, the municipal government of the District of Columbia, the Botanic Garden, Library of Congress, Library buildings and grounds, and the Smithsonian Institution.

The term "the head of the department" means the officer or group of officers in the department which is not subordinate or responsible to any other officer of the department.

The term "position" means a specific civilian office or employment, whether occupied or vacant, in a department other than offices or employments in the Postal Service and teachers under the board of education of the District of Columbia.

The term "employee" means any person temporarily or permanently in a position.

The term "service" means the broadest division of related offices and employments.

The term "grade" means a subdivision of a service including one or more positions for which approximately the same qualifications, duties, and compensation are prescribed, the distinction between grades being based upon differences in the importance, difficulty, responsibility, and value of the work.

The term "compensation" means any salary, wage, fee, allowance, or other emolument paid to an employee for service in a position.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: I move to strike out all of lines 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOOD of Indiana moves to amend, on page 2, by striking out all of lines 17 to 24, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen will recur to this portion of the bill that I move to strike out they will find that it is a definition of the term "service" and the term "grade." The term "grade" means a subdivision of service in one or more positions in which approximately the same duties and compensations are prescribed, the distinction between grades being based upon differences in the importance, difficulties, responsibilities, and value of the work.

I will state to the gentleman that in my opinion this is going to be one of the greatest avenues for cheating and absolutely defeating the purpose of a classification that can possibly be invented. What ought to be the rule with reference to employments in the civil service is to give opportunity to men to promote themselves by reason of their own merit, by reason of the work that they perform themselves, and not through a definition. One of the greatest difficulties in all the experience had in classification and reclassification, not only by the States but by the municipalities all around over the country, is fixing positions by definition and not by what they do. You can take and define a certain position and give it a definition, and a man is placed in that position by reason of the definition, whether he is qualified or not. What ought to be done, if you please, is to describe the character of work that a man is expected to do, for which character of work he receives a certain pay.

That is not in this bill. Further on in the consideration of the bill I shall offer an amendment that does that very thing. If you enact this as it is now we shall continue to have, as we have now, a discrimination without justification, men taken and placed by reason of definitions in positions and not through merit; so that this species of subterfuge—and it is a subterfuge—should be done away with at the very threshold of the consideration of this bill. If we are to pay men and women for work done we should define the amount of work they are to do for the amount of pay that they receive.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the argument which the gentleman from Indiana has made is not in support of his amendment; it is an argument in opposition to any reclassification of employees. In the gentleman's own bill, H. R. 8291, he provides for exactly what we are doing; he divides the service into grades and we divide the various services into grades, and these definitions are perfectly intelligible and accurate. The gentleman is not seeking to improve the definitions. Of course, if you are going to use technical terms in legislation, you must give a definition to those terms as they are used in the bill in order that there may be no ambiguity, and that is all this does. I think that the definitions in the bill are proper and the gentleman is not attacking them. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOOD of Indiana) there were 19 ayes and 22 noes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. LEHLBACH and Mr. WOOD of Indiana.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 25 ayes and 41 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On page 2, strike out lines 13 and 14.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. WINGO. That it is out of order for the gentleman from Ohio to offer an amendment when there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-three Members present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ansorge	Fitzgerald	Lampert	Robertson
Bacharach	Flood	Langley	Rogers
Bell	Focht	Larson, Minn.	Rosenbloom
Bird	Fordney	Lee, N. Y.	Rucker
Bixler	Frear	Linthicum	Ryan
Bland, Ind.	Free	Longworth	Sabath
Bond	Freeman	Luhning	Sanders, N. Y.
Brand	French	Lyon	Schall
Brennan	Gahn	McArthur	Sears
Buchanan	Gallivan	McKenzie	Shelton
Burke	Garrett, Tex.	Madden	Snell
Campbell, Pa.	Gorman	Magee	Snyder
Carter	Gould	Mann	Stedman
Chandler, N. Y.	Graham, Ill.	Mansfield	Steenerson
Chandler, Okla.	Graham, Pa.	Michaelson	Stiness
Cockran	Green, Iowa	Mills	Stoll
Codd	Griest	Moore, Ind.	Sullivan
Collier	Griffin	Morin	Sweet
Connolly, Pa.	Hardy, Colo.	Mott	Tague
Cooper, Ohio	Hays	Mudd	Taylor, Ark.
Copley	Herrick	Newton, Mo.	Taylor, Colo.
Cullen	Hicks	Nolan	Ten Eyck
Dale	Hill	Oliver	Tillman
Davis, Minn.	Hoch	Osborne	Tilson
Dempsey	Houghton	Parker, N. Y.	Timberlake
Denison	Hukriede	Parrish	Tincher
Doughton	Husted	Patterson, N. J.	Towner
Drane	Jefferis, Nebr.	Periman	Tyson
Dunn	Johnson, Ky.	Peters	Vare
Dyer	Kahn	Porter	Voigt
Edmonds	Kennedy	Pou	Ward, N. C.
Elston	Kless	Pringley	Wason
Fairfield	Kindred	Rainey, Ala.	White, Me.
Faust	Kitchin	Rainey, Ill.	Williams
Fenn	Klecza	Riddick	Wise
Fess	Knight	Riordan	Wright
Fish	Kreider	Roach

The committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. WALSH] having resumed the chair, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 8928, and finding itself without a quorum, the roll was called, when 285 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he handed in a list of the absentees for printing in the Record and the Journal.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: Page 2, strike out lines 13 and 14.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this is a reclassification bill, seeking to classify the persons holding Government positions and to adjust the salaries of those who are receiving discriminatory salaries for like positions. The lines that I have moved to strike out of this particular paragraph are the lines that exclude the public-school teachers from the benefits of this bill. I should like to propound a question seriously to every member of the committee. If this measure is a good thing for the clerical force, for the administrative force, for the police department, for the fire department, for the custodians of the various buildings and institutions in those buildings, why is it not a good thing for the public-school teachers, who have the custody of the children of the town during the period from 6 years of age until they have completed their schooling? I can see no serious objection to putting this measure through, including the teachers, and I say to you that if you adopt my amendment you will have included the school-teachers in the benefits of the bill. When the proper time comes for the classification, I shall offer another amendment to put in the words "teachers, supervisor, superintendent" in the proper classification, but the only reason why you should not do it is because it will put the school-teachers on a par with the keepers of museums, with the keepers of the Rock Creek Park Zoo, and it will put them on a par, as far as salaries are concerned, with the garbage cleaners and sweepers in the market place and in the morgue. It will put them on a par in salaries with the clerks in the offices of the various departments in Washington, and it will put the supervising force of the public schools on a par with the heads of departments that may have 10 or 20 people under them. That is one reason why you should not do it. It will increase the salaries of the public-school teachers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment, but does the gentleman wish to put school-teachers down on a par with street cleaners, or does the gentleman wish to raise their salaries?

Mr. BEGG. The school-teachers, as far as salaries are concerned, would be delighted to be put on a par with some of these people I have mentioned.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Are they underpaid?

Mr. BEGG. They are underpaid 100 per cent, else the garbage haulers are overpaid 100 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That is information to me. I did not know that. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BEGG. I simply want to cast my vote along the line of justice. There is nothing in the world that will make me give more preference to a stenographer in some man's office than I would to a teacher in a school. Who gives the most serious consideration to the job? I do not mean to say anything derogatory to the office man or to the office girl, and I do not want my remarks to be construed in that way, but they close their office desks at 4.30 o'clock and go home without a care, while there is not a school-teacher in the city who can do that thing. They must take their work home with them. They must work at night. They must prepare their next day's lessons for the boys and girls. They must work eternally on the job, and yet these proposed salary schedules, as I said yesterday, for these clerks range from $1,800 to $7,200 for some class of Government employees whose duties are no more onerous than those of teachers who receive but $1,200 to $1,440. In the high school they get as high as $2,240 for class B, and in class A $2,500. I want to know again where is the justice in paying the high-school teacher a maximum salary of $2,500 a year and the office man $5,000 for doing less arduous work? [Applause.]

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman has not given close study to the grades in the compensation schedule, or has not digested them, and has tentatively allocated garbage cleaners and sweepers in the wrong place, or he would not make the assertion that a garbage cleaner or a sweeper or any menial employee by this bill is to be paid more than a school-teacher in the District of Columbia. However, the proposition to include the school-teachers in the District of Columbia in this classification does not answer the demand of anyone who is concerned. Those in charge of the school administration in the District, the District Committee of Congress, the school-teachers themselves, everybody who appeared in the hearings extending over a month which were held on this and similar bills, backed up the proposition that the teachers of the District of Columbia, inasmuch as they recently had a classification for themselves prepared and enacted by Congress, be left outside of this measure, just as the Postal Service, for which Congress in recent years has prepared a revised classification. You are not doing the school administration or the school-teachers themselves or anybody a favor by going against their wishes and including them in this classification. You are not raising them to the standard of any menial employee, but if they by any chance should be classed with such employee, you would certainly be drastically cutting their pay.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman give us any figures whereby we would cut their pay if we were to classify them with the most menial class that the gentleman has in his bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know what the classification for the teachers is.

Mr. BEGG. The salaries run from $1,200 to $1,440 in the grade schools.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then I know of no menial in my bill who would get any such sum.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. CLOUSE. I may have misunderstood the gentleman when he referred to a menial laborer as not drawing such a salary, but I call his attention to page 22, the last paragraph on the page, which relates to the duties of those who are to be responsible for the custody and care of all works of art in the United States Capitol Building, and also for the cleaning and heating and upkeep of the public-school buildings, and so forth. The maximum salary that they shall receive is $2,640.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The curator in charge of the National Zoological Park, who is responsible for the safety, life, and health of the animals, gets a salary of $2,100; but, Mr. Chairman, there is no use going into a discussion as to what the curator of the National Zoological Park is going to receive or what this rate is or that rate is, when you come to including the teachers in this classification.

They do not want to be included, no one wants them to be included; the District authorities and the school-teachers themselves do not want it.

Mr. BEGG. Where did the gentleman get the information the school-teachers do not want it?

Mr. LEHLBACH. We held hearings extending over a month and they said they did not want it—

Mr. BEGG. I talked with the superintendent of the public schools yesterday morning, and I say the gentleman is not quoting them accurately when he makes the statement that they do not want this reclassification.

Mr. LEHLBACH. He may have changed his mind or come in office since the policy of the board has been expressed, but the information presented to the committee, and presented to the committee officially, was in the nature of a request that the school-teachers and Postal Service be left out of the classification.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will yield further, I will admit the teachers did not have a representative there, like the Federal employees had, looking after their interests all the time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to make a short statement as to those classes of Government employees who have already been classified by Congress by separate acts in very recent years. We have already classified 250,000 postal employees in the postal reclassification act of June, 1920. We have already reclassified the teachers of the District of Columbia by a separate classification law. We have also reclassified the policemen and firemen of the District and have given them a uniform increase of $500 a year. That was done, I believe, under the act of December 5, 1919. Now, I am frank to say that when we reach that part of the bill dealing with police and criminal investigation service I shall be disposed to favor an amendment making the salaries of firemen and policemen conform to the rate that we provided in the firemen and police reclassification bills. It seems to me that course is the only fair way to do it. These Government employees who have already been reclassified and have had their salaries raised, it seems to me, are not entitled to have it done over again. What we are trying to do now is to bring about uniformity and not to perpetuate discrimination.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The same situation was called to the attention of the chairman of the committee, and the chairman himself has prepared such an amendment and will be glad to accept an amendment that will bring about what the gentleman from Texas says is his desire.

Mr. BLACK. I am just a little afraid the chairman of the committee does not fully understand my objection. I think I have in mind the changes in the bill which the chairman intends to make, but the matter to which I am now referring is: In the police reclassification bill we fixed the salary of a private in grade 1 at $1,460, and if I recall correctly, under the old law, a private in grade 1 received $960. We thus made a $500 increase, and so on with all the other grades. Now, in the present bill we have carried forward these increased salaries plus the $240 bonus, which was only a temporary measure, and I feel that in justice to the House, in justice to the postal employees who have been reclassified by a separate bill and are not included herein, in justice to the school-teachers who have been classified by a separate bill and are not included herein, we ought to observe the same rule as to firemen and policemen.

Mr. Chairman, I favor this bill to reclassify typists and stenographers and clerical employees and others similarly situated, because they have not been previously reclassified, and the only increase that they have received during this period of the high cost of living was the $240 bonus added to their basic salary. It is not my desire or purpose to favor any measure which imposes any extravagant increase in salaries, but simply to try to measure out even-handed justice to all the employees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman considered that the stenographers are under the present grade of classification ranging from grade 1 to grade 4, with salaries from $1,200 to $1,800, and the Committee on Appropriations in trying to legislate on appropriation bills has continually in all the years back provided for additional places in the higher grades, and there are stenographers in the departments here to-day receiving $1,800 and in some instances receiving salaries of $2,000? So the Committee on Appropriations has recognized the work of these superior stenographers.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, the gentleman is making a broad statement—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent for three additional minutes that I may answer the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLACK. Now, I did not state that no individual stenographer, that no individual typist had received an increase, but I made the statement that as a class they were working under the old basic salaries plus the $240 bonus.

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

Mr. BLACK. Now, let me finish my statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I wish to correct the gentleman again in his statement.

Mr. BLACK. Well, the gentleman will have a chance to do that. I will read from the report of the Reclassification Commission on page 30, where it says that the average salary of a junior typist, exclusive of the bonus—I am talking now about the basic salary merely—is $1,133. The average salary of a junior stenographer, taking them as a whole class, was $1,318, exclusive of the bonus.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the very position I am taking. The gentleman's figures support the position I take, that before the war typists entered the service at $900, and during the war we raised the level to $1,100 regardless of the bonus. For the typist only, who is not a stenographer, the average pay is $1,133, while the average pay of a stenographer is $1,318.

Mr. BLACK. The point I made and the statement I wished to emphasize was this, that, as the gentleman from Mississippi said yesterday, the old basic salaries of clerical employees were from $900 to $1,800, and they have not been increased except by the bonus.

Now, it is all well enough for a Member of Congress to say "I can hire a good typist in my home town for $75 per month and a good stenographer for $100 per month." Perhaps that can be done. But let us remember that Congress has passed a law which compels these District employees to be ratably distributed among the several States, and a young lady who could perhaps work in her home town at $75 per month, where she could live with her parents and get along very well with it, can not come here to Washington and live on any such salary.

And the provisions of this bill which relate to ordinary typists and stenographers and provide a range of salaries of $1,260, $1,320, $1,380, $1,440, $1,500, and $1,560, I think, are reasonable.

Now, it is true that departments like the War Risk Insurance Bureau, working under a lump-sum appropriation, have employed stenographers and typists at an entrance salary of $1,100 or $1,200. But that was not an increase of the basic salary scale, but was simply bringing them in at a higher entrance salary. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] said yesterday, these basic salaries in the clerical grades range under civil service from $900 to $1,800, and they are still the same as they have been for years. Of course, it is very true that some employees have been promoted from time to time within these grades. I was not disputing that proposition at all. What I was emphasizing was that the basic salaries remained unchanged.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit? But the committee, in arranging the bill, eliminated $900 for stenographers, and raised them to $1,000, and in some instances to $1,100. We recognized the need in the bill of eliminating the lower grade.

Mr. BLACK. I will accept the correction of the gentleman if that was the fact which he intended to remind me of.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have read the bill that we have now under consideration with a great deal of interest. I have read it with a view of ascertaining for myself, if possible, just what was intended by the enactment of this legislation. And as was said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Begg] I find not only in one instance but in diverse instances, that instead of preventing discrimination between employees of the Federal Government it adds to and makes the discrimination more prominent than it is under the existing law.

Why, gentlemen, when you come to talk about the school-teachers of the District of Columbia who are paid a salary of $1,200, and compare that with the class of employees embraced under this bill, you will then begin to wake up and realize that it must mean something; there must be some power behind the throne that is putting across this favoritism toward a favored class. I do not know what it is. I have heard a great deal of talk about unionism, and it may be that the public-school teachers of the District of Columbia are not organized, and it may be that they are being neglected on account of that fact. But here I find in this bill, at page 20, under the classification of employees of the Federal Government, that:

Grade one shall include all classes of positions, the duties of which are, as junior messengers, to run errands and to perform under supervision the simplest routine office work in any department.

The minimum salary for that kid, who can not be over 18 years of age, is $720 a year. For the child, the mere lad, of 12 or 13 years of age—

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman tell me how many children he has seen as messengers in the departments?

Mr. CLOUSE. I find them in every department. I can hardly reach a department because of messenger boys obstructing my way. [Applause.] I find them everywhere. The departments are flooded with them.

Let us follow this classification a little further. I find under this same classification that the next class of employees that are sought to be protected is that class whose duties are to perform, under immediate supervision, the simplest kind of routine. Their minimum salary is $1,080 and their maximum salary $1,260, more than some of your best teachers in the District are receiving to-day. It provides for the simplest routine work $1,260, and I follow that class of employees until I find under the provisions of this act that under class 7 the minimum salary is $2,760 and the maximum salary $3,000 a year. Let me tell you, members of this committee, what I think needs to be done in Washington rather than to enact this law. I believe that the laborer is worthy of his hire, but I do not believe in surrounding an employee with safeguards such as will produce inefficiency rather than meritorious service.

Now, you can talk about civil service all you please, but I want to say to this committee as one Member of this House that I believe it is the breeder of inefficiency. [Applause.] And I am going to offer an amendment, if this bill should, perchance, receive the sanction of a majority of this committee, that will give to the Director of the Budget the same powers to decrease as you are attempting to give him to increase their salaries. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to some assumptions which may lead us astray in many important phases of this subject. Reference has recently been made to the grade of stenographers. I doubt whether there is to-day any specific provision made by law with respect to that class of employees. The fact is this: A person entering the service to-day as a stenographer and typist at the grade of $900 may be within a year at the grade of $1,000 or $1,200 in an entirely different capacity. I venture to say that a very large majority of the people who enter the service as stenographers and typists are very speedily advanced to clerkships. They are eligible for the clerkships, and when they get that position they lay aside the work of stenography and typing in order to get the highest wages that come to clerks. Again, we are assuming here that because first, second, third, and fourth class clerkships were fixed by statute many years ago therefore there could be no promotion to the people in the classified service. Mark you, the man who entered at $1,200 a few years ago may be at $1,800 now. That clerk has passed his promotions from $1,200 to $1,800. We are assuming that because those grades have not been changed by law, therefore there has been no improvement in salaries for the people in the service.

I have on my desk a list of nearly 2,100 names from which I can quote to you evidences that are very significant on this point. Take one item, where under a lump-sum appropriation a certain clerk went into the Treasury Department by transfer in January, 1919, at $1,600. He is drawing $7,000 to-day. And I can quote for half an hour examples of that character to illustrate that point. Now, just how far this bill will go in correcting an evil of that sort I am not prepared to say, but I want to suggest to the chairman of the committee the propriety of its favorable consideration during the discussion of the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would the gentleman mind giving the name of that person?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That man's name is George R. Davis.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What position does he occupy?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. He is supposed to be a lawyer now. He went in at the time I tell you.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Where is he a lawyer?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Well, I am going to review that matter in a few days, and I will give you the facts on that point. I am just gathering up a few instances of that character to illustrate the fallacies to which we are bound to come by following the assumption underlying this proposition—that the people in the departments have had no promotions. Why, gentlemen, you may write this law and allocate these people according to its terms. I am not criticizing that, but while the law stands for years the people will pass through the grades and get their benefits. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. That the compensation schedules shall apply only to civilian employees in the departments within the District of Columbia, and shall not apply to employees in positions the duties of which are to perform or assist in apprentice, helper, or journeyman work in a recognized trade or craft and skilled and semiskilled laborers, except such as are under the direction and control of the custodian of a public building.

The head of each department shall allocate all positions in his department in the District of Columbia to their appropriate grades in the compensation schedules and shall fix the rate of compensation of each employee thereunder, in accordance with the rules prescribed in section 6 herein. Such allocations and rates of compensation may be revised by the Bureau of the Budget and shall become effective upon their approval by said bureau.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 3, line 19, after the word "bureau," add the following language: "In no case, however, shall the compensation of any employee be increased unless Congress has appropriated money to provide for the increase, nor shall the rate for any employee be increased beyond the maximum rate for the class to which his position is allocated."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The committee will accept that amendment; and I will state that it is presumed that the provision made specific in the bill is, by implication, already in the law. I would suggest, however, that the word "class" be changed to the word "grade."

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to modify my amendment and change the word "class" to the word "grade." That would probably be a more appropriate word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be modified as indicated.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up the time of the committee except to say, briefly, that this amendment which I have proposed meets one objection that has been urged against the bill, to wit, that after this classification bill is passed the allocating agencies, to wit, the heads of the departments and the Bureau of the Budget, might inflate the allocations; that is to say, allocate employees to positions to which they do not fairly belong, and by that means accomplish extravagant increase in salaries. Personally I have faith that the Bureau of the Budget will carefully review and revise all allocations to positions in the respective grades and that the work will be well done, but the argument has been made—and I think very properly made—that Congress, upon whom the responsibility of raising the revenue rests, should also at all times hold the purse strings, and therefore this amendment provides that "In no case, however, shall the compensation of any employee be increased unless Congress has appropriated money to provide for the increase." Therefore when the heads of the departments and the Bureau of the Budget shall submit to Congress their reports of their reclassification of the employees under the terms of this bill, the increases in salaries will not become effective until Congress specifically appropriates the money to meet the increases.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. WINGO. As I caught the gentleman's amendment, I think I am in favor of it. As I understand, under this bill there is no way of knowing how many employees of a particular grade or a subdivision of that grade will be on the pay roll until the Budget Bureau makes its report?

Mr. BLACK. That is very true. If the gentleman will permit me, I do not see how any committee could possibly get that information in advance of the actual allocation.

Mr. WINGO. Let me see if I follow the gentleman: As I understand, that being true, notwithstanding they make this allocation, if by allocating they give preponderance to a particular subdivision or a grade they can not do that provided it exceeds the amount appropriated by Congress. Is that the idea of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. BLACK. The effect of the amendment, I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas, will be this: It will compel the Director of the Budget to submit detailed information to Congress as to the allocations which he has made. Then if Congress approves this reclassification which the heads of the departments and the Director of the Budget have made, it will signify that approval by appropriating the money to carry it out, but if Congress thinks the allocations have been extravagantly made and would impose an undue charge upon the Treasury it would decline to appropriate the money to pay the increases and would in that way check any possible abuses.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I have answered the gentleman's inquiry, that is all I have to say.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise in opposition to the amendment, because I may be in favor of it, but I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. As I understand, in the hypothetical situation that I have stated to the gentleman, the allocation of a given number of employees to a particular grade, so far as salaries are concerned, or subdivisions in the grade, would not be effective unless Congress by an appropriation provided a sufficient amount of money to cover that.

Mr. BLACK. Undoubtedly that would be the effect.

Mr. WINGO. Here is the difficulty that I fear the gentleman's amendment does not meet, and I fear that is brought about by a fact which the majority of the House does not appreciate; that is, the effect of putting all appropriation power in the hands of one committee and making it possible to make a point of order against an item of legislation in an appropriation bill. According to the gentleman's amendment, all Congress could do would be to refuse to appropriate the money. There would be the allocation, and if the committee brought in a bill with a provision that would change the allocation, or undertake to change it as to number or basic salaries, or if some Member were to offer that amendment from the floor, a point of order would lie on the ground that it was legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore not in order. Then Congress by this law, I fear, would be in the attitude of having, as a practical matter, abrogated all control over reclassification though retaining it in theory.

Mr. BLACK. I am sure the gentleman will agree that Congress could not administer the law and that necessarily its administration must be left to some executive agency.

Mr. WINGO. I agree to that.

Mr. BLACK. What we want to do is to hold in our hands the control of the purse strings at all times. If the Bureau of the Budget should bring in an estimate, for example, from the Treasury Department which the Committee on Appropriations should regard as an inflated allocation, making an unjust charge on the Treasury, the amendment would prevent any such salary increase becoming effective unless the Congress appropriates the money to provide therefor. I do not see how we can throw around the reclassification bill any better protection than the amendment I suggest.

Mr. WINGO. I do not want my friend to think that my objection was a critical one, and while it is theoretically in the control of Congress I do not know whether the gentleman could add to his amendment—the gentleman may have an amendment that will cover that. You have got to consider this bill in the light of other provisions. It has got to be considered in the light of other sections. Take page 4, lines 6 to 12:

That whenever an existing position or a position hereafter created by law shall not fairly and reasonably be allocable to one of the grades of the several services described in the compensation schedules, the Bureau of the Budget shall adopt for such position the range of compensation prescribed for a grade, or a division thereof, comparable therewith as to qualifications and duties.

Now, I anticipate what the answer of the gentleman will be, that in the very nature of things it is necessary to have that kind of a provision because there may be some existing position or one created hereafter that it would be difficult to measure by the strict terms of the law and determine to what grade it would be applicable. But if Congress should refuse to appropriate the money as provided by the gentleman's amendment—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. What is to prevent the Bureau of the Budget getting around the restrictions of Congress and absolutely destroy them by undertaking to allocate them as far as the positions are concerned by their own ipse dixit as to what it thinks is the proper designation of that particular class? How can the gentleman prevent that?

Mr. BLACK. I think it would be impossible to draw any bill to which a hypothetical objection could not be raised. But one thing that causes me to advocate the reclassification bill is to prevent just such abuses as the gentleman from Nebraska called to our attention in these lump-sum appropriations. Congress has no check on that at all. If we adopt a reclassification bill we compel the Bureau of the Budget to submit to Congress information as to what classes the employees belong.

Mr. WINGO. Here is what you do: Now the appropriation bill specifies in most instances the pay of a given class, and the number of that class, but this bill transfers that power to the Budget Bureau. We are bound by that, and the only check under the bill and the gentleman's amendment is to refuse to make an appropriation, and the gentleman understands the appeal that will be made that you can not change it by law in the current appropriation bill, and you must appropriate for it with the hope that the legislative committee will bring in an amendment that will make the desired change. That appeal has been offered with effect. I have frequently stood for things in current appropriation bills because I thought this way: We can not afford to check the machinery of the Government; let us go ahead and appropriate the necessary amount and the legislative committee will later correct the evil by an amendment to existing law, but too often it is forgotten until the next current bill raises the same question. I favor a proper reclassification, but I want Congress left so that under the rules of the House it will not be precluded from exercising its judgment if it disapprove the budget. Our judgment is the supreme power; we are responsible, and I do not want legislation that will hamper the proper exercise of that judgment.

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose the gentleman's amendment. I am in exact accord with the purpose of the amendment offered by my friend from Texas, a member of the committee. I do not suppose any safe and sane Congressman will vote for this bill unless some saving clause like this is in it. The moment you say I am going to vote for this bill without some amendment like this in it, that moment you have surrendered the right of Congress in appropriating money to fix salaries, because if you permit the allocation and assignment under this bill, carrying with it a certain salary for the individual in performing that duty for the Government, you must pay it or you have created a claim against the Government, because he is entitled to that compensation so fixed under the provisions of this bill. Having passed the bill, we have got to appropriate for it whether we want to or not. Therefore the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is absolutely essential unless you want to surrender congressional control over the purse strings, as the gentleman from Texas has told you. The only question is the one raised by the gentleman from Arkansas. Does the amendment do that? When I first read the amendment I thought that it did, but I am not so sure now that it does. The amendment reads:

In no case, however, shall the compensation of any employee be increased unless Congress has appropriated money to provide for the increase.

There ought to be something in the amendment to prevent the classification which carries with it a higher salary as well as a refusal to appropriate the money.

Mr. BLACK. I do not see how it could be any more plainly stated that this reclassification shall not be effective, in so far as it increases the salary of an employee, until Congress has appropriated the money.

Mr. Sisson. If the gentleman's amendment did that I would not have taken the floor; but I submit to my friend whether it does that or not. I thought it did when I first read it, but the gentleman from Arkansas has raised another question.

In no case, however, shall the compensation of any employee be increased unless Congress has appropriated money to provide for the increase.

Let us stop right there. Does the gentleman believe that means that reclassification shall not be made which changes the salary until it has the approval of Congress? If the gentleman believes that, then the only question is whether the committee agrees with him or not.

Mr. BLACK. If the Director of the Budget should submit an inflated allocation and the Committee on Appropriations would decline to approve it by granting the appropriation, then he would have to make an allocation that the Committee on Appropriations would agree to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I have an idea that the next appropriation bill after this allocation will provide for a certain number of clerks of a certain class with a lump sum.

Mr. Sisson. I do not know what form it will take.

Mr. WINGO. Suppose the committee should be asked for $200,000 and it should refuse to give that amount and would give only $150,000. If he wants to give that increase to some favorite employee, and that is the thing we want to prevent, he might then be doing an injustice to a lower grade, by putting a man in a lower grade so that he could make the increase in one of these others where Congress refused to give him the money. So that you may have not only the increase, but you may work a hardship and some one decreased who ought not to be decreased.

Mr. Sisson. I see what is in the mind of the gentleman from Arkansas, and I agree with him that the point should be very carefully considered. There ought to be something in the bill that would prevent that. I believe every Member here wants to do justice and the fair thing by these employees and at the same time do justice by the Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. In a moment. That being true, we ought to be sure that the language we adopt here in the bill will do just that thing. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest to the gentleman that if he is in doubt about it, he prepare an amendment to the proposed amendment to make it absolutely certain.

Mr. Sisson. I wanted first to discuss the matter with my friend [Mr. Black] to see whether or not the amendment he has prepared is broad enough to do that.

Mr. Black. I can only give my opinion, and my opinion is that it is broad enough. Of course, if the gentleman can suggest any better language, very well.

Mr. Sisson. If this amendment were amended so as to read:

In no case, however, shall the compensation of any employee be increased or his grade changed until Congress has approved the change of grade and appropriated the money to provide for the change and the increase.

Unquestionably it would cover the entire case in my judgment. But this can be cured by placing an amendment at another place in the bill, and I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Black] to give his attention to this and cure the defect, if he thinks any exists, because he and I are in accord in our views on this amendment, and if he does not offer the amendment I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. Wood of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Wood of Indiana: Page 3, line 11, after the word "building," insert the following: "Provided, That the President may, by Executive order, extend the application of this act to all persons employed in the field service."

Mr. Wood of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think that this is a very important amendment, and I can not see why—

Mr. Lehlbach. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order, and I ask the gentleman whether or not he will yield to me for a question?

Mr. Wood of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. Lehlbach. Is this amendment one that was incorporated in the series of amendments which he offered to section 1?

Mr. Wood of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. Lehlbach. I make the point of order that the House has already passed on this amendment.

Mr. Wingo. I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late. The gentleman had already commenced his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey was on his feet asking recognition. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. Lehlbach. That the committee has already passed upon this amendment, it being one of the series of amendments voted upon a short time ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that that point of order is not well taken. The amendment offered consisted of several pages, and now a partial amendment is offered. The Chair does not think the action of the committee on the former amendment would bar the subsequent amendment.

Mr. Lehlbach. It is just exactly as if the committee had acted upon a series of amendments en bloc and had defeated them and they are now being offered seriatim.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. Wood of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I wish to call attention to this proposed amendment and the section it affects. If this measure has the virtue and merit that it should contain, it should have some provision whereby it is made to apply to those who are working in the field as well as those employed within the so-called District of Columbia. The amendment I am proposing is that the President by Executive order may make it apply, whenever in his opinion it should be made to apply, to those working in the field. I wish to call this to the attention of the committee, and that is that we have expended more than $500,000 in trying to arrive at some scheme whereby a classification might be made of the civil-service employees of the United States and to date we have nothing. Now, we are proposing by this measure to undertake to provide for a reclassification of a part of the employees of the civil service without any provision made to a general reclassification of those in the field service.

Mr. Hudspeth. If the gentleman will yield, how many are there of those does the gentleman estimate in addition to those provided for in the bill?

Mr. Wood of Indiana. About 200,000, in round numbers. Now, you can take this reclassification bill as it applies to those that it is made to apply to in the District of Columbia and I am informed from those who are versed in calculating that by reason of the schedules laid down here the additional expense to the taxpayers of the United States will be more than $8,000,000, and to carry it out to its logical extent and to make it apply to the entire 200,000 it would increase the salary roll more than $20,000,000. Now, I have before me here—and I wish to call it to your attention to-day had this amendment of mine received the sanction and consideration it should, something that may be of some interest to you—here is a complete reclassification of the District of Columbia in every respect that has cost the taxpayers of this country but $50,000, and that is ready to be put into action this minute, or as soon as the law might be passed making it authoritative. So, I say when we are doing this thing, why should we insist upon doing it by piecemeal? If this thing is a success, as we hope it may be a success, if it becomes a law, why not have a provision whereby the President of the United States may by Executive order extend it so as to make it apply to all the forces. He might not do it all at one time. He would find one section of the field force ready to have it applied and issue his Executive order covering them. He might find another section at another time ready to have it applied to them. If this machinery is good for those employed in the District, why is it not good for all of the civil-service employees of the country?

Mr. Stevenson. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. It is the business of the Congress to legislate. The tendency is to avoid legislation frequently, and this is one of the methods of avoiding it. Pass it up to the President by Executive order to extend it to the ones he sees fit and leave out such as he sees fit. We have done it already under the Civil Service Commission for the last 25 or 30 years, gradually putting them in and taking them out. If the President has the right to put a class in, he has an equal right to revoke an order and take them out. We have had that now from time to time. Take the post-office situation, as suggested by my friend from Ohio here. We have had four years of legislation by Executive order, where under civil-service regulations the man who made the highest mark got the appointment. Then we have had another President who sees differently and says you have to take one of the three highest. I will say frankly all of that is a humbug, as far as that is concerned. I agree with Mr. Thomas S. Williams, of Illinois, about that. I can give an instance which occurred in the good old State of South Carolina, not from my district, however, in which they held an examination and only two men got on the eligible list. There was one man who was already announced by the referee as the man who was to get the post office. They certified a list with only two men on it, and the choice of the referee was not on it. What did they do? Why, they had a revision that fixed it around so that it came out in favor of the man and put him on the list. He was revised and revised and put on the list where he got the post office. Now, that is what comes of these Executive orders making law apply to the people of this country.

Mr. Andrews of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Stevenson. I do.

Mr. Andrews of Nebraska. Is it not possible for the President of the United States to wipe out the entire civil-service regulations by one stroke of his pen?

Mr. Stevenson. Well, he would have to write his name and let some other fellow write the order above it. That is what they do, and I am opposed to extending this method of Executive legislation any further to anybody in the civil service or anybody else. [Applause.]

Mr. Lehlbach. Mr. Chairman, of course, as the gentleman who has proposed this amendment says, if classification of employees in the civil service is a good thing for those here in Washington it is a good thing for those in the field, and consequently the bill provides, section 5:

That the Bureau of the Budget shall report to Congress at the beginning of the session following the passage of this act schedules of positions, grades, and salaries for the field services, which shall follow the rules and principles of the compensation schedules in so far as these are applicable to the field services.

It says that this report shall include a list prepared by the head of each department, and it follows the procedure exactly that is laid down for the District employees in the classification under consideration. The reason that service is not classified in the bill is because we are not in possession of the data on which to base the classification, but we are only in possession of the data with which to classify the employees here in the District. But the difference in his method by which he would classify the field service and the way the bill classifies, is this: We insist in making the classification in the District. We ourselves make the classification. We have the compensation schedules and other elements here in the bill. They are subject to scrutiny by the committee line by line, but we are going to make that classification. We are not going to have any bureau of the Government do it. To make it by Executive order would be to have some bureau of efficiency make the classification. We ask that the Bureau of the Budget make it, and we will revise or adopt it if necessary.

Mr. LONDON. On yesterday the gentleman from Indiana opposed the bill as unworkable and vicious. To-day he wants it extended to the field service.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is correct. He points to this set of books and says that here is a complete classification in the District. He says to put it in force and let us extend it to the field service. There is not a Member of Congress that has lifted the cover of any book here and knows what is in it. But that is the way the gentleman wants to legislate.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. RAKER. Taking the offices classified in the District of Columbia at the salaries fixed in your bill and comparing them with the salaries they are getting now and taking the whole lot, will it be a raise or a decrease generally in the salaries of all the offices?

Mr. LEHLBACH. There will be equalization for such diversity as exists between those who are admittedly underpaid and for whom there are pending in certain instances special bills to bring them up a grade and those who are not, and there will be opportunity for demotion or promotion. If they are getting more than they are worth, there will be an opportunity in the bill to reduce them and generally make for uniformity and equality and justice.

Mr. RAKER. According to the amount of working experience?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Wood of Indiana: On page 3, line 12, after the word "shall," add the following: "Under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order which I made to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana previously. I renew the point of order that this amendment is one of a series that was passed upon by the House and therefore not in order to be reoffered at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment now offered is a very small part of the amendment that was rejected. It is clearly in order after an amendment has been rejected to modify it substantially and offer it again. The gentleman from Indiana has the right, it appears to the Chair, to offer parts of an amendment that has been rejected. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the purpose in offering this amendment is that there may be some party in responsible authority who may have something to do with this allocation. You will find in reading this bill and in reading this very section that it is the purpose of those who are sponsors for it, as it now appears, to divert from the established order of things into a new channel the administration of this reclassification. Every gentleman here knows, or should know, that we have to-day upon the statute books an efficiency law passed in 1912, and that at that time its enforcement was placed with the Civil Service Commission. Some two or three years after that it was amended, when there was created a Bureau of Efficiency, the very purpose of which was to survey the efficiency of the various departments. And why was it done? Some of you were here then and perhaps remember the debate. It was found that it was inconsistent, if you please, with a good administration of the Civil Service Commission, and in consequence it was inefficient. Therefore, in order that some efficiency might be obtained in these various departments, an independent bureau, known as the Bureau of Efficiency, was created. And wherever that Bureau of Efficiency—and I am not here to defend any particular member of it—but wherever that bureau has had access to a department under that law, that department has been very materially benefited thereby.

One of the best evidences of it, if you please, was furnished in the Post Office Department. I have heard more mean things said about ex-Postmaster General Burleson than almost any other man who ever occupied a public place in Washington, but to his everlasting credit, be it said, he put the Efficiency Bureau in his department and had it weed out the inefficient in the department, until to-day it is the most efficient department in Washington.

And the same good result has occurred in other departments where this Bureau of Efficiency has gone. And why? Here is an organization fully equipped for this character of work. Here is a fair example—that it has furnished you with a complete working machine at a cost of $50,000, where $500,000 was wasted without giving anything of value in any concrete form for our consideration. Therefore I ask, why do you not take and employ the machinery that we have already got rather than attempt to employ some new machinery; why set up new machinery in some new department that is without authority now, and without the force and the means with which to do the thing we desired to have done? We either should take and abolish this Bureau of Efficiency and repeal the law, or else we should take and give it the authority to function; and here is one of the best places in the world to say that we mean and show by our acts that we are trying to keep down the expenses of this Government and trying to make effectual the machinery that we already have instead of creating new machinery and keeping on building up and building up and building up new bureaus and new places at enormous and needless expense.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Under the gentleman's amendment, what assurance would we have that the President would be guided by the recommendations of the Bureau of Efficiency in making these rules and regulations?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If you will take and read that law you will find that it is the duty of the President to make it so, and if you will study the action of the President in the last few weeks you will observe that he has issued an Executive order directing every department to make a survey of efficiency, and directing the Bureau of Efficiency to go into the several offices and do that very thing. That is my answer to the gentleman.

Why, if we are trying to legislate for the purpose of getting the best results in the first place, and in the second place legislating for the purpose of saving money, why not employ the agency we already have to do this thing instead of employing a new force and giving it into new hands that must of necessity be provided with some means whereby that may be done?

Now, I am revealing no secret when I say to you that the Budget Bureau does not want this thing. They know that they can not enforce it, because it is absolutely inconsistent with the purpose of its creation; and one of the officials of the Bureau of the Budget told me to-day that under no circumstances should this duty ever be lodged with the Bureau of the Budget. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, in this amendment the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] reaches the crux of his opposition to the bill as reported by the committee. He proposes by his amendment that the allocations by the department heads should be under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, who would, of course, under the law, as he has told us, authorize the Bureau of Efficiency to do this work. We have here reached the point of difference, one of the main differences, between the gentleman's view and the view of the committee in regard to classification. The bill as it reads makes this classification subject to revision by the Bureau of the Budget. It shall become effective only upon its approval by said bureau. Section 4 of the bill gives to the Bureau of the Budget the power which the gentleman seeks to give to the Bureau of Efficiency, as follows:

That the Bureau of the Budget, in order effectively to revise and approve allocations, may make all necessary rules and regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and provide such subdivisions of services, titles of positions, and definitions of duties as it may deem necessary.

The point of this is just here: Do you want the allocations, the assignments of all the personnel of the Government in the District, and later on in the field, when this shall have been extended to the field, made subject to the agency of the administration which is responsible for the pay rolls and responsible for the Government's expenditures? Or do you want to give it to the Bureau of Efficiency, which has no responsibility at all? Do you want to place the agency under Gen. Dawes—and that is the purpose of the creation of his bureau—or do you want the irresponsible Bureau of Efficiency to be the check on these provisions and hold down any abuses that may arise under the allocations?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that it looks to me as if we were getting confused. This whole business is under the President. If Members would think, they would not be misled so easily. Under this bill the men who are appointed by and are under the control of the President are the men who are going to make the classification provided for here. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] injects into the bill what is most objectionable to all the civil-service employees—namely, a real efficiency to entitle them to promotion, having nothing to do with the departments, but entirely independent of them all, and therefore practicing, so far as I know, practically no favoritism. They have no personal connection with the employee.

Now, in addition to what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] said about the Bureau of Efficiency going to the Post Office Department, I want to say that Postmaster General Burleson was able to handle, with practically the same force and with no increased appropriation, nearly 100 per cent more mail matter because he did just exactly what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] indicated.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. No; I can not yield now. My time is too short.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield now.

Mr. SISSON. Another thing: The Bureau of Efficiency went through the Treasury under Gov. Burke, and Gov. Burke gave them absolutely carte blanche, and in a few weeks they reported some reforms to Gov. Burke and he was able to discharge a very large number of employees, and later some 40 were discharged. The Treasury for years had not been current in its work, but a few months after the new system had been in force Gov. Burke was asked what the situation was in his department, and his answer was, "The work is current every night." So he saved thousands of dollars to the Government and did the work more satisfactorily.

Now, I could mention many other good works of this Bureau of Efficiency. By the way, this Bureau of Efficiency was created under President Taft's administration, and the same people were continued by President Wilson, although President Taft created the bureau. The great trouble has been that many of the departments have fought it as if it was a public enemy. Every Cabinet officer that gave it a chance and would cooperate with it has come before the committee and stated that this Bureau of Efficiency has done a great deal of good. They have had experience, and they have a corps of trained men. If you turn this over to the Bureau of the Budget they will create a new organization; they will bring in a lot of new people that know absolutely nothing about it. This Bureau of Efficiency has had years of experience, and therefore I think the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana ought to prevail. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEHLBACH) there were—ayes 32, noes 29.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers, and pending that I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEHLBACH) there were—ayes 37, noes 18.

So the committee determined to rise.

The committee rose; and Mr. WALSH, as Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8928, the reclassification bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ACKERMAN for one day on account of important business.

To Mr. HOCH (at the request of Mr. WHITE of Kansas), for this day on account of sickness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there has been a general impression that a conference report of some nature would be filed this afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the matter to which the gentleman refers is not ready this afternoon.

The motion of Mr. LEHLBACH was then agreed to; accordingly, at 4 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m., the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, November 17, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 33) permitting Chinese to register under certain provisions and conditions, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 471), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HUDDLESTON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2594) authorizing the counties of Allendale, S. C., and Screven, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River, between said counties, at or near Burtons Ferry, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 480), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2555) to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Great Pee Dee River, S. C., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 481), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. ROSE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4367) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 472), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. UNDERHILL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5791) for the relief of Robert Russell, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 473), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. ROSE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4368) for the relief of the owners of the barge Havana, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 474), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GLYNN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1463) for the relief of William Malone, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 475), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 314) for the relief of Forrest R. Black, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 476), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6251) for the relief of Leo Balsam, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 477), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1543) for the relief of Bertram Gardner, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 478), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GLYNN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4504) for the relief of Annie M. Lepley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 479), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 9156) to make November 11, "Armistice Day," a legal holiday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LEE of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 9157) to establish a national park in the national forest reservation in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SINNOTT: A bill (H. R. 9158) to authorize the construction of a toll bridge over the Columbia River at a point approximately 5 miles upstream from Dalles City, Wasco County, in the State of Oregon, to a point on the opposite shore of the State of Washington; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: A bill (H. R. 9159) to authorize the judges of the United States Court of Customs Appeals to be assigned to certain other courts and conferring the jurisdiction of such courts upon them while so assigned; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A resolution (H. Res. 226) calling on the Secretary of War for information in regard to soldiers under sentence for participation in the Houston riot; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under class 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 9160) to reimburse John Anderson, former postmaster at Sanborn, Knox County, Ind., for stamps and funds stolen from the post office; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 9161) granting a pension to Etta King; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLASSON: A bill (H. R. 9162) granting a pension to Louis H. Grunert; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FESS: A bill (H. R. 9163) granting a pension to William G. Shotwell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GREENE of Vermont: A bill (H. R. 9164) granting a pension to Abbie M. Babcock; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARDY of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 9165) granting a pension to Julia A. Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9166) granting a pension to Josefa Martinez; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL: A bill (H. R. 9167) for the relief of the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, Baltimore, Md.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KETCHAM: A bill (H. R. 9168) granting a pension to John H. Chrisler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9169) granting a pension to Sarah M. McKinnis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H. R. 9170) to refund to the city of Greenville, S. C., the sum of $551.20; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REED of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 9171) providing for the relief of William A. Calloway; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RICKETTS: A bill (H. R. 9172) granting a pension to Harry W. Weston; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROSSDALE: A bill (H. R. 9173) to grant relief and correct the military record of William Harley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SCHALL: A bill (H. R. 9174) granting a pension to Margaret L. Ferriter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 9175) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 9176) granting a pension to Orilla S. Spicer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPEAKS: A bill (H. R. 9177) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Gale; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 9178) granting a pension to Anna E. Hughes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9179) granting a pension to Marietta Vader; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 9180) granting a pension to Mary E. Sage; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TEN EYCK: A bill (H. R. 9181) for the relief of William McDonnell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 9182) granting a pension to Laura M. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9183) providing for the payment of the findings reported by the Court of Claims in favor of Timothy C. Harrington for extra time; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

3063. By Mr. CHALMERS: Petition signed by residents of Toledo, Ohio, protesting against the passage of House bill 4388, known as the compulsory Sunday observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

3064. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of the Fuchs & Lang Manufacturing Co., New York City; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3065. Also, petition of Brooklyn Bar Association, Brooklyn, N. Y.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3066. Also, petition of Hudson Chamber of Commerce, Hudson, N. Y.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3067. Also, petition of water power commission, Albany, N. Y.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3068. By Mr. PERKINS: Resolution of the Demarest Baptist Church, of Demarest, N. J., in support of House joint resolution 159; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3069. By Mr. RHODES: Joint resolution by the City Council of Kansas City, Mo., to relieve the condition of unemployment and to improve the public highways of the country; to the Committee on Labor.

3070. By Mr. SNYDER: Resolutions of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Oriskany Falls, N. Y., against legalizing the manufacture of 2.75 per cent alcoholic content and the imposition of a tax of $5 per barrel; also favoring the speedy enactment of supplemental enforcement legislation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3071. By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: Resolutions of the Methodist Episcopal, Baptist, Federated, and Nazarene Churches of Palisade, Colo., urging speedy enactment of the antibeer dry enforcement bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3072. By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition of R. Robinson, Altoona, Pa., in support of House bill 2984, introduced by Representative KAHN, of California, with reference to mileage-book privileges; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3073. By Mr. TINKHAM: Resolutions adopted by the executive committee of the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, attributing the decline of foreign trade and the curtailed domestic consumption of manufactured commodities to a ruinous system of Federal taxation superinduced by enormous expenditures of the United States Government for armament purposes, and the exhaustion of capital and credit; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, November 17, 1921.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, November 16, 1921.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McKinley	Smith
Borah	Gooding	McNary	Smoot
Broussard	Hale	Nelson	Spencer
Bursum	Harris	New	Sterling
Calder	Harrison	Nicholson	Sutherland
Cameron	Heflin	Norbeck	Swanson
Capper	Hitchcock	Norris	Townsend
Caraway	Johnson	Oddie	Trammell
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Wadsworth
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Page	Walsh
Dial	Kendrick	Penrose	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	Kenyon	Phipps	Warren
Ernst	Keyes	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	King	Ransdell	Watson, Ind.
France	La Follette	Robinson	Williams
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Sheppard
Gerry	McKellar	Simmons

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] on official business.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that owing to a slight accident the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is necessarily detained at his residence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

LETTER FROM MRS. LILLIE S. KNOX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication which the Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read the communication, as follows:

NOVEMBER 4, 1921.

SECRETARY OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I wish to express to the Senate of the United States the sincere thanks and appreciation of my family and myself for the honor and respect shown to my late husband.

The deep affection and cordial friendship that I know my husband felt toward his colleagues in the Senate and the deep respect and honor they have paid to him fills my heart with great thankfulness for their kindness.

Sincerely, yours,

LILLIE S. KNOX.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 843) to amend section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented a resolution adopted by the Duluth (Minn.) Board of Trade, opposing the enactment of legislation restoring to State railroad commissions the authority to fix railroad rates, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution adopted by the grand jury of Walton County (Ga.) Superior Court, November term, 1921, indorsing the Conference on Limitation of Armaments and urging that earnest prayer be offered up by the people for real and permanent results from the conference, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LADD presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Rolette County, N. Dak., remonstrating against Treasury Department regulations permitting the sale of beer by druggists, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Toledo, Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 1948, providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Methodist Sunday School of Selden, Kans., favoring the enactment of the so-called Willis-Campbell anti-beer bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the students and faculty of the Kansas State Agricultural College, indorsing the Conference on Limitation of Armament and favoring open sessions of such conference and the fostering of lasting peace among the nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE presented resolutions of the First Church of Christ, of Los Angeles; the executive board of the County Federation of Women's Clubs, of Imperial; women of the Nineteenth Century Round Table, of Hanford; the Thompson Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, of Bakersfield; the faculty and students of the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, of Berkeley; Chamber of Commerce of San Jose; Conference Church of the Brethren, district of southern California and Arizona, at La Verne; the Ministerial Association of Southern California and Arizona, Church of the Brethren, at Pasadena; and the Chamber of Commerce of Long Beach; all in the State of California, favoring the limitation of armament so as to foster world peace, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the members of the Sunday School of the First Presbyterian Church, of Pomona, Calif., favoring the limitation of armament, the support of the Volstead Act, the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, and opposing the manufacture of beer and wine for medicine, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution of the Santa Ana (Calif.) Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, protesting against the enactment of legislation commercializing the national parks and favoring the preservation of such parks in their natural state, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Corning, Calif., praying for the enactment of supplementary prohibition legislation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

MICHIGAN SENATORIAL ELECTION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate resolution 172, declaring Truman H. Newberry to be a duly elected Senator from the State of Michigan.

Mr. POMERENE obtained the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2170.

Mr. CURTIS. Let us vote on the motion, or let the Senator from Mississippi withdraw it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I had expected to go on with my argument this morning and, of course, I expect to address myself to the contested-election case which is now before us.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will permit me—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Without prejudice, I withdraw the motion that is pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to Senate resolution 172, submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], and the Senator from Ohio is entitled to the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, we are considering the sanctity of the title of a sitting Member to his seat in this Chamber. It has been my privilege, or perhaps rather my responsibility, to sit in two similar cases since I began my service in this Chamber. The one resulted in the unseating of Mr. Lorimer. The other resulted in clearing the title of Mr. Stephenson to his seat in the Chamber.

I prefer to feel that 96 Senators, representing 48 different sovereign States, are going to hear and determine this case upon the evidence and under the law. I am not going to surrender that belief unless I am compelled to do so. The sitting Member is entitled to have a full and fair consideration and discussion of the question. The people of the great State of Michigan likewise are entitled to that consideration of the contest. Perhaps more than all else a right decision will affect the dignity and the honor of the 95 other Members of this Chamber.

Some of the developments of this case have reminded me of a story that was related to me by a distinguished Member of this body concerning his experiences in the House many years ago. There was then pending a contested-election case, and this Senator, then a Member of the House, attempted to discuss the merits of that case in the presence of the distinguished Speaker, Hon. Tom Reed. Mr. Reed replied to him, "Mr. Congressman, you are discussing the merits of the case. I would have you understand that the only time the House decides politically is when it sits judicially." I wonder whether Mr. Reed might not have been looking into the future and had a vision of some of the things that have been said and done in connection with this case.

Mr. President, before I shall begin to discuss what I conceive to be the law and the evidence, it is my desire to throw aside some of the flotsam and jetsam that seem to be surrounding the merits of this case. On yesterday reference was had to the fact that the grand jury in the city of New York had begun an investigation of the case, 500 or 600 miles away from the sovereign State of Michigan, and I judge that it was intended that the inference should be drawn that Members of the Senate who might not agree with the majority were in some respect responsible for that. Senators, I hold no brief for the Department of Justice, but I know that there was a great scandal connected with the election contest in Michigan; and it seems that the sitting Member filed his expense accounts with the Secretary of the United States Senate, having made affidavit thereto and having filed it in the city of New York.

Under the corrupt practices act that was regarded as the filing of the expense statement within the contemplation of its terms. So that question came up for investigation, whether rightly or wrongly, before the grand jury sitting in the city of New York. But, Mr. President, it was not Mr. Ford nor was it the United States district attorney that was responsible for delay in that instance; it was Mr. Newberry's attorney who began a habeas corpus proceeding at the time certain witnesses were called before the grand jury by the United States Government, they, under instructions of their counsel, refusing to testify before the grand jury. The brilliant attorney representing Mr. Newberry thought to determine the constitutionality of the Federal primary law in a habeas corpus proceeding. If there was any attorney in the United States outside of the brilliant attorney who represented Mr. Newberry, and who was trying to clog the wheels of justice, who believed that the constitutionality of a statute could be determined by a habeas corpus proceeding, thereby preventing the United States grand jury from looking into the merits of what has perhaps excited more comment than any other election case in the history of the United States Senate, I am not advised of the fact.

Mr. President, that case was heard and determined in the district court, and later it came on appeal to the United States Supreme Court. It was decided in 1918 and will be found on page 273 of the two hundred and fiftieth volume of the United States Supreme Court Reports. Three of the parties to the proceeding were Blair, the treasurer of the committee; Templeton, the chairman of the committee; and Phillips, who was one of the publicity men.

Of course, the Supreme Court did what every lawyer expected to be done—affirmed the decision of the lower court, taking the position that the constitutionality of the statute could not be determined by that court in that case, and that they had no right to interfere with the orderly procedure of the grand jury. So much for that.

Mr. President, it is said in criticism of the conduct of this proceeding that it was taken afterwards before the grand jury sitting at Grand Rapids, Mich., and some inference ought to be drawn from that suggestion, perhaps, that those who have felt that this matter should be investigated were guilty of some high crimes and misdemeanors. Again I say, I hold no brief for the Department of Justice; but suffice it to say that the grand jury sat at Grand Rapids, which is in the State of Michigan, as Detroit is in the State of Michigan, and if it is suggested that Mr. Newberry's home was in Detroit, I answer, on the other hand, that Mr. Ford's home was in Detroit; and if it is attempted to suggest that some disadvantage to Mr. Newberry was sought in that proceeding, I again answer, with equal facility and felicity, that, perhaps, it was a disadvantage to Mr. Ford if he took any part in those proceedings; but I am advised that he did not.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. SPENCER. Was Mr. Ford directly or indirectly a party to those proceedings in the United States court at Grand Rapids?

Mr. POMERENE. I am advised that he had nothing whatever to do with them; but the primary election covered the entire State of Michigan, and it was the theory of that case, in part, that there was a conspiracy to defeat the provisions of the Federal statute as well as of the State statute. I do not understand why it can be a subject of criticism at this hour of the proceedings that the United States district attorney did not pursue the course which the distinguished chairman of the committee referred to on yesterday.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. I will try not to interrupt the Senator often, but, if Mr. Ford was in no sense a party to that proceeding, then, so far as Mr. Ford was concerned, he would have no interest as to where that case was tried.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is quite right, and I can go a little further and suggest that, in view of the fact that the minority members of the committee agree with the majority members of the committee that Mr. Ford is not entitled to the seat here, I am at a loss to understand why so much attention should be paid to Mr. Ford. The question before us is simply this: Is or is not Mr. Newberry entitled to his seat? That is the only question involved.

Mr. President, let me go a step further. Reference has been made to delay. I am surprised that the majority members of the committee should say anything about delay. This matter was first called to the attention of the United States Senate in September, 1918, the primary having been held on August 27 of that year. I sought then to have an investigation, not because the sitting Senate at that time would have had jurisdiction finally to determine the case, but for two reasons: First, that the real evidence might be preserved, and, secondly, in order to assist us in coming to a conclusion as to whether or not there should be additional legislation to safeguard elections.

I am sure that the conscience of the Senate, both on the Republican side of the Chamber and on the Democratic side of the Chamber, was shocked to think that under the provisions of the Federal and State statutes $176,000 could be expended in order that a man might secure a nomination for a seat in the Senate which paid $7,500 a year. I know from conversations that I have had with Republican Members—and, of course, I shall not violate the proprieties by naming Senators—that they wanted the investigation to proceed, but it was blocked, and it was blocked on the other side of the Chamber.

Later on, after the ideas of November, 1918, when it was shown that the Republican Party was in control of both the House and the Senate, again I made repeated efforts to have this question taken up, not that it should be decided at that time but in order to preserve the testimony. Again, however, it was blocked, but with assurances that there would be no obstacles placed in the way of an investigation after the Congress which had just expired should take its seat.

Mr. President, while this controversy was pending indictments were returned in Michigan, and then my Democratic colleagues on the committee joined with me, as well as with the majority members, in the suggestion that while that case was pending and before it was tried nothing should be done in the United States Senate which would in the least tend to prejudice the minds of the jurors or interfere with a fair trial. That part of the delay was almost by unanimous consent; and I would again take the same action under similar circumstances, for, if there is one thing that is dear to my heart as a lawyer and as a Senator, it is that in America all issues of fact and of law shall be determined in accordance with the true merits of the case.

Later on, after this case found its way into the United States Supreme Court and there were further delays, again I was one of those who insisted that the hearings should go on in the interest of speed and of justice, with the understanding that no report should be made until the Supreme Court handed down its decision; but there was one obstruction after another. The majority, whether rightly or wrongly, took the position that nothing should be done until the Supreme Court handed down its decision. I believe I must modify that statement, perhaps, by saying that there was an agreement that the ballots and the election records should be preserved, by some order of the court or otherwise, pending this proceeding.

The count was had. Reference has been made to the fact that charges were presented to the Senate relating to the general election as well as to the primary election. Let me suggest to Senators that they keep in mind the fact that counter charges were also filed by the contestee against the contestant; and during the progress of the hearings, and I think at a very early day in the hearings, the sitting Member, through his counsel, withdrew all of the charges so far as they related to Mr. Ford. Of course, I take it, having withdrawn that issue, that no Member of the Senate, whether he is a lawyer or a layman, would expect the committee to investigate charges which were voluntarily withdrawn.

I do not know why Mr. Ford and his attorneys did not see fit to go into the general election. They saw fit to base their claims upon irregularities—aye, constructive corruption—of the primary. If, under this testimony, the Senate is to decide that there was no such illegality, no such corruption, and no such extravagance at the primary as to deny the sitting Member his seat, I take it that I can assume that they would do no differently if all of the testimony with regard to the election campaign were before that committee.

The Supreme Court finally decided this case. By five to four they held the law unconstitutional. As a lawyer and as a Senator I accept their judgment, though I can not approve it. I prefer the sentiment expressed by Mr. Chief Justice White, now deceased, and Mr. Justice Pitney, who delivered the minority opinion. It has always seemed strange to me that the majority of the Supreme Court should hold that the provision of the Constitution, in so far as it relates to the election of Senators, was not comprehensive enough to embrace primary elections, when I remember that in a somewhat analogous case, which was referred to in the record here, it was held by the Supreme Court that under the provision of the Federal Constitution which declares that presidential electors may be appointed in such way as the legislatures of the several States may determine, an election by a popular vote was an appointment within the meaning of the Constitution. That, however, is water over the wheel; and now what is the situation?

So far as the merits of this particular case are concerned, we must consider them under the State statute, supplemented by the fact that certain affidavits were filed with the Secretary of the Senate under the Federal statute, affidavits made by the sitting Member, affidavits in which he swore that he disbursed nothing, that nothing was contributed to him, and that nothing was either contributed or disbursed by anyone with his knowledge or with his consent. Whether the Supreme Court was right or not in holding that the corrupt practices act, so far as it relates to primaries, was unconstitutional, the moral obloquy is the same when a man holds up his hand in the presence of the Almighty and swears that the facts contained in that affidavit are true. That much I claim for that part of the record.

It will be remembered that there are 83 counties in Michigan, containing 2,820 voting districts or precincts. At the November election, according to the official returns, there were 432,541 votes cast. Mr. Newberry received 220,054 votes; Mr. Henry Ford, 212,487 votes. Mr. Newberry's plurality, according to the official count in Michigan, was 7,567 votes; but on the recount, though the ballots in some precincts had been destroyed—whether rightly or wrongly, we have not been able to determine, suffice it to say that there was an agreement in this final count to accept the official returns of the State of Michigan in those several precincts as the correct count; and under this recount, instead of Mr. Newberry having a plurality of 7,567, his plurality was reduced to 4,834.

Mr. President, of course that is a plurality; but there is a great deal of difference between the plurality as found by the State authorities of Michigan and the plurality as found by the experts representing the committee, so that on the face of it there is some justification for the charges that were made that there were irregularities at the election.

Now, Mr. President, let me go a step further.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether, in his judgment, there were any evidences of fraud in the election, as shown by the recount of the ballots?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think I have already said to the Senate that no evidence was introduced—perhaps I should qualify that by saying no evidence other than the count which was made—and I make no charges and shall make none, so far as the conduct of the general election was concerned. I shall address myself to the primary election.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the question of the recount, I should like to know what was the nature of the mistakes which were discovered upon the recount, and what was it that made that difference?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, a part of the record here will show that; but I think that is somewhat beside the merits of the case as it is presented here, for the reason that there were experts representing both Mr. Ford and Mr. Newberry, and I think they agreed as to the report which was made. There were some defective ballots; there were some mistakes as to the name, and a number of other irregularities of that kind. I am not prepared to catalogue them at this time.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sure that in the count of that number of ballots some irregular ballots must appear, but such a discrepancy in favor of one candidate is rather impressive.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is right about that; but in view of the final result I have dismissed that part of the case from my consideration, and expect to devote the rest of my time to the consideration of the law and the evidence on the question of corruption and extravagance.

Now, I want to call the Senate's attention briefly to the statutes of the State of Michigan. Section 3828 limits the amount of expenditure. I may say that this limitation applies expressly to governors and other State officials, but there is another section of the statute which provides that the same limitation which is applied to the nomination and election of governors shall apply to the nomination and election of United States Senators, and under the statutes of Michigan the maximum expenditure by a candidate for United States Senator, both at the primary and at the general election, is an amount equivalent to 50 per cent of the first year's salary, or $3,750, and there was expended by this political committee $176,000, admittedly; nay, more than that, because afterwards they came in and said that they paid out from twelve to fifteen thousand dollars of which they said they knew nothing at the time they filed the account.

Let me call the attention of the Senate now to section 3829, which provides that "every political committee shall appoint a treasurer." A political committee was appointed. Mr. Templeton, the business associate of Mr. Newberry, was the chairman of the general committee. Mr. Paul H. King, another friend, was the acting chairman of the general committee. He was really the executive head. Mr. Blair, his banker, was the treasurer of the committee.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the only kinds of expenditure which can be justified or permitted in Michigan. Section 3830 provides:

No candidate and no treasurer of any political committee shall pay, give, or lend, or agree to pay, give, or lend, either directly or indirectly, any money or other valuable thing for any nomination or election expenses whatever, except for the following purposes—

There are 11 of them. They are:

First. For traveling expenses and personal expenses incident thereto, for printing, stationery, advertising, postage, expressage, freight, telegraph, telephone, and public-messenger services.

Second. For dissemination of printed information to the public.

Third. For political meetings, demonstrations, and conventions.

Fourth. For the rent, maintenance, and furnishing of offices.

Fifth. For the payment of clerks, typewriters, stenographers, janitors, and messengers actually employed.

Sixth. For the employment of challengers at primaries and elections to the number allowed by law as such.

Seventh. For the payment of public speakers and musicians at public meetings and their necessary traveling expenses.

Eighth. For copying and classifying of election registers or poll lists and investigating the right to vote of the persons listed or registered therein, and conducting proceedings to purge the registers and lists and prevent improper or unlawful registration or voting.

Ninth. For making canvasses of voters.

And I want to call attention to that in a moment, because it is the only class of expenditures about which there can be any doubt whatsoever as to its true conception.

Tenth. For conveying infirm or disabled voters to and from the polls.

Eleventh. For employing as counsel attorneys licensed to practice in accordance with the laws of the State, and for the necessary expenses of such counsel.

Now, let me call attention further to other sections, which will be explanatory of those, and bear in mind as I read the next section that while there was an alleged account of receipts and disbursements by the committee, there was no account filed by Mr. Newberry, as the statutes of the State of Michigan required. I read from section 3831:

Every candidate and every treasurer of a political committee shall, within 10 days after any primary election—file an account.

And so forth—

And then, omitting a part of the language which is not pertinent to the question I am seeking to raise, it says that he shall—prepare and file in the office of the county clerk of the county in which such candidate or treasurer resides—

Now, note—

a full, true, and detailed account and statement, subscribed and sworn to by him before an officer authorized to administer oaths, setting forth each and every sum of money received or disbursed by him for nomination or election expenses, the date of each receipt, the name of the person from whom received or to whom paid, and the person to whom and object or purpose for which disbursed. Such statements shall also set forth the unpaid debts and obligations, if any, of such candidate or committee incurred for the purposes set forth in section 3 of this act, with the nature and amount of each, and to whom owing, in detail, and if there are no such unpaid debts or obligations of such candidate or committee such statement shall state such fact.

When we called the committee's attention to the fact that there was no account of the receipts or expenditures after the primary the distinguished and very clever counsel representing Mr. Newberry said, "There is no provision in the statute for pick-ups after the primary." Those are his words. But under this statute, if it were complied with, there could be no pick-ups, because they were obliged to file an account showing every receipt and every expenditure, the purposes for which the expenditures were made, and if there were any unpaid indebtedness, to show that fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What did he mean by "pick-ups"?

Mr. POMERENE. Receipts or expenditures which might come in after he had filed the account. He referred to them as "pick-ups"; but there could have been none if there had been a compliance with this law. Then, let me remind Senators that Mr. King, the chairman of the political committee, who had most to do with the making out of this account, was himself a lawyer, skilled in political methods in Michigan, and he had employed his own partner as a lawyer and paid him a fee of $500 to keep them in the straight and narrow path provided for under this primary law.

Mr. President, if Senators are interested in these facts—and I shall assume they are, notwithstanding the empty benches in the Chamber—I think I have the ability to make myself understood by judges who are interested, even if they do not agree with me, but I can not make the empty seats transmit intelligence to those who do not occupy them. Before I pass to the other provisions of this statute, let me call attention to this account which was filed, and which appears in the bill of exceptions, beginning on page 252 and ending on page 283. Mr. President, much of this expense was for advertising. At the head of the account the accountant summarizes the expenditures under seven heads, and my friend, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], who occupied the floor of the Senate yesterday, paid a great deal of attention to it.

The seven subheads were—

For advertising and other publicity	$147,800.16
Office expenses, including rent, furniture, light, and clerk hire	9,070.13
Telephone, telegraph, and other charges	1,514.14
Traveling expenses	9,104.52
Copying of election registers and canvassing the voters	4,375.38
Salaries and compensation not otherwise charged	4,143.75

But you will observe that there is nothing said about automobile hire; there is nothing said about the hiring of workers at the polls, or the amount that was paid therefor; there is nothing said about the money which was expended for cigars, for beer, for liquor, and for treats, and there is some evidence in the record on that subject. This account was filed, not for the purpose of showing what was done, but it was filed in a way to conceal the purposes of the expenditures, and if Senators will be patient with me I think I will make that perfectly clear before I shall have concluded my argument.

Mr. President, let me go a step further. This statute provides that—

It shall be unlawful to administer the oath of office or to issue a commission or certificate of nomination or election to any person nominated or elected to any public office until he has filed an account.

Mr. Newberry did not file any account, and so the authorities of the State of Michigan did not have any right to issue a certificate of nomination to Mr. Newberry, because he had not filed his account, and he has not done it yet, so far as I know.

Now, let me go a step further. Section 3834 provides, in part, that the several officers shall investigate these things, "and if upon examination of the official ballot it appears that any person has failed to file a statement as required by law, or if it appears to any such officer that the statement filed with him does not conform to law, or upon complaint in writing by a candidate or by a voter that a statement filed does not conform to the truth, or that any person has failed to file a statement which he is by law required to file, said officer shall forthwith, in writing, notify the delinquent person to comply with this act."

That was not done at all. Mr. Newberry contents himself with filing his account here in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, in which he says he received nothing and expended nothing and that nothing was received or expended with his knowledge or consent.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator is quite right as to the law of Michigan, which gives to any voter the right to complain of any untruthful or inadequate statement in a report. Does it strike the Senator as significant that not a single voter in the State of Michigan made any such complaint?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it strikes me as very significant that the officeholders up there did not file any such complaint. I can not answer for the electorate, but I can answer for the officers whose sworn duty it is to see that the law is enforced.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. The lieutenant governor, who was a Republican, filed complaint in an address to the people of Michigan, in which he pronounced that election as the most corrupt ever held in the State.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; and I hope our good friends on the other side who speak of the purity of this election and of the awful injustice that is being done to the sitting Member will have a little thought for the injustice that is being done the great electorate of the State of Michigan.

Now, Mr. President, let me go a step further. I wish again to call attention to the account to which I have referred, and I hope Senators who are interested in it will study it. I hope those Members of the Senate who are here will take my request out to the Senators who are in the cloakroom. It may not hurt their consciences to pass judgment upon a case of this kind, but it would hurt mine if I were similarly derelict.

Bear in mind now that they had not only the corrupt practices act in Michigan, but they had what is denominated a primary act. I take it that lawyers who do me the honor to listen will agree with me on the proposition that these statutes, though they are in different acts of the legislature, must be construed together so as, if possible, to give full force and effect to the entire statutes of the State.

Mr. President, I am just reminded that the absentees now for the most part are the Senators on the other side of the Chamber who wanted me to proceed last night after we had been in session nearly six and a half hours.

Section 45 of the Michigan primary act—and notice the language is confused—in substance reads:

SEC. 45. Every person who, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person in his behalf, gives, lends, or agrees to give or lend, or offers or promises any money or valuable consideration, or promises or endeavors to procure any money or valuable consideration or office, place, or employment, to or for any voter, or to or for any person on behalf of any voter, or to or for any person in order to induce or have such person induce any voter to vote for or refrain from voting for, or support or oppose any candidate, or on account of such voter having voted or refrained from voting at any primary election in this State—

And further—

every person who by any means receives, agrees, or contracts for any money, gift—

Then I omit a certain part of the statute which is not pertinent and read further—or for inducing or undertaking to induce any other person to vote in a particular manner—or to do or perform any of the acts or things forbidden by this act, or on account of agreeing to do, or having done any campaign work, electioneering, soliciting votes for such candidate on primary day or prior thereto, or who after any primary election in this State, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person in his behalf, gives or receives any money or valuable consideration or office, position, or employment on account of any person having voted or refrained from voting, or having induced any other person to vote or refrain from voting at any such primary election; or having induced or undertaken to induce any other person to vote in a particular manner or for any particular candidate at any such primary election, or on account of any person having done or been a party to doing anything forbidden by this act.

Now note—

That language is pretty comprehensive. Now, note what follows, and I would like Senators on the other side—the few who are in their seats—to bear this fact in mind in considering this act as well as the corrupt practices act:

It being the intent of this clause to prohibit the prevailing practice of candidates hiring with money and promises of positions, etc., workers on primary day and prior thereto.

Now, I call the attention of Senators to the fact that in the record of the alleged account which was filed it does not show a single dollar that was expended for workers at the polls or prior to primary day, and when the intelligent committee prepared that account and filed it, I think I am justified in saying that the clever lawyers who had a part in its preparation knew that they were defying the law of the State of Michigan, and their purposes are apparent.

But now let me go a little further.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I wish to call attention to a matter that must be obvious to all. It was contended that this matter, so important, should be discussed in the presence of as many Senators as possible. There have been only a few Senators present upon the Republican side. Several are coming in now. I think there are 12 on the Republican side now, including the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and a few others. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Hefflin	Nelson	Smoot
Broussard	Hitchcock	New	Spencer
Calder	Johnson	Nicholson	Sterling
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Sutherland
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Swanson
Culberson	Kendrick	Oddie	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Trammell
Dial	Keyes	Page	Wadsworth
Elkins	King	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	La Follette	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	McCormick	Ransdell	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Robinson	Watson, Ga.
Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard	Watson, Ind.
Harris	McKinley	Simmons	Williams
Harrison	McNary	Smith

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, just before the quorum call was made I directed the attention of the Senate to the fact that the primary law in the State of Michigan declared it to be the intent of the legislature to prohibit the prevailing practice of candidates hiring with money and promises of position, and so forth, workers on the primary day and prior thereto. In order that I may fasten this down, I am going to refer to the bill of exceptions. One of the very active political geniuses who were in charge of the Newberry campaign was Charles A. Floyd. On July 25, 1918, he sent a report to Paul H. King, the chairman, as to the conditions in Kent, Barry, Ionia, Montcalm, Newaygo, Ottawa, Allegan, Muskegon, Mason, Wexford, Leelanau, Grand Traverse, Antrim, Charlevoix, and Emmet Counties. Mr. Floyd was one of the field agents who went around and distributed the Newberry funds. He had an account from Grand Rapids for a time.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Will the Senator allow me to inquire from what page he is reading?

Mr. POMERENE. I am reading, beginning on page 851, from the bill of exceptions in what is called, at least in my report, the record, which includes the testimony which was taken before the Senate committee and the bill of exceptions which was used in the Supreme Court and which, by unanimous consent, was made a part of the record.

Now, let us see what he says about workers. On page 854 Mr. Floyd told Mr. King—and Mr. King's was the fine Italian hand that prepared this report or completed it after Mr. Emery had fainted because of his efforts to make out the report and had left.

All the original books and papers of entry are gone, and we have only the secondary report here—five hundred and odd checks out of eighteen hundred plus checks issued for this purpose. There is a schedule of checks and, I believe, of some newspaper accounts for advertising. However, I am diverting.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to ask the Senator from Ohio what about the stubs from which the checks were drawn?

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Montana ought not to ask me a question of that kind. The Senator is interfering with the hallowed privileges of the sitting Member and his counsel not to give that information; and they have the support of the majority members of the subcommittee. The Senator from Montana should be content with the affidavit which is filed in the office of the Secretary of the Senate to the effect that "I know nothing about it; nothing was done with my consent."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator stated that these checks and records were gone.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What became of them?

Mr. POMERENE. Well, the order was given that superfluous papers should be taken down to the furnace from day to day.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. When was that?

Mr. POMERENE. And a good deal of it was done before the account was filed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So that it was all before the grand jury proceeding?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes; that part of it was.

But let us read this from page 854 of the bill of exceptions; it is most interesting. I hope the Republican Senators on the other side of the Chamber will convey this information to those absent Senators who are going to vote to continue Mr. Newberry in his seat. There are a good many "innocents abroad" in the United States Senate.

In addition to the above—

He has given a summary of this situation—

In addition to the above and in general, I have encouraged all the organizations to make as wide a distribution of literature as possible during the remaining days of the campaign.

Now, notice—

I have arranged with them also to provide for representation at each voting precinct the entire day of the primaries so that through this whole district—

The 8 or 10 counties to which he is referring—so that through this whole district you can be sure that there will be at least one man and in some cases two or three giving their entire time in saying the final word.

O Mr. President, think of the situation, when his own friends say that Mr. Newberry was not known to a thousand men in Michigan, and when the report of the majority says he was not known to very many!

Now, Mr. President, let me go a step further with the statute. I have read to Senators section 45, showing what the intent of the law was to prevent the employment of workers at the polls; but, perhaps, I will be met with the statement that this applies to candidates. I do not know that I will, but I assume so. Section 48 provides, so far as it is pertinent to the question of the primary act:

It shall be unlawful for any other person to do or perform for or on behalf of any such candidate or to help or injure the candidacy of any candidate, any of the acts or things which it is by this act made unlawful for such candidate to do.

In other words, the candidate could not employ workers and neither could the campaign committee.

Mr. President, I think if we will bear in mind these provisions of the Michigan statute they will aid us in construing some of the testimony that is in the record—I may say "embalmed in the record." Some Senators do not care even to investigate the embalmed record; they are not even interested in reading the report; they are not interested in hearing discussion. Why, Mr. President—and this is one of the acts because of which I complain against the committee—when my associate on the minority side of that committee, the then Senator from Delaware, Mr. Wolcott, who now is chancellor of the State of Delaware, while I was absent because of a previous engagement which I had made in my own State, asked that there might be an oral argument, the distinguished Senator from Indiana said there shall be no oral argument. A judicial proceeding conducted in a judicial manner, indeed! Mr. President, if we had been sitting as a trial court an appellate court would have reversed the lower court for gross errors committed in denying certain motions.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In connection with the matter just read by the Senator concerning the employment of workers on the day of the primary who were to give the "final word," I read from the majority report as follows:

The evidence entirely fails to sustain this charge, for it is clearly shown that those employed by the Newberry campaign committee—that is to say, clerks, stenographers, field men, and publicity men—are not in any sense within the prohibition of the Michigan statute.

I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri under which one of these classes he lists the workers just referred to by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will read the law which has been quoted by the Senator—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am not speaking about the law; I am speaking about the report. We have just learned from the testimony given us by the Senator from Ohio that there were men employed who were to be at every polling place in a half dozen different counties on the primary day and have the "final word" with the voters before they went to vote.

The Senator in his report tells the Senate "that those employed by the Newberry campaign committee—that is to say, clerks, stenographers, field men, and publicity men—are not in any sense within the prohibition of the statute." I wanted to know from the Senator whether the men just referred to by the Senator from Ohio were clerks, stenographers, field men, or publicity men?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will find them included under the general head of salaries and other compensation. The Senator will find them in detail—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator want to know?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am not asking under what head they will be found; I am asking the Senator from Missouri—

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator from Montana want to know? If he does, I will answer him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator only will answer my question, I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. SPENCER. He will find them in detail—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator has advised us that none were employed except these four classes, and I am asking the Senator under which class he puts this lot of men.

Mr. SPENCER. That is exactly what I am trying to answer the Senator, if he will allow me. He will find that in detail under the head of "Field men and publicity," and under the general head he will find it under "Publicity and salaries and other expenses."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator let me finish my answer, inasmuch as he has asked for it? If the Senator will look at the interpretation of the law concerning which he is now speaking in the State of Michigan, he will find that it does not have reference to a man, on primary day or before primary day, who engages in the legitimate work of promoting the candidacy of the man in whom he is interested. Every Senator has had those men, and always will. The law refers to the bribery or corruption of voters, and to the use of workers, on primary day or before then, for that unlawful purpose of bribery or corruption. To say that either under the law of the State of Michigan or under the common law or in common sense it is wrong or illegal for you or me or any other candidate to have a friend who does his best on election day in a lawful manner for my candidacy or yours is ridiculous.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is not the question I asked the Senator at all, as everybody knows.

Mr. SPENCER. I have answered the question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator has not answered it, and he knows he has not answered it. I did not ask him what the law provides or for any argument about it. Whether it is right or whether it is wrong, I will canvass at the proper time. The Senator has told the Senate in his report that everybody who was hired came under one of four classes, and I have simply asked him under which class he puts these men.

Mr. SPENCER. I have answered the Senator that he will find them under one of two classes—the field men or the publicity.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Missouri has been a judge, and the Senator knows that he has not answered the question of the Senator from Montana; and the Senator knows, too, that when he makes the answer that he does make he ignores the provisions of sections 45 and 48 of the primary act, to which I have called attention. There is not any question about that.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I can not allow to stand unchallenged the statement of the Senator from Missouri that every Senator hires paid workers on election day or at any other time. I state to the Senate most emphatically that I have condemned such practices and never hired a paid worker in my life, on election day or at any other time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to repeat that statement for myself.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me corroborate what the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Mississippi have said by adding that in the State of Ohio they used to employ workers. It is now absolutely forbidden, and they are not even allowed to haul voters to the polls.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask a question, because this is a phase of the matter which I confess has been difficult for me to solve. Do I understand that the able Senator from Missouri takes the position that under the primary law of Michigan you may hire a man to go to the polls on election day and pay him for advocating your cause?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly not at the polls. Every State has a law that at the polls, and within a certain district around the polls, there can be neither advocacy nor publicity.

Mr. BORAH. When I say "at the polls," I do not mean within the prohibited distance, 150 feet; but I ask this because I know that the Senator has given much time to the study of the law of this matter, and that is what interests me. Can you hire men to devote their energies and their efforts to your candidacy upon election day, whether they are 500 feet from the polls or 1,000 feet from them?

Mr. SPENCER. In Missouri you can. In Michigan you can. If the law in the State of Ohio is as I have no doubt it is, because the Senator so states it, there seems to be a law against it. In other words, the answer I make to the Senator's question is that there is no inherent impropriety or wrong in a campaign committee or in a candidate having a friend under hire, if you like—

Mr. POMERENE. At the polls?

Mr. SPENCER. For the purpose of bringing men to the polls, or for the purpose of seeing, around in the community where he lives, that voters vote. Of course, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] have no concern about the general election. When they have once been nominated, under their system of procedure, it is ended.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, let us stick to our mutt-tons. We are discussing now the Michigan law and what was done there. Let us not be diverted by these other matters, I beg.

Mr. SPENCER. May I answer the Senator on the Michigan law?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will bear me out in the statement that section 45, to which the Senator has referred, commences in its first statement by prohibiting anything that looks to the bribery or corruption of a voter. That is the first and the fundamental purpose of that section.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. May I finish my sentence?

Mr. POMERENE. I wish the Senator's horizon were broad enough to enable him to take into consideration an entire statute, and not pick out one sentence of a statute.

Mr. SPENCER. Evidently the Senator does not care for the facts.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have not gone so far into this case that I have any feeling about it. I want to know if it is the view of the able Senator from Missouri that under the Michigan law—I am not speaking now about the law of other States, nor the common law, nor the morals of it—you are permitted to hire men to advocate your cause upon election day? I do not care where they are with reference to the polls. Can you plant them all over the country, in the different precincts, and so forth, and, under pay, have them advocate your cause upon that day?

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator refers to the candidate himself, he has certain limitations under the law as to the amount of money he can expend. Within those limitations he has, under the Michigan law, the perfect right to have aiders or helpers or those who on election day shall bring out the vote; and in the case at bar the testimony shows that the candidate himself had nothing whatever to do with it. Any committee of voluntary friends that had his candidacy at heart could, under the Michigan law, do precisely the same thing.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator, in that connection, allow me to read the statute?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I will.

Mr. POMERENE. I think, perhaps, the Senator was not in the Chamber at the moment that I read that awhile ago.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I was, but I shall be glad to have it read again.

Mr. POMERENE. In prohibiting expenditures, it says, in section 45:

Or for inducing or undertaking to induce any other person to vote in a particular manner, or to do or perform any of the acts or things forbidden by this act, or on account of doing or agreeing to do, or having done any campaign work, electioneering, soliciting votes for such candidates on primary day or prior thereto, or who after any primary election in this State, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other person in his behalf, gives or receives any money or valuable consideration—

And so forth.

Now, let me read a little further.

Mr. SPENCER. I wish the Senator would read it all.

Mr. POMERENE. I did read it all, sir, before.

Mr. SPENCER. I wish the Senator would.

Mr. POMERENE. My good and genial friend from Missouri does not remember all of this. Then the last sentence reads like this:

It being the intent of this clause to prohibit the prevailing practice of candidates hiring with money and promises of positions, etc., workers on primary day and prior thereto.

Now, let me call attention to section 48. Section 45 may be construed to apply to the candidate or somebody who is acting for him; but, as if to make the rule absolutely certain, iron-clad, and riveted, it says:

It shall be unlawful for any other person to do or perform for or on behalf of any such candidate, or to help or injure the candidacy of any candidate, any of the acts or things which it is by this act made unlawful for such candidate to do.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, now may I ask the Senator from Ohio if in the State of Michigan a man is running for office, and one of his friends on election day goes up and down the corridor of the office building in which he works and says to those whom he knows in that office building, "Have you voted? I hope you will vote for my friend, and not forget to vote," is that man, under the Senator's interpretation, a criminal under the laws of Michigan?

Mr. POMERENE. Is my good friend from Missouri asking that question seriously, or is he trying to evade the issue?

Mr. SPENCER. Absolutely seriously, in view of what the Senator has said.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well. I shall answer it. Of course, that is not a criminal act; but if I go out and hire that man with my money, then I am guilty of an offense; and if I have a committee to do that—I may call it an independent committee of my friends—but when I have selected the personnel of that committee, when I am in constant conference with them, when they write 50,000 letters which they send to me to sign as if I had written them, when I am in constant conference with them as to the policies of the campaign, when I say to them that if we keep up our publicity campaign we will keep certain other candidates out of the race, when I call up my confidential man, who is made the sewer through which the voters of Michigan are to be misled, and complain to him about the extravagant use of money to the extent that it is depleting my business accounts, and there are 10 of them that were thus depleted, when I express the situation in this wise, to use the language of the confidential man, Smith: "Truman Newberry, the candidate, was kicking about the balances," when I am drawn that near to the friends, and I have had nothing to do with it, I am reckless of the truth when I say that it was a campaign conducted by my friends voluntarily. God save the mark!

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the Senator knows that I do not believe that the record has the slightest foundation for any of those fancies or inferences which he is pleased to state.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. But may I answer the Senator's question?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has already said that in his judgment the man who gave his own time to request men to go to the polls and vote was entirely within his rights. I now ask him this question: If that man, unable to give his own time, should say to some one in his office, "You take the day off. Here is your pay for the day. You go up and down this building and find out how many have not voted, and ask them if they will be good enough to vote, and vote for my candidate," does the Senator think that man has then made himself a criminal under the laws of the State of Michigan?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I should deem myself most happy if I could get the Senator from Missouri to keep his attention to the record in this case, and not discuss a record which is not before the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. I think the Senator has made all the answer to that question that he can make.

Mr. POMERENE. I have answered it, sir. There is nothing wrong in asking a clerk or somebody else to go out to do certain work; but when I hire a man for that purpose and pay him for what he does, then, if I were a candidate in Michigan, I would be violating the law; and, Mr. President, let me go a step further, in view of what the Senator has said.

If I were a candidate I would challenge anyone who would dispute my title to a seat if my affidavit which I filed was true. If I had filed an affidavit saying that I had contributed nothing and expended nothing, and that no friend had contributed or expended anything with my knowledge or consent, I would be a man, I would not be a mouse; I would not claim my privilege in the criminal courts and refuse to go on the stand.

Senators, if a committee of my colleagues in this Chamber were appointed and clothed with the power to investigate my title to my seat and the truthfulness of my affidavit you would not have to ask me to go before that committee. I would be there.

I want to make two observations, now, and I measure my words. I do not know how any Senator whose seat is thus challenged can have the effrontery to ask his colleagues to sustain his title to his seat when he refuses to make an explanation. I go further; I do not understand how Senators sitting on a committee can ask their colleagues to sustain their report when they refuse to tell their colleagues what the defense of Mr. Newberry is, what explanation he has to make of these facts.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to ask the Senator, because it is not quite clear in my mind, whether Mr. Newberry was invited to appear before the committee?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator for asking that question. I was about to take that up a moment ago, but I forgot it. Let me recite a little of the history of this case.

I have detailed to the Senate how very earnest the majority members of the committee were to prevent this investigation up to a certain point, and then it was rushed along, rushed along sometimes in the absence of some members of the committee; but I am not finding fault with that. I trust I am not violating any confidences when I say that one day I brought the subject up in the committee and asked if Mr. Newberry would be before that committee to explain his status, and one of the majority members of that committee said, "I will never invite him to come here."

I referred a moment ago to the fact that on one day, because of a speaking engagement which I had made several weeks before, when I had no reason to expect that there would be any hearing on that particular day, I was not able to be at the committee meeting, and the member of the committee from Delaware, Senator Wolcott, represented the minority, and Mr. Fred P. Smith, the confidential attorney in fact of the Newberrys, was there, and I had no opportunity to examine him. Senator Wolcott cross-examined him in a very able way. There were certain questions which I wanted to ask, but he was excused, and I was not permitted an opportunity, and in my absence, when I had no reason to believe that the hearings were going to be closed, they were closed. Senator Wolcott asked that this matter might be postponed until I should return. I want to read what occurred in that regard. I read from the record, page 861.

Senator WOLCOTT. I want the record to show that the chairman is speaking for the committee (and that means a majority of the committee) with reference to the taking of the testimony of these two witnesses, Joy and Emery. I myself have never as yet seen the information before the committee as to the physical condition of these men. Of course, I would not agree that they should not be examined until I at least had seen the information. I do not know that it is at all worth while for me to urge it, because the majority of the committee has reached the conclusion that we do not want to hear anything from those gentlemen.

From the testimony that has been adduced here I am clearly and firmly of the opinion that if it would be at all possible to take the testimony of these men without seriously jeopardizing their welfare it should be taken. If necessary, the committee ought to let enough time elapse to have their condition improve so that we can take the testimony. I do not know what the information is as to the physical condition of these gentlemen, but if it is bad right now it may be better next week.

In view of the fact that this committee spent about one year and a half, more or less, in getting started on this investigation, I can see no great necessity for trying to save a few days to wind it up, now that we have started it at a belated hour. I can not understand the speed and haste of the whole proceeding, after such a long delay in starting it.

I might say that I have asked my associates on the committee to defer decision of these matters until Senator POMERENE returns. I know his interest in the matter and his desire to be here before things are finally and definitely closed up. The committee, however, does not see fit to wait for the return of Senator POMERENE, and I am utterly helpless, of course, to stay the progress of the committee in reaching its conclusion.

Mr. President, there is more to that same effect which I might read, but I shall defer that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator goes further, let me say that I am afraid he did not quite understand the question of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. POMERENE. I am coming to that now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Iowa asked whether the Senator from Michigan ever appeared before the committee and testified in his own behalf.

Mr. POMERENE. He did not; and I was about to tell what we did in that behalf.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want that to be brought out.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not entirely clear about this, but Senators will remember that at that time Senator Wolcott was being considered for appointment as chancellor of the State of Delaware, and he later was appointed. He then presented his resignation to the Senate, and the Senate, to fill the vacancy upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections created by his resignation, named the distinguished senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

After that appointment there was a meeting of the subcommittee. I presented three or four resolutions at that time, one of which called for the subpoenaing of other witnesses. That resolution was promptly voted down, three to two, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] voting against it. I then moved that the Senator from Michigan be invited to appear before the subcommittee to testify, and straightway that motion was voted down by the same vote, as the record will show.

I then asked, by motion or resolution, that there should be argument of this case before the full committee. That was voted down, and later we made the report to the committee, the three majority members voting to sustain the sitting Member in his seat, the two on the minority side against it. That report was made to the full committee, and then I presented these resolutions. I read from the minority report, at the bottom of page 73:

Resolved by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, That the subcommittee be instructed to subpoena and take the testimony of Frederick P. Smith and such other witnesses as may be suggested by any member of the subcommittee to the end that there may be a full and complete hearing respecting the issues involved in the pending contest.

That was voted down. The second resolution presented was as follows:

Resolved by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, That the subcommittee be instructed to invite Senator Newberry to appear before it to give testimony concerning the charges pending against him involving his title to a seat in the United States Senate.

That was voted down by the same vote.

The third resolution was as follows:

Resolved by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, That the attorneys representing the contestant and the contestee in the pending investigation be invited to appear before the full committee to submit oral arguments, on a date to be fixed by the chairman of the committee.

That was voted down by the same vote. Mr. President, I am not one of the oldest Members of the Senate, but I have been here for nearly 11 years. I have served upon some of the most important committees in the Senate. I think Senators will give me the credit of being at least reasonably diligent in trying to perform my duties and to keep myself informed as to what is going on, and I say here that never in my experience in the Senate has any other committee refused to call a witness when a member of that committee requested it. If I am wrong I should like to be corrected. Senators will remember that there were 2,000 pages of this record, more than 1,000 pages of it in the bill of exceptions which was before the Supreme Court, and by reason of the engagements that we had I am free to say that during the time the hearings were in progress I did not have the time to read the bill of exceptions. I have read it all since and a part of it a second time. I do not think any member of the committee has read the bill of exceptions. Most of the members of the subcommittee had heard only the oral testimony which was brought before the subcommittee, but they had not read all of it, and when I asked for oral argument I was denied it.

Now, Mr. President, let me go a step further.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was called from the Chamber for a moment to answer a telephone call just as the Senator was approaching the matters suggested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. Did the Senator direct attention to what action, if any, was taken in the subcommittee relative to calling Senator Newberry?

Mr. POMERENE. I did.

Mr. KING. And also whether Mr. Newberry volunteered to come or asked permission to testify?

Mr. POMERENE. I did not answer that question directly. I will answer it now. He appeared in the committee room, I think, on the day his brother John was on the stand and left, and he was never in that committee room afterwards.

Mr. KING. Did he ever, to the knowledge of the Senator from Ohio, ask permission to testify in his own behalf?

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator will find the resolutions which were submitted to the full committee and which are in the report.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with those. The Senator will recall that I offered one of the motions myself in the full committee with respect to that matter.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that the Senator is right about that.

Mr. KING. But I had in mind the subcommittee and whether during the time of the taking of testimony Mr. Newberry asked to be heard—

Mr. POMERENE. Never to my knowledge.

Mr. KING. In respect to the truth of the charges that were made—

Mr. POMERENE. Never.

Mr. KING. Or to testify to them?

Mr. POMERENE. No, never. The majority of the committee would not invite him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did he need an invitation? Could he not have come of his own accord?

Mr. POMERENE. If it had been I who was the contestee, I would have broken into that committee room with a sledge hammer if necessary. It is a great thing to be a Senator of the United States. There are very few men who are thus honored; but this is the first time to my knowledge, and I am reasonably familiar with the history of my country, that any man has refused to defend himself when his title was assaulted.

Why, Mr. President, think of the situation. These charges and countercharges which were filed were like the pleadings of litigants in a case. We had, as Senators know, what is called an answer by way of general denial. Did it ever occur to any lawyer because a defendant had filed a general denial that it was to be taken as evidence? Yet with these charges and countercharges the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], who at one time presided with great dignity as a judge in the city of St. Louis, asks us to accept at 100 per cent the denial contained in the affidavit of expenses which is filed in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and others are impudently inquisitive if they even think of asking some question about it.

This brings me to another point. There are two ways to look at a contest of this kind. One is that it is an adversary proceeding between plaintiff and defendant, complainant and respondent. If it were to be conducted purely as an ordinary adversary proceeding, then one course of procedure might suggest itself to Senators who were sitting upon the committee. But there is another way to look at it. The Senate of the United States clothed this committee with authority to investigate the title of the sitting Member to his seat. It was a matter that concerned very greatly the integrity, the honor, the dignity of the Senate, and whether the complainant or the defendant called witnesses, or even if they had decided to drop the matter, would this committee have done its full duty to the Senate if it had stopped at that point? Had not that committee the right of its own volition to call witnesses to determine whether there is any Member sitting here who is not worthy of a seat in the Chamber.

That leads me to this thought, which I wish to present to Senators for their consideration: So far as I know, up to the time that my colleague on the committee, Senator Wolcott, asked that the conclusion of the testimony be deferred until I could return, no member of that committee had subpoenaed any witness on his own volition; not one. I know I did not. I did not ask to have any one witness subpoenaed, except as I have indicated heretofore. They denied to me, a Senator, the right to call some of these witnesses in order that we might get the real facts in the case. I regard it, sir, as not only an indignity to me, sitting here as a Senator, but it was an indignity heaped upon the entire Senate of the United States. It was a species of the most arrant cowardice for the contestee to refuse to come, even if he had been unbidden.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Ohio?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. In connection with that, were the minority members of the subcommittee denied the right to have the books containing the Newberry account to ascertain who had really contributed money?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator has asked a question which relates to a matter that I intended to discuss, and I might just as well do it now.

In order that Senators may understand the situation and the necessity of having these witnesses called, I am going to tax the patience of Senators, perhaps—I mean those who do me the honor to listen, because the empty seats on the other side indicate that those Senators are not interested and that they are determined to continue this man in his seat no matter what the record shows.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I think the record ought to show that there are only nine Republicans upon the other side of the Chamber and a distinguished Republican Senator presiding. So there are 10 Republican Senators in the Chamber at this time listening to this most important matter.

Mr. POMERENE. In order that I may answer the question propounded by the Senator from Arkansas, let me state preliminarily the groundwork as it existed in Michigan.

The Newberrys are a very rich family. The fortune was founded by their father. They never knew what a poor man's lot was, and I hope they never may. Newberry one day in New York as a lieutenant commander was visited by his business partner, Mr. Templeton, who afterwards became the chairman of this "voluntary committee of my friends." As the record will show, Mr. Lieut. Commander Newberry, if you please, imparted to Mr. Templeton the secret that "many of my friends have urged me to be a candidate for the United States Senate." The record further shows that Mr. Templeton, the business associate and lifelong friend, said to him, "Why, I have not heard about it." "Well," he said, "how can I serve you?" "Well, if I decide to be a candidate I would like to have a committee of business men take charge of the campaign." Templeton said, "I will serve you if I can."

Later on, by invitation, a number of those friends who had been out in Michigan took up the matter, including Templeton and including also Cody, who is a general factotum for all the activities before legislatures and elsewhere of the American Book Co., the Barnes crowd. They went out there and sent for Paul H. King. Paul H. King is a very clever gentleman, bright, keen, diplomatic, and one of the best politicians in Michigan. He had managed the campaign for the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with very great success, and he did a good job when he assisted in getting the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan into this body. He is an able, industrious, diligent, lovable Senator and one to whom I love to refer as my friend.

These gentlemen get together in New York, and Mr. King is invited to take active charge of the campaign. Imagine these voluntary friends going all the way down to New York at his invitation. That is not the first step that was taken. They tried to get a Mr. Hayden, from Washington, to go up there and be the chairman, but Mr. Hayden did not like boodle campaigns. Mr. Hayden had said to Mr. Newberry, "Why, you are not known in Michigan." Think of that—a lieutenant commander, a man of such distinguished naval services, who had his picture taken on a wooden battleship in Central Park and scattered it throughout the State of Michigan to show his wonderful patriotic services.

Here is an interesting chapter in connection with this campaign. Of course, Mr. King—and you would all like him if you saw him; I like him; he is capable, but he can turn a political corner with neatness and dispatch. I want to congratulate the lieutenant commander in getting so efficient a man. They discussed in New York the probable cost of this campaign. Mr. Newberry wanted to know what it was going to cost, and Mr. King—Senators may refer to this in the record as well as in the testimony—Mr. King says, "Well, I conducted the campaign in behalf of Senator TOWNSEND, and that campaign cost Senator TOWNSEND's friends about $20,000, but Senator TOWNSEND had been in Congress for a great many years, he had stumped the entire State, he was well acquainted in the State, and, of course, rightly so. Under those circumstances it did not cost Senator TOWNSEND's friends as much as it otherwise would have cost him had he not been so well acquainted, but you have not got that acquaintance. It will cost your friends"—now note, and here is the beginning of the campaign—"It will cost your friends possibly $50,000." Mr. King testified to that, and there can be no question about it. Mr. King said, "Well, I have just moved to Detroit a short while ago and am engaged in the practice of the law. I must go home and consult my partner and some other friends. I can not let you know now." But later on he decides that he will accept the position.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to suggest that after Paul King told Mr. Newberry it would cost him $50,000 he said he would take the matter under advisement, and later on he notified Mr. King that he would be a candidate.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes; that is correct. Then Mr. King goes on to say that after talking it over—he had some talk with Mr. Templeton and some others—he decided that he would accept the chairmanship. Then they organized the committee. Templeton, the business partner, is made the general chairman, and Mr. King is made the active chairman. I may not use exactly the proper designations as they are in the record, but what I have said will make my thought clear. Mr. Blair, the banker, a high-class man, is made treasurer, but, except that moneys were deposited in his bank and he paid out moneys to the representatives of the committee, he did not know one thing about the fiscal part of that campaign. I want to say to the Senate that is another case of a man with a fine reputation and standing in a community giving his reputation and his character to the financing of a campaign when he knew nothing about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or at least he said he did not.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; he said he did not; and I think he is right. When the account was brought in, which is contained in the bill of exceptions, Senators will find that Mr. Blair signed on the dotted line; he did not know anything about it at all.

I am going a long way around in order to answer the question of the Senator from Arkansas, but I think Senators will find that it is necessary that I lay this groundwork before I give the answer, in order that Senators may see the pertinency of it.

Mr. King goes around spending money by the thousands of dollars; Floyd, who in part has charge of the campaign in the western portion of the State, is spending money by the thousands of dollars. Floyd is referred to as the distributee of a part of this money, but there is very little, if anything, in the record to show that Floyd used the money to employ workers at the polls or to show the persons to whom he paid the money; and yet nobody can read the statutes of Michigan without coming to the conclusion that the State legislature intended that the names of the ultimate recipients of the money, and not the intermediaries, were to be contained in the accounts which were to be filed. King knew that; Floyd knew it; Templeton knew it; all of them knew it.

Mr. President, what was Mr. Smith's connection with the Newberry interests? He testified that there were 12 of these interests, all with one central office. Two of them were corporations; ten of them were individual interests and estates. There were 12 bank accounts. Frederick P. Smith was there operating as the confidential attorney in fact of all these interests, the one for the other, under a general power of attorney. I hope Senators will do me the honor of reading John Newberry's testimony. John Newberry is the brother of Truman H. Newberry, and John Newberry testifies, in substance, that he had never talked with his brother about being a candidate; that he never wrote to him about it; that not one word on the subject passed between them. John Newberry was upon a little wooden ship up in the lakes somewhere, and Truman Newberry was on a wooden ship in Central Park, at least long enough to have his picture taken. John Newberry says, "Because of my love and affection for my brother, I decided that I wanted to finance his campaign."

Then what does he do? John Newberry calls in Frederick P. Smith, his confidential man, and says, "Mr. Smith, I have heard that my brother intends to be a candidate for the United States Senate, and if he is I want to finance his campaign, and you draw such checks upon my account as the campaign committee may call for." Senators will find that testimony if they examine the record—and I beg them to read it, for I do not want to do any injustice to anyone, and if I am wrong about this I hope somebody will set me right. John Newberry said, "I do not know anything about it; I simply gave that general blanket authority to Mr. Smith. Mr. Smith drew checks as they were wanted." "You do not know the amount?" "No." "Did not Mr. Smith advise you as to the state of your bank account?" "No." "Did you not hear from him on the subject?" "No." "Did you know what your balance was; whether it was getting low or not?" "No." "If it was getting low, did you know how it was depleted?" "No; I did not know anything about it." "Have you asked him for an accounting since the election?" "No." "Do you know how much you gave?" "Well, I think $99,900." "Did you place any limit on the amount that Mr. Smith was authorized to draw?" "No." "Could he have checked out of your account $200,000 if he had thought it necessary?" "Yes; he could."

John Newberry says that Truman Newberry, his older brother, was the executive head of the family. Now, I want to call attention to Fred P. Smith's testimony. He is one of the witnesses that I wanted to cross-examine.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He is the Smith who was acting as a general sewer for checks?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes, sir. He is the first general attorney in fact, who could do anything he saw fit with his principal's money and the principal not be held responsible for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And not know about it?

Mr. POMERENE. And not know about it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, in view of the fact that there are only about seven Senators on the other side of the Chamber, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Myers	Simmons
Borah	Harrison	Nelson	Smith
Broussard	Heflin	New	Smoot
Capper	Hitchcock	Nicholson	Spencer
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Stanley
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Sterling
Dial	Kendrick	Oddie	Sutherland
Edge	Kenyon	Overman	Swanson
Elkins	Keyes	Page	Townsend
Ernst	King	Phipps	Tremmell
Fernald	Ladd	Poin Dexter	Walsh, Mont.
France	La Follette	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Ransdell	Weller
Gerry	McCumber	Robinson	Williams
Glass	McKellar	Sheppard	Willis
Gooding	McKinley	Shields
Hale	McNary	Shortridge

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I asked the Senator a few moments ago whether Mr. Newberry had volunteered or had asked to be permitted to testify before the committee. The Senator from Iowa made an inquiry as to whether he had been invited to testify. In looking over the record, I find at page 807 these proceedings:

The attorney for Mr. Newberry made a formal offer of certain parts of the report of the testimony of a number of witnesses, and then said:

With that, I have nothing further to offer.

Evidently meaning that Mr. Newberry would offer no further testimony.

Mr. POMERENE. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. KING. Page 807. Thereupon Senator Wolcott said:

You are not going to call Senator Newberry himself?

Mr. MURFIN.—

The attorney for Mr. Newberry—

I am not. That is a matter we have discussed at length, and frequently, and have changed our minds frequently; but that is the conclusion I now have.

Later Senator Wolcott said:

Suppose this committee should determine that it desired to have Senator Newberry as a witness. Are counsel prepared to come back here any day the committee may fix?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I shall come, of course.

Senator WOLCOTT. I want the question of Senator Newberry's appearing as a witness left open for decision by the full subcommittee. My own view is that if nobody else makes that application or motion before the subcommittee, I will do it myself. So let us understand that that is not closed.

So the record shows that the attorneys for Mr. Newberry positively stated that they did not propose to call him. Later, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, as I understood him, it was moved in the full committee that he be invited to attend, and the majority of the committee voted down that motion.

Mr. POMERENE. I thank the Senator for his contribution to the record. I am sorry that the empty benches on the other side of the Chamber will not be able to transmit that part of the record to the men who ought to be in their seats.

Mr. President, I was about to call attention to the testimony of the confidential man, the man who could use Truman Newberry's money and put it into John Newberry's account, and then, as John Newberry's attorney in fact, check it out to the campaign committee, and Truman Newberry be permitted to say: "I did not touch the unholy money. I contributed nothing."

Let me say, before I go to this, there has been a great ado here in the Chamber by those who support the majority of this committee to the effect that the case has already been decided by the Supreme Court. I do not know how lawyers can be so reckless with facts. Senators have some privileges that lawyers would not have, and they can not be called to account for their exercise. Bear in mind, please, that the United States Supreme Court reversed the Newberry case for two reasons: First, because the majority felt that the Federal law, so far as it related to primaries, was unconstitutional; and secondly, the entire Supreme Court found that there was error in the charge of the trial court, and I think the Supreme Court was right about it. The Supreme Court, however, did not pass upon the facts in the case. If it should be claimed that they discussed the facts, I admit that; but they discussed the facts only so far as it was necessary to discuss them in order to lay down clearly what in their judgment the law was, and to point out the errors made in the charge of the court. More than that—

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. KING. I may be anticipating the Senator, and, if so, I tender a humble apology. The record now before the Senate is much fuller, has been supplemented, and shows expenditures and actions and conduct not exhibited in the original record.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, certainly. Undoubtedly that is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. Let me suggest, before the Senator from Tennessee interrupts, that in the record in the Supreme Court John Newberry's testimony was not there, because he was not called upon to testify at the trial at Grand Rapids. Fred P. Smith, the confidential attorney in fact, testified before our committee, but he did not testify in the criminal case in Grand Rapids.

Mr. King, who was a codefendant in the criminal case in Grand Rapids, testified in chief, but because of the strain, perhaps, he unfortunately became ill, and the case could not have proceeded if the Government was going to insist upon its right of cross-examination. The Government waived the cross-examination of Mr. King and went to the jury without that cross-examination, so that the only part of King's testimony before the criminal court was the direct testimony of Mr. King. Here we cross-examined him fully, and I shall take the privilege of reading from his cross-examination a little later.

I call attention to those facts as indicating that no matter what the record in the Supreme Court may have been and no matter what the decision of the Supreme Court may have been, the record before us is an entirely different record so far as the facts are concerned.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator stated a few moments ago that the Supreme Court reversed the case on two grounds, one that the act limiting the expenditures was unconstitutional and the other error in the charge of the trial court. I call the Senator's attention to pages 1 to 11 of the opinion of the Supreme Court. That is the opinion of the court; that is the judgment of the court. It is put upon one ground only, and that is the unconstitutionality of the act.

Mr. POMERENE. And error in the charge.

Mr. McKELLAR. Nothing was said about error in the charge. The opinion of the majority of the court, delivered by Mr. Justice McReynolds, does not discuss the charge of the trial court at all, but founds its judgment upon the following:

We can not conclude that authority to control party primaries or conventions for designating candidates was bestowed on Congress by the grant of power to regulate the manner of holding elections. The fair intendment of the words does not extend so far; the framers of the Constitution did not ascribe to them any such meaning. Nor is this control necessary in order to effectuate the power expressly granted. On the other hand, its exercise would interfere with purely domestic affairs of the State and infringe upon liberties reserved to the people.

That is the only question discussed in the majority opinion. I think the Senator has momentarily confused the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice White, in which he said he thought the court was in error in its charge; but the judgment of the court was based wholly on the unconstitutionality of the act.

Mr. POMERENE. I think I was right about that; but I may be wrong. However, reference to the opinion will settle that question.

Now, I desire to read some of the testimony of Mr. Frederick P. Smith, the confidential agent and attorney in fact for Truman H. Newberry and John S. Newberry. I am reading from the testimony as it is found in the minority report, beginning on page 19:

Mr. SMITH. No; I call myself agent.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You are their confidential financial man, are you not?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You have, I think it has been said here, powers of attorney from both Mr. Truman and Mr. John Newberry?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; practically all of the interests in the office. I carry their powers of attorney.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And there are others also interested?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What others?

Mr. SMITH. Mrs. Truman Newberry's individual interests and Mrs. John S. Newberry's individual interests, and their sons.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you make contributions to the campaign funds during the primary?

Mr. SMITH. I gave contributions for Mr. John S. Newberry to Mr. Templeton.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Were they all made to Mr. Templeton?

Mr. SMITH. Practically all of them. There were a very few made to cash to take care of emergencies.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Your first contribution was how much?

Mr. SMITH. I do not remember. It would be a hard thing to say what it was.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. A check to Mr. Templeton?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; Mr. A. A. Templeton.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. It appears here that certain checks were made to Mr. Templeton and by him indorsed to Mr. Paul King as chairman, about $5,083. Were those the checks of John S. Newberry by yourself?

Mr. SMITH. They might be.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you not a record of those?

Mr. SMITH. I did not give any other checks except Mr. John S. Newberry's checks, so I conclude they must have been his checks.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The only checks you gave to anybody for that purpose were the checks of John S. Newberry?

Mr. SMITH. John S. Newberry.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What I want to get at is about that $5,000. Have you got your checks for that?

Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have not you your record with you of that?

Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you got your record of the other deposits?

Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

This is the testimony before our committee.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or of your other checks?

Mr. SMITH. No. (R., 754, 755.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. This subpoena, if your honors please, was issued on the 1st of June by this committee and is in the usual form, and contains the following duces tecum:

"And to bring with you all records, books, papers, documents, letters, telegrams, etc., connected with or relating to the Truman H. Newberry campaign for Senator and all payments and contributions connected therewith."

You read that, Mr. Smith?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I may say that this was issued at the instance of the contestant. Just why have not you the records?

Mr. SMITH. I made a search and could not find them. We have a storeroom that we have used for 25 or 30 years. It is up back of the old Newberry house, on Jefferson Avenue. I went up there Saturday as soon as I could after I got this subpoena and gave the afternoon to it. I could not find a check since 1917 in the place.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You mean none of the checks since 1917?
 Mr. SMITH. None of the checks. I could not find any of the matter pertaining to this affair. I did find some campaign material. How it got there I do not know. It was there and I brought it along. That is all I could find.

That is, he brought the campaign literature. He continues:

Mr. SMITH. When I got there the door was open. It had always been under lock and key. It has been broken open several times. Where they went I do not know. I certainly never saw them.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Where the records of the payments and contributions and all that are, you do not know anything about?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were they put in there?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; they were put in there.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you put them in there personally?

Mr. SMITH. No; I did not. My cashier put them in there. I do not remember just what time. It seems to me it was either when we came back from the grand jury with the books and papers, or it was after the close of the trial; I do not know which.

Senator WATSON. Were these books and papers at the grand jury hearing and at the final trial in Grand Rapids?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know. I was not subpoenaed. My cashier was subpoenaed.

Mr. SOUTER. The books were before the grand jury.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you mean the books and records that this witness kept?

Mr. MURFIN. Yes; that is right.

Senator WATSON. Were the books and records kept by the Government or were they turned back?

Mr. SMITH. They were turned back. (R., 755, 756.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Is there any way we can definitely find out about this $5,000 of checks that went to Paul H. King, chairman, or were indorsed to Paul H. King?

Mr. SMITH. I do not think there is any question about the fact that it was issued.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Were those in addition to the $99,000?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know anything about the report.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You do not know anything about the report?

Mr. SMITH. No; I had absolutely nothing to do with it.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Well, do you know the total amount that you charged against John S. Newberry on the books?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know what was charged, but I know that the credits, taking credits for what came back, because there were moneys coming back along about the time that the report was made up. It made, as near as I recollect, either $99,000 or $99,900. There was a discrepancy of $900.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What do you mean by a discrepancy?

Mr. SMITH. Well, the report showed after it was filed by this office $99,000, and his books showed $99,900.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I think my recollection is that the report shows $99,900. I may be in error about that.

Mr. SMITH. I do not think so. I think it is the other way about.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you advance moneys in cash to anybody?

Mr. SMITH. Probably half a dozen times, something like that.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. To whom?

Mr. SMITH. When somebody would telephone in to meet their pay roll, and they would be out of town, they would ask me to protect their pay rolls, and Mr. Emery would come up, or Mr. Templeton, or Mr. Paul King, and I would give them the check there for cash.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. For how much?

Mr. SMITH. Well, a thousand dollars; I don't remember particularly the amounts.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you any books showing those checks?

Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

Senator WATSON. Was that in addition to the $199,000?

There is a misprint here. In this report it is given as $199,000. It should be $99,000.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. We do not know, your honor. That is what we are investigating. Did you know, Mr. Smith, that they had a bank vault box for cash?

Mr. SMITH. No; I did not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You did not know about that at all?

Mr. SMITH. No.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. What did you mean by "some checks coming back?"

Mr. SMITH. Some money coming back. They sent back some money and a readjustment sometimes of checks; they brought me in a paper bag full of money.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Who did?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Emery.

This Mr. Emery, one of the witnesses, was bumped by a Ford machine and hurt, and some question was raised about whether he should be brought to trial. I do not know anything about that. Suffice it to say, the very able attorneys representing the defendants consented to go on to trial in his absence. The right to do that may depend upon the practice in each particular district; but the significant thing about it is this, that when we subpoenaed him to come before our committee, the process server said to Mr. Lucking, "That man is not able to go to Washington," and I think the attorney, or somebody else, made some suggestion of that kind. He said, "Well, if he is not able to go, I do not want him to go," and canceled the process, and straightway the process was canceled Mr. Emery hiked to the woods in Canada, and Mr. Emery stayed in the woods in Canada until the majority of the subcommittee closed the case here, and then he went back to Detroit, and we were not even allowed to have a further examination at that time.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. I wondered if the Senator from Ohio, in that connection, would explain to the Senate that while the going to Canada has a certain amount of bad odor, Canada in that case was across the river, and all that the testimony showed was that this invalid, this man who, as was said, is probably now on the operating table again—

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator state that as a fact?

Mr. SPENCER. No; except that the information I had—

Mr. POMERENE. "Probably"; I observed the word.

Mr. SPENCER. The information I had was that he is now in the hospital under an operation. I know his skull was fractured in five places—

Mr. POMERENE. I know that.

Mr. SPENCER. The testimony merely showed that when he was excused by the attorney for Henry Ford from appearing, they advised him to go over and visit some friends across the river, and that is all there is to the statement about Canada.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; but the infamy of his going to Canada was such that the Senator did not refer to it in his able argument on yesterday.

Mr. SPENCER. His going to Canada was about the same as if the Senator from Ohio were to go to Georgetown.

Mr. POMERENE. Suffice it to say, he was beyond the jurisdiction of the process server of the United States Senate. We have no right to serve witnesses over in Canada.

Mr. SPENCER. Because by the consent of Henry Ford's counsel his subpoena had been canceled.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; but they relied upon the representation of the process server and of the attorney for that man, and though 30 days had intervened, and we wanted to call him again, thinking that perhaps his physical condition might have been improved so that he could come here, or that we could take his testimony up there by interrogatories, the Senator from Missouri, as the chairman of the subcommittee, refused to grant that permission.

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator from Ohio think that a man with five fractures of the skull can be cured within a week or 10 days? Does the Senator from Ohio think that if a man loses his leg there is any use in subpoenaing him the next week, in the hope that his leg may have grown out again? Some common sense must be used in subpoenaing witnesses.

Mr. POMERENE. O, Mr. President, the Senator is "still harping on my daughter." The fact is that this man came back after the adjournment, after they had closed the case, and was in Detroit attending to his business, but we were not permitted to have him examined at that time by impartial physicians.

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator from Ohio deny that the only medical testimony which was given in regard to his condition by either side showed that his examination, whether in Washington or Detroit, would have been at the very risk of his life, and that that stands uncontradicted?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I wish my very genial friend, who ordinarily is fair, would be able to give to the Senate the facts in this behalf, that at one time this man was not able to appear, that he then went to the woods, and then came back after 30 days or more had intervened. It seems to me that if a man is able to attend to his business, he is able to give testimony. I know and practicing lawyers here know that often, in anticipation of the fact that they may die and in order that we may preserve their testimony, we take the testimony of witnesses on their deathbed. That is what the Senator from Missouri would have done if he had been sitting as a judge.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Missouri would have been ashamed of himself for life if he had ordered a subpoena to be issued for a man who was in the physical and mental condition in which the uncontradicted testimony shows this man was.

Mr. POMERENE. I am a better friend of the record of the Senator from Missouri than he is himself. He would have insisted under those circumstances that there be an examination by an impartial physician.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator from Ohio had any doubt about the impartiality or the accuracy of the physician's certificate which he had, why did not the Senator from Ohio or some one representing the contestant bring another certificate?

Mr. POMERENE. The record will show that that man was there doing business. The Senator knows that, and there is no use carping over those matters.

Mr. SPENCER. The record will not show that fact, if the Senator from Ohio will pardon me.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator from Missouri deny that this man was in Detroit attending to business after that?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Ohio will find nothing in the record except to the effect that one man testified that he was in Detroit, as he was, and that he was in his place of business; that he would walk back and forth once in a while. There is nothing in the record to show that he was transacting business.

Mr. POMERENE. I am obliged to the Senator for the admission that he walked back and forth once in a while.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have been very much impressed with the remarks of the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Missouri, from which it appears that the Senator feels that all was done which should have been done when the attorneys for the contestant and the contestee failed to go any further. That raises the query in my mind as to whether or not the subcommittee contented itself upon this hearing with whatever might have been submitted by the contestant and the contestee and considered this as a mere trial between two parties to a suit.

Mr. POMERENE. I discussed that question, I think perhaps in the Senator's temporary absence from the Chamber.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I recall that the Senator did, and I was in the Chamber when he was discussing that; but notwithstanding the discussion of the Senator from Ohio, in the remarks of the Senator from Missouri just made it seems that that Senator considers that it was only a trial between the two parties and that the subcommittee had no duty devolving upon it to go any further than the parties contestant and contestee might desire.

Mr. POMERENE. If we had gone further we might have found out something.

Mr. SPENCER and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield first to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. What I desire to do is to answer the Senator from New Mexico. Certainly it was furthest from my thought to create the impression that this was a trial between two persons, between the contestant and the contestee. The rights of both of them sink into insignificance in comparison with the rights of the Senate itself. Yet it is true that in the trial of the case before the committee both parties were represented by their counsel and either side had the opportunity of presenting such evidence as they saw fit. If there was any possible evidence to show that the mental condition of the witness Emery, whom both sides wanted, would have warranted his attendance, it would doubtless have been shown.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, again I am under obligations to my good friend from Missouri for his further admission that this was not an adversary proceeding, and that we had a right, for the sake of the honor of the United States Senate, to go on of our own motion and inquire into it further. Then I recall that while he takes that position now, he insists that Members of the Senate shall content themselves with the denial under oath by Mr. Newberry that he had nothing to do with it and that we have not the right to cross-examine.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. A few moments ago the Senator from Missouri made some suggestion as to the consent alleged to have been given by counsel for Mr. Ford for the cancellation of the subpoena. May I direct the attention of the Senator to the record bearing upon that point?

Mr. POMERENE. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. KING. It is as follows:

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you think they would excite the man and kill him? Is there any danger of asking a question by written interrogatories that will kill him?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. As to Mr. Emery, your honor, he is such a tremendously important witness. They have passed responsibility for pretty nearly everything on to him.

Mr. MURKIN.—

The attorney for Mr. Newberry—

You admitted that he could not be examined.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I did so on these representations, which I found were not correct. I knew nothing about it. I never saw the man in my life to know him. And, besides, when I consented to the cancellation of his subpoena, on the certificates and on his attorney's statement, I had no idea that there was going to be nobody else that would know anything about it.

The point to which I wish to call attention is that he consented to the cancellation upon representations made by counsel for Mr. Newberry "which I found were not correct."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. This is a matter of such importance, and there being only five Republican Senators in their seats, that I suggest the absence of a quorum, in order that Senators may have an opportunity to remain here and listen to this argument in the case which they are trying to jam through without any consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Harris	Nicholson	Spencer
Broussard	Harrison	Norbeck	Stanley
Cameron	Heflin	Norris	Sterling
Capper	Hitchcock	Oddie	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Townsend
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Trammell
Curtis	Kendrick	Polindexter	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Kenyon	Pomerene	Warren
Ernst	King	Ransdell	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	Ladd	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
France	La Follette	Sheppard	Weller
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Shields	Willis
Glass	McKellar	Simmmons
Gooding	McNary	Smith
Hale	New	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire now to resume the reading of the extracts from Mr. Smith's testimony, beginning on page 21.

It will be remembered that after the primary some one from the committee brought back in a paper bag some money, and Mr. Smith was asked by the acting chairman how much there was in it:

Mr. SMITH. As near as I can recollect, it was around $21,000.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. When was that?

Mr. SMITH. It seems to me that was the first week in September. (R., 758.)

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Was it supposed to be some readjustment on account of these late large contribution that they had?

Senator WOLCOTT. Does that mean that your office did not contribute $99,900?

Mr. SMITH. No; that is the net amount. They contributed an amount which with this $21,000 and the $99,000 added must have come up to $120,000, because when this came back, taking that credit out of the amount of checks given, it left this net amount of $99,900.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Smith, you say that they did this and they did that. Do you mean yourself? You knew how much was being paid out by you, did you not?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; I knew from time to time I gave them checks.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Well, you had a record of it, had you not?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; there was a record, but I did not keep the books.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you give it to them in currency at any time?

Mr. SMITH. I think there were probably half a dozen times, but not over that.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Small amounts, did you say?

Mr. SMITH. I do not remember now. It might have been $3,000 and it might have been more.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You mean the few times taken all together, $3,000? (R., 759.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You think you must have advanced $120,000?

Mr. SMITH. I think it must have been.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Because you got some back?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you ever mentioned to somebody, before to-day, that you got any money back in cash?

Mr. SMITH. I do not remember whether I have or not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. In connection with this investigation at any time in the last two and a half or three years has any person ever heard before that you got money back until to-day?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know whether they have or not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who handed you that cash back?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. B. F. Emery.

Where is Emery? In the Canadian woods.

He brought it in a paper bag about that high [indicating].

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you count it?

Mr. SMITH. I think I did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And it was about $21,000?

Mr. SMITH. It was about $21,000, as I remember it.

Senator WATSON. Can we find out there just when that was?

Mr. SMITH. I can not tell exactly, but I think it was the first week in September.

Senator WOLCOTT. What was the date of Andrew Green's check?

Let me explain to Senators that Andrew Green was one of the good angels who, after the account had been filed and they had $12,000 or $15,000 of bills to pay, came in with his check. That was after the primary.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Do you mean the $5,000 check or the $15,000 check?

Senator WOLCOTT. The $15,000 check.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He could not tell, but he thought it was several weeks after the primary. Mr. Smith, what did you do with the $21,000 that you got?

Mr. SMITH. It was undoubtedly put in the bank.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What bank?

Mr. SMITH. In John S's.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. In John S. Newberry's bank account in the National Bank of Commerce.

Mr. SMITH. I think it was. There is not any question about that.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Smith, was it just exactly $21,000, or might it have been some odd dollars?

Mr. SMITH. It might have been odd dollars; I do not think it was even money.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did he make any explanation as to why he was returning this money to you?

Mr. SMITH. I do not remember that he did, except on the large contributions that were coming in or readjustments or something.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. It appears that the checks on which he got about $35,000 at that time were dated the 5th day of September, and they were canceled on the 7th. It appears that they were deposited on the 6th. Between those two dates $10,000 in currency. I mean from John S. Newberry. Did you give them that?

Mr. SMITH. No; I did not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Do you know anything about it?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. They are getting from you $10,000 and handing you back the next day $21,000. Do you know anything about it at all?

Mr. SMITH. No; I do not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. There are no books to enlighten you in connection with it?

Mr. SMITH. I do not believe there was any such thing. (R., 765, 766.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you give further checks later?

Mr. SMITH. Further checks?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Further checks later?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You do not remember whether you did or not?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you any way of showing that?

Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

Mr. MURFIN. Do you mean after September?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I mean after he got the $21,000. That is as plain as anything in the world. You can not remember whether you paid out other moneys or not or gave other checks?

Mr. SMITH. No; I can not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What did John Newberry say to you?

Mr. SMITH. He came to me, as near as I can remember it, the latter part of February or the first part of March—it was the late winter—and told me that if the committee made any demands for campaign funds, if his brother should be in the senatorial race, to give them the money.

Let me digress there just a moment. This awful man Ford had to be beaten. So they started in on this money campaign the latter part of February or early in March, although Ford did not announce his candidacy until June 14.

I do not remember whether he mentioned Mr. Templeton's name or not. I knew Mr. Templeton quite well.

He was chairman of the committee.

The first call was from him. The checks that were given after that were all given to Mr. Templeton the same as the first one.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You have given us, in substance, all that transpired, have you?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. No other discussion, except to direct you, if they wanted money and came and asked for it, to give it to them?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. No limits as to amounts placed on you?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And no reports made to him as to the amounts you paid?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And no inquiries made by him as to what it was used for?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or as to how much was used?

Mr. SMITH. My power of attorney is a very broad one. (R., 767.)

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. But you would not have paid out money without directions from somebody?

Mr. SMITH. Absolutely not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you have told us the only directions you had?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You never rendered any statement or account to John Newberry for it?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he never asked for any?

Mr. SMITH. He never has.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he made no inquiries about whether it was running to an excessive amount or anything of that kind?

Mr. SMITH. He never has.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He never has to this day?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir; not to my recollection.

Think of it! John Newberry advances $120,000 and gets back $21,000; checks were being drawn constantly on his account, and yet he never concerns himself for one minute about his bank balance or the amount of checks that are drawn on his account for the purpose of corrupting the sentiment of the people of the State of Michigan.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Truman Newberry asked you about the expenses at times, did he not?

Mr. SMITH. I do not remember that he did.

Truman Newberry, Lieut. Commander Newberry, Senator Newberry, the executive head of the Newberry millions, never asked him about it, but see how that is modified later on.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You reported to him every day what was going on, did you not?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you not send him a telegram every night of what occurred during the day?

Mr. SMITH. I sent him a telegram generally at night regarding what the papers said.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. About what the newspapers were saying?

Mr. SMITH. About what the newspapers were saying.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. One witness here, a Miss Kilfoyle, testified that every night you sent a telegram to Mr. Newberry concerning the campaign.

Miss Kilfoyle was a stenographer in Smith's office. That is what she testified to, as is shown in another part of the record. Mr. KING. She was one of many.

Mr. POMERENE. She was one of a number of them at least.

Mr. MURFIN—

He was Mr. Newberry's attorney—

Mr. MURFIN. Fix the time when that happened, Mr. Lucking.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. All right; perhaps you can for me. I suppose she was there in the office.

Mr. MURFIN. I must not be a witness. I have a distinct recollection of what the record shows.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You mean the time. I suppose it was while she was in the office.

Mr. MURFIN. I will whisper it to you.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Now, you had only to do with the finances, as I understand it, of the campaign, Mr. Smith?

Mr. SMITH. All I had to do was to furnish some money from Mr. John S. Newberry's account.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. But I asked you if you had anything to do with the campaign except the finances, and you said no.

Mr. SMITH. No; nothing whatever.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You got no reports from them or anything of that kind?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. She says—

That is, Miss Kilfoyle—

"During the couple of months or more preceding the primary election in Michigan, in 1918, Mr. Smith sent telegrams to Mr. Newberry with reference to the campaign. It was his custom for three months to dictate a telegram each evening—

Do Senators think that young lady could be mistaken about that? What interest would she have in misrepresenting the situation?

By Mr. Smith I mean Mr. Fred T. Smith, the defendant in this case. Is that substantially correct? (R., 768.)

That should be Fred P. Smith, who was one of the defendants in the criminal case.

Mr. SMITH. No; it is not. I telegraphed him every night after the articles began to appear in the papers.

Think of it! Is that true? Are Mr. Newberry and Mr. Smith more concerned about some political gossip that there may be in the newspapers than they are about the money that is being used from the Newberry funds in order to finance this campaign? If Senators will notice all through the record, Mr. King and all of the other witnesses steer clear from the financing when it comes to connecting Mr. Newberry with it.

Oh, yes; Mr. Newberry took a very active part in everything, but he did not know anything about the financing. If he did not, it was because he was willfully ignorant. If Mr. King and these other men did not give him any information upon this subject, it was because they willfully and purposely tried to keep it from him.

Mr. SMITH. After the articles began to appear in the Evening News, I telegraphed him what the papers said.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. When was that?

Mr. SMITH. It must have been along the last week of the primary.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I guess it started about the 10th of August. Mr. Vandenberg's letter, which has been put in here, was published on the 8th day of August—Mr. Vandenberg, of the Grand Rapids Herald—

That is former William Alden Smith's paper—

Do you remember Mr. Vandenberg wrote some open letters or something of that kind?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You advised him about how long the heavy expenses were going to run, did you not?

Meaning Senator Newberry.

Mr. SMITH. No; he was talking to me about some other matters—

That is, Truman Newberry was. Now, just think of it:

No; he was talking to me about some other matters, and, as I recollect, he mentioned something about when the primary was, and I told him July 27. That is as much as I knew about it.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You mean August 27?

Which was the day of the primary.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; August 27. I meant August 27. Instead of that I told him July.

And Mr. Murfin, the counsel, with that delicate way that a skilled lawyer has, desires to have a little fun out of him, and he says:

Mr. MURFIN. You are some politician.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Are you quite sure about that?

Mr. SMITH. Yes. So I wired him an explanatory telegram.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The trouble with that explanation—and it is evident you are just mistaken about dates—was that your telegram was not sent until July 28, so it could not be July 27 that the primary was going to be.

Mr. SMITH. No; there is where I made my mistake. I told him on the telephone July 27. Then I got a wire right off to him.

Now, just think of it! A little while ago he tells us that he began to tell him about what the newspapers were saying.

Then, when he makes a mistake in the date of the primary in his talk by telephone, when he recalls that fact straightway he gets off a wire to him. The purpose will develop as you go along.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You could not have told him it was the day before, because you would know that the primary had not been held the day before you were talking.

Mr. SMITH. That is the gist of it.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. But you could not on the 28th day of July tell him the primary would be July 27, the day before you were talking.

Mr. MURFIN. Is not that a matter of argument?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Yes.

That was a very judicial statement from the acting chairman.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I do not want anybody to accuse us of absolutely misleading the witness when it is plain he is mistaken. May I call your attention to page 219, to the following telegram:

Now, note this telegram:

DETROIT, MICH., July 28, 1918.

Lieut. TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY,
Third Naval District, 280 Broadway, New York:

I misinformed you this morning the date of close of regular expenses.

Oh, he is just telling him about what the newspapers have said, and though he has had a talk with him by telephone, it becomes very necessary that Truman Newberry, the candidate, shall know when the expenses are going to stop. Smith knows that, and Smith wires him. Let me read that again:

I misinformed you this morning the date of close of regular expenses. Should have said August 27.

Now, note:

The circular work, advertising, clerical help, postage, and all regular overhead expenses will naturally continue until primary. Have written.

FRED P. SMITH.

Ab, Mr. Newberry knows nothing about this. He files his affidavit with the Secretary of the Senate, and says: "I contributed nothing. I spent nothing. The campaign was conducted voluntarily by my friends." Why is he interested in the expenses of the campaign? Why should his confidential man, Smith, report by wire to Truman Newberry the day when these expenses would stop? Let our friends, the majority of the committee, explain that; and the explanation we get is that Truman Newberry filed his denial in the office of the Secretary of the Senate.

Something was said about perjury the other day. I am not going to use that word; but, in the language of the Negro, he was "powerful reckless with the truth."

Did you send that telegram?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Then, it was not about when the primary was; it was when the expenses were going to stop, did he not?

Mr. SMITH. That is probably it. Is that right?

Mr. SMITH. That is probably it. I do not know what the conversation was, but I had told him July 27. I misinformed him as to the month.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You had been talking to him. He wanted to know when these expenses were going to stop, did he not?

Mr. SMITH. I do not believe so. I think his conversation was about the drain on the balances in the office, and he was complaining about the money that was being spent.

Why, he was not spending any, according to them. Oh, no. Do we not know now why he did not want to come before the subcommittee? Do we not know now why the majority of that subcommittee did not want him to come?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Complaining about the large amount of expenses being drawn?

Mr. SMITH. Or the money that was being spent and drawn from the account all the time and put into his brother's account to keep from being overdrawn.

Think of it!

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question in that connection?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator said that Truman Newberry did not appear before the committee and make denial of that statement.

Mr. POMERENE. No; he did not.

Mr. HARRISON. What did he say when he was on trial in Michigan, when he appeared before the jury?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that is another interesting chapter. Now, bear in mind, there were a great many defendants in this case. The Department of Justice had gotten busy, and a number were indicted; and when it came to the trial, here were some of these men out in the districts who were indicted, who were handling some of the Newberry funds; and at certain times during the trial, if you will examine this record, you will find that some of these lesser luminaries among the list of defendants went on the stand and told their story. Of course, they could not be put on the stand by the Government unless they consented; but they were put on, some of them, as a part of the defendants' case, and then they put King on the stand, the king bee among the managers, and he testifies and unfortunately breaks down. But what did Truman Newberry do, the king bee of all the defendants, the man in whose behalf all of these other defendants got into trouble? The men who were aiding him to get the coveted seat in the United States Senate went to Newberry's defense, but Truman Newberry claimed his privilege as a defendant not to be made a witness either against himself or in his own behalf without his consent. Truman Newberry, Senator Newberry, silent! Other defendants go to his defense. He does not go to their defense. Explain it, if it can be explained.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Ohio will recall that when Paul King, the manager of Mr. Newberry's campaign, testified in that case, he finished his testimony for the defense and collapsed just as the prosecutors were about to cross-examine him.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. And none of his testimony was allowed to go in as in cross-examination.

Mr. POMERENE. No; he was not cross-examined at all, due to his physical condition, and I have no doubt he was in a state of collapse. The fact is that his health was not very good when he was before our committee, and we tried in every way to husband his strength by excusing him, and if you examine the record you will find that he was excused three or four different times. I have not any doubt at all about the state of his health and the tremendous strain under which he was placed.

Now, let me go on with this interesting testimony.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You had been talking to him. He wanted to know when these expenses were going to stop, did he not?

Mr. SMITH. I do not believe so. I think his conversation was about the drain on the balances in the office, and he was complaining about the money that was being spent.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Complaining about the large amount of expenses being drawn?

Mr. SMITH. Or the money that was being spent and drawn from the account all the time and put into his brother's account to keep from being overdrawn.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And his funds as well as his brother's were used?

Mr. SMITH. And everybody else's.

There were 10 of these accounts—the dead father's estate, the dead mother's estate, the brother's account, Truman's account, their wives' accounts, and their sons' accounts—and Mr. Smith, the attorney in fact, says they were drawing from everybody's account.

I continue reading:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. To keep up the amounts that were on the books charged against John?

Mr. SMITH. To keep his account from being overdrawn.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he wanted to know when this thing was going to end. Is that the idea?

Mr. SMITH. I think that is right.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You got the date wrong in your talk, and so you sent this telegram to him?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; that is right.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you say:

"I misinformed you this morning the date of close of regular expenses. Should have said August 27."

In other words, you should have said that the expenses would then be cut off?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING (reading):

"The circular work, advertising, clerical help, postage, and other regular overhead expenses will naturally continue until primary."

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And that is what he had been talking with you about over the phone?

Now, note Mr. Smith's answer:

Mr. SMITH. He was kicking about the balances.

The expenditures to secure the senatorial toga for Truman Newberry were so extravagant that he who was to wear it was kicking about the expenses, and yet he swears he knew nothing about it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Making his kick against whom?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not know against whom he was kicking. He was kicking to his confidential attorney in fact.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The one who was handling the funds for his campaign?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, if he was not satisfied he could have canceled the power of attorney to sign his checks any day, could he not?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly. I never knew of a general power of attorney which could not be canceled. This is the first time in my life I ever heard that a candidate's money could be used in furtherance of his own campaign and he not be held responsible for it; in other words, that he should have the usufruct of the campaign, but is not to be charged with the fact that his own money helped to secure the results of it.

Let us go a little further:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Yes; the drain was pretty heavy, and he wanted to see it stop?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; that is true.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You say, "Have written."

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Have you got that letter or a copy of it?

Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That is lost, too, is it, with the other things?

Mr. SMITH. It is not in our office, however. (R., 770.)

Let us pause here just a minute. Here is the telegram; there is no question about that. The telegram was sent to Lieut. Commander Newberry, and he was advised by that telegram that a letter had been written. The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and the majority members were not interested in that letter. If they are right, if there was nothing in that letter which could not be open to public gaze or to the committee's gaze, why is it not forthcoming? If Senator Newberry is not able to come before the committee and tell us what he knows about it, why does he not send the letter? I am sure every Senator would be interested in it.

I used to try some criminal cases. I gave up the trial of criminal cases a good many years ago, but I am afraid we have gotten into one. Have Senators ever noticed the progress of criminal trials when there is an effort to conceal things?

Oh, what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to deceive.

Let us go a little further.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator will permit me, he is making a magnificent speech, one in which the whole American people are interested, and I observe that on the other side there are only 9 or 10 Senators present, and the Senators on that side ought to be here listening to the arguments of this case; so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. SPENCER. I make the point of order that there has been no business transacted since the last roll call.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator is too late.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the Senator from Alabama will also enumerate the 14 Senators on the other side of the Chamber, not more than there are on this side.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to make a request of the Senator from Alabama. In view of the fact that it is quite patent that the chairman of the subcommittee does not want the Senators to hear the argument in the case, I hope he will withdraw his point.

Mr. HEFLIN. Under those circumstances I withdraw the suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

Mr. POMERENE. I read further:

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; I want to find out about the checking out of these funds by you, Mr. Smith, to the Newberry primary committee. Those checks were all drawn against what account in your office?

Mr. SMITH. Against Mr. John S. Newberry's account.

Senator WOLCOTT. Are you positive they were invariably drawn against that account and no other?

Mr. SMITH. Absolutely.

Senator WOLCOTT. You spoke of transferring funds from the other accounts into his.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir. It is a procedure that has been current for years. When one account gets low it is fed from the others. We have 12 different accounts. Of course, we do not feed from the corporations, but the personal ones. I have done it this last week.

Senator WOLCOTT. How many of those personal accounts were there?

Mr. SMITH. There were 10 at that time?

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you transfer funds from Truman H. Newberry's account over to John S. Newberry's?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; or Mr. Truman's to John S., or from Mrs. John S., around either way, and always have done it.

Senator WOLCOTT. All these funds in those various accounts, barring the corporation accounts, went to supply ready money to John S. Newberry's account?

Mr. SMITH. No; I do not think they all did in this case.

Senator WOLCOTT. Then, the funds in their two accounts went to keep the John S. Newberry account up to a sufficient fund so as to enable you to have enough money out of that account to take care of these primary expenses?

Mr. SMITH. In cases where there were overdrafts they would make up enough balance to cover the overdraft.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were those funds advanced from Truman H. Newberry's account and Mrs. Truman H. Newberry's account to John S. Newberry returned in due course to those accounts from which they were originally taken?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Have you the books showing all these transactions?

Mr. SMITH. No; I have not.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were those books taken by the cashier down to Grand Rapids?

Mr. SMITH. I do not remember about it. I did not pay any attention to what he took. He got his own stuff. He got a subpoena and went and saw the attorney and got his material together and went over that night.

Mr. HAL H. SMITH. But he was subpoenaed with the books?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAL H. SMITH. The books, records, checks, and letters.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was he subpoenaed by the Government?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir. (R., 772, 773.)

Senator WOLCOTT. What is the last you recall of seeing these books and checks that had to do with these transactions about which I have inquired?

Mr. SMITH. I do not remember whether it was after the grand jury or after the trial.

Senator WOLCOTT. You were aware of the fact that there was considerable notoriety concerning the expenditure of money in that campaign?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. You were aware of the fact, were you not, that it was charged by prominent men in Michigan that this extravagant expenditure of money was either by, or occasioned by, Mr. Newberry?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was there talk of investigation of that business? In the newspapers, I mean, was there talk of investigation of that statement?

Mr. SMITH. Well, there has been all along.

Senator WOLCOTT. I mean back there at the time we are now speaking of, about contemporaneous with the happening of all these events; we will say in August, 1918?

Mr. SMITH. I do not remember that.

Senator WOLCOTT. You do not recall any demands for an investigation or demands that there should be an investigation of the thing?

Mr. SMITH. There was a lot of notoriety in the newspapers about expenditures, but I could not say now whether I remember when it was or not.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Smith, I am at a loss to understand, and I want you to explain to me why it is, that in view of that talk and more or less of a scandal about the expenditure of Newberry funds, that you, the man who had the written evidence of the expenditures and to whom disbursed and how the accounts were kept, should be so much at a loss to tell this committee anything about the whereabouts of those books and checks and that you were apparently so indifferent about their safe-keeping.

Mr. SMITH. We must have had them a considerable period in our files down there at the office.

But they did not have them when they were wanted.

Senator WOLCOTT. Well, you do know that yourself?

Mr. SMITH. I can not tell what time they went up.

Senator WOLCOTT. What do you mean—went up to the barn?

Mr. SMITH. Up to the barn. At Grand Rapids they were tied in a sack.

Senator WOLCOTT. You took no special precaution to take care of them?

Mr. SMITH. I put them where we have always put all our checks, under lock and key, and not only that, there is a man and his wife living right in the place.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; but there was a grand jury investigation of this business when these books and checks came back into your possession.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. The subject matter was being investigated, and yet you allowed these evidences, written evidences, of the entire business of this whole transaction to get from under your sight. That is correct, is it not? (R., 774.)

Mr. SMITH. We only have a limited space there in our offices. Every so often we have to clean them out with the enormous amount of business that comes through that office every year.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; but this was only a period of about two or three months of financing. How did you keep your books—in loose leaves or bound books?

Mr. SMITH. In bound books.

Now, note this:

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you ever inquire of this cashier what he did with the books and checks?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir.

Just think of it! Except, perhaps, to be President of the United States or Chief Justice of the United States, the highest political honor which can come to any man is the honor which you and I, my colleagues, possess at the hands of the people of our sovereign States, and when the mementos of Mr. Newberry's title were being attacked the written evidence was gone; and it was either in the possession of Mr. Newberry or in the possession of his business or political associates.

Mr. President, I have been speaking about four hours, much longer than I anticipated speaking. I have been advised that some Senators are desirous of speaking upon the conference report, on which there is a unanimous-consent agreement to vote to-morrow at 12 o'clock, and unless there is objection I would rather suspend at this time and take the subject up to-morrow, after the disposition of the conference report, if I may have the consent of Senators.

Mr. SPENCER. I make no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. There is no objection to that on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no objection. I wonder whether the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Mississippi would also deem it desirable to endeavor to agree upon some time when we may vote upon the resolution now pending, so as to relieve the embarrassment of Senators about their engagements in the interim.

Mr. POMERENE. I sincerely hope that we can arrive at an agreement for a vote at a reasonably early time. Although I am quite willing to do it, I am disposed to think that it would be rather difficult now. Perhaps if we can have some negotiations on both sides of the Chamber we may be able to reach an agreement.

Mr. CURTIS. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. POMERENE. I assure Senators that I have no desire to unduly delay the matter. I realize its importance, and I say frankly that, though reference has been made to the trip which a committee is compelled to take to Haiti, I shall not even think of going away so long as this resolution remains the unfinished business, unless there is some agreement which will be entirely satisfactory to everybody. I usually try one lawsuit at a time.

GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES DURING THE WAR.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have here an article entitled "The status of Government-owned and Government-controlled corporations, a discussion of the law applicable to governmental agencies created during the war emergency," by Eldred E. Jacobson, of the New York bar. It is very interesting and I think a very valuable treatise upon the status of those corporations.

With a view to having it printed, I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Printing, and if that committee thinks favorably of it I would like to have it printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so referred.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION LAW.

Mr. STANLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President—

Mr. STANLEY. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harrison	Myers	Spencer
Broussard	Heflin	New	Stanley
Bursum	Hitchcock	Nicholson	Sterling
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Townsend
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Trammell
Caraway	Kendrick	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Keyes	Page	Warren
Edge	King	Philpps	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	Ladd	Pomerene	Watson, Ind.
Gerry	La Follette	Robinson	Willis
Glass	McKellar	Sheppard
Hale	McKinley	Shields
Harris	McNary	Simmons

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators having answered to their names a quorum is present. The Senator from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, there persists a misapprehension with regard to the purposes of the so-called Campbell-Willis beer bill and the amendments to it adopted by the Senate. An effort has been made, whether innocently or designedly I know not, to create and to foster the impression that the bill is passed for the purpose of preventing an inundation of brewed beverages in the event the bill is not passed immediately.

It is charged by an insidious propaganda that those who oppose the bill are the secret and sinister friends and emissaries of the brewers and the bootleggers; that this fight for constitutional liberty is a mere camouflage, a mask behind which they are secretly aiding and abetting the violators of the law, the petty and contemptible vendors of alcoholic liquors.

Mr. President, that argument—no, it is not an argument; it is a statement which hardly deserves an answer. It is absurd upon its face. The Senate does not determine by this bill whether beer shall be sold or prohibited as a beverage or whether any other beverage shall be sold or prohibited.

This is not a question as to the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment; this is not a question as to the enforcement of the Volstead Act. Good or bad, the eighteenth amendment has been adopted; wise or unwise, the Volstead Act is a part of the organic law of the land. No Senator who opposes this bill is opposing the eighteenth amendment. No Senator who opposes this bill is opposing the Volstead Act. No Senator who opposes this bill is advocating the sale of any kind of an alcoholic beverage. This bill has nothing to do with the sale of beverage alcohol.

This bill, in the first place, provides for prohibition of the medicinal use of alcohol in certain forms, although the eighteenth amendment does not prohibit the medicinal use of alcohol in any form whatever. This bill proposes that a legislative body, comprising one doctor in its membership, shall pass upon a question which no man who is not a doctor can determine. With the exception of the Senator from Delaware [Dr. BALL] I doubt if there is a Senator in this body who knows anything more about the medicinal use of alcohol than he does about repairing his watch; and yet, in answer to the demand of a propaganda, laymen, lawyers have resolved themselves into a pharmaceutical association and are passing upon a technical question about which doctors differ and in open violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Outside of the constitutional question involved it is a matter of comparatively small importance to the average man whether doctors be permitted to prescribe medicinal beer or not. In that connection I ask to have inserted in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks a letter written to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] by Dr. Chadwick Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Without objection, the request will be granted.

[The letter referred to will be found at the conclusion of Mr. STANLEY's remarks.]

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, the Volstead Act has been on the statute books for some time, and yet I have never heard any complaint of doctors abusing the right to prescribe beer. I do not believe that, with the present regulations, if this proposed act were not passed, beer would be used even for medicinal purposes to any great extent. Under the regulations beer must be first prescribed by a doctor for a person who needs it; then it must be bought from a drug store. Drug stores are dainty places; they are not better qualified to handle beer by the case than they are to handle lard by the pound or salt by the barrel. No sensible bootlegger, no brewer with any knowledge of his business has any hope that he will ever be able to flood the community with beverage beer by virtue of the failure of the enactment of the Willis-Campbell bill. So as far as that proposition is concerned, it may be dismissed.

The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, admits that there were very few brewers demanding permits to sell medicinal beer. I know of no interest or concern among the manufacturers of any kind of liquor who are opposing the passage of this bill; some distillers are very much in favor of it. They have telegraphed the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STRELLING], in charge of the bill, urging its passage. So this is not a question of the sale of beverage alcohol; it is not a question of preventing the use of beverage alcohol as wine or beer or whisky; it is not a temperance question; it is purely a legal question.

It becomes necessary for this propaganda to have something to do or "Othello's occupation's gone"; there is no reason for the Anti-Saloon League unless there is some law to be passed; there is no need for a lobby unless there are Senators and Representatives to be lobbied. Were it not that this bill is utterly in violation of the Constitution and were it not that no man, be he wet or dry, in the liquor business or out of it, need concern himself about this innocuous thing that simply gives a lot of people something to do and something to talk about.

Mr. President, let us look now at section 6 of the conference report. It provides:

That any officer, agent, or employee of the United States engaged in the enforcement of this act, or the national prohibition act, or any other law of the United States, who shall search any private dwelling as defined in the national prohibition act, and occupied as such dwelling, without a warrant directing such search, or who while so engaged shall without a search warrant maliciously and without reasonable cause search any other building or property, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined for a first offense not more than $1,000, and for a subsequent offense not more than $1,000 or imprisonment not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

That is to say, this amendment provides, first, a fine and then a fine and imprisonment for any officer who shall without a warrant "search any private dwelling as defined in the national prohibition act, and occupied as such dwelling." As defined in the national prohibition act it must be a permanent residence occupied as a private dwelling, in which event a search warrant is necessary to enter it under this proposed act in case the owner is suspected of having contraband liquors in his possession. If, however, any other part of the curtilage is suspected, any other house or any other building, no safeguard is thrown around it. If a man is a guest in a hotel, his bedroom may be searched and his property may be seized without a warrant; his papers and effects may be searched and seized in his office, in his hotel, in any other place than a private dwelling.

It is claimed by the propaganda which is behind this amendment that it extends the privilege conferred by the Constitution of the United States. It is a little surprising, Mr. President, after houses which are occupied as dwellings have been repeatedly searched without a warrant right here in Washington, after such practice has been so common as to demand and to occasion a nation-wide protest, to find they have suddenly become so tender of the rights of those suspected of moonshining or of selling or having alcoholic liquors in their possession that they throw about a dwelling a safeguard not demanded by the Constitution; that they give to violators of the prohibition law security not hitherto contained in the Constitution of the United States and not hitherto provided by statute. Just why this tenderness, I do not know; but, Mr. President, the trouble about it is if that is the case it is worthless. If the citizen has no constitutional guaranty, if the organic law of the land has not thrown around him and his person certain privileges and immunities, and if he is dependent upon this propaganda for this ephemeral protection, the same power that gave can take away, and when finally the last remnant of the love of personal liberty, the last fleeting thought of the sanctity of the home has been undermined and poisoned thus, this proviso will go as easily as it is now temporarily inserted.

Mr. President, this provision was placed in there because they dared not at this time boldly proclaim their interpretation of the law of the land as applied to the citizen. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], while refusing to be interrupted, at last replied to a single question while addressing the Senate. I asked:

Is it the contention of the Senator that prohibition officers can search the property of citizens upon bare suspicion?

Certainly—

Said Senator NELSON—

In respect to that subject matter they have the powers of constables.

The Senator maintained that a constable can search at will the person and property of any citizen upon bare suspicion. They did not dare to tell the public that they so interpreted the Constitution of their country and the law of the land as to enable any prohibition officer, vague as that term may be, any inspector, or any snooping spy, to invade the sanctity of the home without any kind or character of authorization from any kind or character of magistrate. All that you have to do is to fix a star on an inspector, and the Senator from Minnesota says that he has the right to break open any door, to enter any curtilage, to spy into any baggage, to poke his nose into any conveyance, to run his hands over the body of any man or woman, if he suspects that there is liquor there; and now, says the Senator from Minnesota, and say the propagandists for this measure, "We do not propose to exercise this authority to search and seize without a warrant in so far as a dwelling is concerned if it is a private dwelling and actually occupied by the owner thereof." If it is a rented house you can go in, I presume.

Mr. President, if they have a right to enter one house, they have a right to enter another. I have defied the proponents of this measure, who are great lawyers, and I now challenge any lawyer on either side of this Chamber to produce one single, solitary decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that winks at the idea that in so far as the right to enter without a search warrant is concerned there is any difference in the protection afforded by the law to one house owned by the citizen and another. It does not matter whether it is a dwelling house or a storehouse or a warehouse or an office; his protection against having his private papers searched, his private property invaded, is just as sacred in one case as in another.

They have utterly confused the difference between the sanctity of property and the privacy of premises. There is an impropriety about entering the bedroom of a lady without knocking, but you have the same legal right to go into one room that you have to go into another. The law does not make one room, the room in which you sleep, more sacred than the room in which you eat, or the room in which you entertain your friends more sacred than the room in which you dine. It is amazing that it should be necessary for any lawyer to explain simple and elementary principles of this character to the lawyers of the Senate.

The fourth amendment provides that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses"—not dwellings, not homes, but houses—"shall not be violated." Did they use the word "houses," meaning "homes?" Was it a loose expression on the part of the makers of the Constitution of the United States? Let us see. It was only a few years before this amendment was written, as I shall further show, as Mr. Justice Bradley tells us in the case of Boyd against The United States, that the general warrants issued against the citizens of New England, against which James Otis inveighed; and the case of Wilkes was then fresh in the minds of the makers of the Constitution, said the court in that case, when they wrote that amendment into the organic law of the land. Now, the facts are that these general warrants were not aimed at the homes of the citizens of Boston or anywhere else. These general warrants were used to enter the warehouses of the citizen, to enter their storehouses, and, as I have already called to the attention of the Senate, the news came that warehouses and storehouses were to be invaded by these spies.

Mr. President, I shall discuss at length the cases just decided by the Supreme Court of the United States of Gould against The United States and Amos against The United States, in which the doctrine is laid down that any search without a warrant is unreasonable, because it is unconstitutional. In the Amos case they searched a storehouse. In the case which I shall read at length, just decided in Kentucky, of Youman against Commonwealth, they searched a storehouse. There never has been any difference between the sanctity, the security of a citizen's house against a search, if he made it the repository of his private papers and his private property; between the house in which he slept and the house in which he attended to his business; between his dwelling and his store.

It is an absurd distinction. It is the artificial creation of these men who dare not to invade the home, not that they respect any provision of the Constitution of the United States, but they respect a certain Saxon instinct that rises above law; and even those who obey the whip, those who listen to the threat, who cower under the lash of this propaganda that has threatened all of us with destruction—I presume the Senator from Tennessee has been warned—

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. And the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON]—you have been notified that you are marked men?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Oh, yes.

Mr. STANLEY. That sort of a threat has its effect even in this body; but even the threat of political death is not yet able to make an avowed prohibitionist sit idly by while a snooping spy runs his nose under the bed and into the closets of the wife of a reformer, and for very shame they put this provision in here. We do not ask to enjoy the rights guaranteed us by the Constitution of the United States at the capricious grace of any propagandist.

Let us see: What is secure from search and seizure? The person, houses, papers, and effects. If one is secure, another is secure. The house is no more secure than the effects. What are a man's effects? In those days they traveled by coach. His conveyance—his portmanteau, his carpetbag, his baggage—are not these his effects? The citizen shall be secure, says the Constitution—

Against unreasonable searches and seizures, * * * and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Let us see whether this immunity from search and seizure attached merely to the dwelling or threw its aegis about the property, the curtilage, the castle of the citizen.

How mean, how small, how shrunken, is the measure of our liberties compared to that enjoyed by our fathers!

We are going to agree that nothing shall be immune from the insolent intrusion of the meanest petty officer except the parlor, bedroom, and bath of a citizen. Outside of that, come when you please, spy as much as you like, take what you want; the Constitution does not protect anything except the place where we sleep and the place where we eat.

The greatest of English orators has said that, "The poorest man in his cottage may bid defiance to all the forces of the Crown. It may be frail; its roof may shake; the wind may blow through it; the storm may enter; but the King of England can not enter it, and with all of his powers dares not cross the threshold of that ruined tenement."

An Englishman in his castle can defy the King, but an American 3 feet from the place where he slept or ate must submit to intrusion and insult from the meanest spy the Government ever commissioned to invade the sanctity of his person and his property.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, when Lord Chat-ham uttered those sentences, which are immortal, and which were then thought to be axiomatic—

Mr. STANLEY. They were, for a hundred years after that.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. And had been for a thousand years—he was speaking upon just such a bill as this, an excise bill.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, let us see whether this was the conception of the sanctity of the freeman's person and property when this question was determined. You have been told in the case of Boyd against United States that the recent revolt against search warrants was against general warrants, the invasion of the citizen's home, which had been tried in England in the Wilkes case and the case of Entick against Carrington, and in the United States in the cases in which James Otis appeared immortally.

In the case of Entick v. Carrington (19 Hornell's State Trials, p. 1030), which is quoted at such length and is declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to be an eternal landmark, a monument of abiding and immutable law, Lord Camden discusses the property of the citizen, and states that it is immune from the invasion of a civil officer without a search warrant. After describing the power to search and seize, the court said:

Such is the power, and therefore one should naturally expect that the law to warrant it should be clear in proportion as the power is exorbitant.

If it is law it will be found in our books. If it is not to be found there it is not law.

The great end for which men entered into society was to secure their property. That right is preserved sacred and incommunicable in all instances where it has not been taken away or abridged by some public law for the good of the whole. The cases where this right of property is set aside by positive law are various. Distresses, executions, forfeitures, taxes, etc., are all of this description.

This was a case, mind you, Mr. President, where a man entered not without a warrant but with a warrant improperly executed. In this case this officer came from the secretary of state of England. He came with a warrant which described the person but was general as to the things to be seized. He came with the kind of a warrant which had been issued for a hundred years, which had been sustained by the Crown. It was a thousand years from the time men threw the first barriers about the sanctity of the home before any man in Europe or America ever dreamed of entering the sanctity of the citizen's possessions without any character of warrant or authorization.

Does Lord Camden stop him at the front door? Does he stop him at the bedroom, where women are in negligee? No; he stops him at the point where the property of the citizen has its outermost boundary. He said:

The great end for which men entered into society was to secure their property. That right is preserved sacred and incommunicable in all instances where it has not been taken away or abridged by some public law for the good of the whole. The cases where this right of property is set aside by positive law are various. Distresses, executions, forfeiture, taxes, etc., are all of this description, wherein every man by common consent gives up that right for the sake of justice and the general good. By the laws of England every invasion of private property, be it ever so minute, is a trespass. No man can set his foot upon my ground without my license but he is liable to an action, though the damage be nothing, which is proved by every declaration in trespass, where the defendant is called upon to answer for bruising the grass and even treading upon the soil. If he admits the fact, he is bound to show by way of justification that some positive law has empowered or excused him. The justification is submitted to the judges, who are to look into the books, and if such a justification can be maintained by the text of the statute law or by the principles of common law.

If no such excuse can be found or produced, the silence of the books is an authority against the defendant, and the plaintiff must have judgment.

According to this reasoning it is now incumbent upon the defendants to show the law by which this seizure is warranted. If that can not be done it is a trespass.

The great Camden said that to enter with an improperly executed warrant and set your foot upon the soil of a citizen, bruise his grass, or cross the outermost boundary is unlawful.

Papers are the owner's goods and chattels, and they are his dearest property.

Are they less dear because they are in his office? Are they less dear because they are in his hotel? Are they less dear because they are in his effects and not locked in a cellar? This distinction between one house and another house, this effort to split before you defile the Constitution, is absurd. The court further said in that case:

Papers are the owner's goods and chattels; they are his dearest property; and are so far from enduring a seizure that they will hardly bear an inspection; and though the eye can not by the laws of England be guilty of a trespass, yet where private papers are removed and carried away, the secret nature of those goods will be an aggravation of the trespass and demand more considerable damages in that respect. Where is the written law that gives any magistrate such a power? I can safely answer there is none; and therefore it is too much for us without such authority to pronounce a practice legal which would be subversive of all the comforts of society.

Observe, too, the caution with which the law proceeds in this singular case, even where they have a law:

There must be a full charge upon oath of a theft committed. The owner must swear that the goods are lodged in such a place. He must attend at the execution of the warrant to show them to the officer, who must see that they answer the description. And, lastly, the owner must abide the event at his peril, for if the goods are not found he is a trespasser, and the officer being an innocent person will be always a ready and convenient witness against him.

On the contrary, in the case before us nothing is described, nor distinguished; no charge is requisite to prove that the party has any criminal papers in his custody; no person present to separate or select; no person to prove in the owner's behalf the officer's misbehavior. To say the truth, he can not easily misbehave unless he pilfers, for he can not take more than all.

If it should be said that the same law which has with so much circumspection guarded the case of stolen goods from mischief, would likewise in this case protect the subject by adding proper checks; would require proofs beforehand; would call up the servant to stand by and overlook; would require him to take an exact inventory and deliver a copy; my answer is that all these precautions would have been long since established by law if the power itself had been legal, and that the want of them is an undeniable argument against the legality of the thing.

Cooley, on page 372 of the sixth edition of his work on Constitutional Limitations, has determined this matter categorically. He said:

In other cases than those to which we have referred, and subject to the general police power of the State, the law favors the complete and undisturbed dominion of every man over his own premises—and protects him therein with such jealousy that he may defend his possession against intruders, in person or by his servants or guests, even to the extent of taking the life of the intruder, if that seem essential to the defense.

Not his house—

And this means not simply the dwelling house proper but includes whatever is within the curtilage, as understood at the common law.

Then he cites the case of Pond v. The People (8 Mich., 150), in which case a man was assaulted in an outhouse in which he used to keep fishing tackle, nets, and so forth; State v. Scheele (18 Atlantic Repts., 256), in which the trouble occurred near an outhouse, and the court held the citizen had the same right as if the attack had been made in the home; Parrish v. Commonwealth (81 Va.); and Bledsoe v. Commonwealth (7 S. W. Rept.), a Kentucky case.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

Mr. STANLEY. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Before the Senator leaves that point, I would be glad to have him remind the public through his address that the doctrine which he has stated so clearly does not rest totally upon American decisions, but is laid down in the standard law books of England, such as the Commentaries of Blackstone and the decisions of Lord Mansfield. It is one of the elemental principles of law that one can expel a trespasser and use just such force as is necessary to expel him.

Mr. STANLEY. As I said in the beginning, I feel it incumbent upon me to apologize to the lawyers of the Senate and to so great a lawyer as the Senator from Georgia for discussing this elemental proposition at such length. It is like repeating the multiplication table to a great engineer. However, the stubborn fact remains that if I am right in my contention, this so-called article 6 of the conference is palpably unconstitutional.

If the Senator from Georgia will recall, this amendment provides—and the Senator from Minnesota is perfectly sincere in what he said—that a spy, an inspector, a constable—constable is his idea—can upon suspicion, for the purpose of search and seizure, enter any part of any property not actually occupied as a dwelling. Now, it would be none the less unconstitutional if it left out the word "dwelling." As a legal proposition, I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I can not, to save my life, see where the amendment is helped by this gratuity, this bonus, on the part of the propagandists.

Again, Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to another matter. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] said, and he is chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and most active in this behalf, that any constable has the right to search and seize, upon suspicion, upon probable cause. Why, in all the history of American and English jurisprudence no constable was ever given any discretion except to arrest for a misdemeanor committed in his presence or to apprehend a felon about to escape. Constables are not chosen on account of their discretion. They are chosen on account of their vigor and their fearlessness. I do not mean to speak disrespectfully of a constable, but the duties of the office of a constable, the duties of the office of an apprehending officer of any kind, do not require any great amount of discretion; they require often daring and courage. For that reason the right to search and seize was never vested in a constable.

A constable can not issue a search warrant. He can not do it in England and he can not do it in the United States. To procure a search warrant one must go before a magistrate, a judge, before some man of judgment and discretion. Magistrates are elected, judges are selected, on account of their probity, their discretion. Before a search warrant can issue two men must have a suspicion. The officer must have it or he would not ask for the search warrant. The magistrate must have it or he would not issue the search warrant.

A great judge in a case recently decided in New York has elaborated this question. I ask permission to incorporate that decision in the Record without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. Says Judge Mulqueen:

You know the old axiom, "An Englishman's home is his castle." What did that mean? It meant that every Englishman's home was a sacred place which could only be entered in the way prescribed by law, by invitation of an occupant, or in the King's name, or in the regular way by lawful warrant for search or seizure.

In modern times we are apt to forget those conditions. But that was one of the principles that the founders of our Government adhered to, that every man is sacred and safe in his home, secure from invasion except in the way prescribed by law.

No man can say, "I will go into that house because I suspect that something wrong is going on." A judge must first issue a warrant, or a magistrate, and if that magistrate acts on improper and insufficient evidence he is held personally responsible.

So if evidence is brought before you which has been secured by violation of the constitutional rights of the individual, ratified and affirmed by the constitution of this State and by our bill of rights, reject it.

Mr. STANLEY. If the magistrate issues the search warrant without probable cause, he is held responsible. Now, we have the anomalous situation of leaving naked and defenseless the house of the citizen, the property of the citizen, to the suspicion not of a magistrate but of a spy, not of a judge but of an inspector, a hired sleuth.

Mr. President, the right to arrest with or without a warrant, the right to apprehend the person committing a felony or suspected of having committed felony or to apprehend him in the act of committing a misdemeanor, with or without a warrant, and to immediately deprive him of certain things then in his possession that will enable him to escape or to do violence to the arresting officer or that tends to establish his guilt, is entirely different from the right to search the property of that same person not then in his possession or under his control. It is entirely different. The distinction has been drawn a thousand times.

In order that there might be no distinction touching the right of the officer to arrest with or without a warrant and to search the body of an offender, and the right to issue search warrants or warrants authorizing the search of premises and the seizure of property, when the Stanley amendment was offered I deliberately cut out of it the word "person," so that as originally drawn there was no question about the immunity of the person from search before arrest or from search after arrest. It is not questioned by the amendment. The question has never been raised by those opposed to the bill. The right of an officer to apprehend a person charged with a felony or to apprehend a person charged with committing a misdemeanor is not questioned by those who oppose this legislation, never has been, and is not now questioned. Those two things differ entirely.

In order that the twilight zone between them might not obscure a concise definition of the rights of the citizen, we eliminated any immunity which the citizen might have from arrest or search and seizure, as far as his person is concerned. Notwithstanding that fact, the Senator from Minnesota has spoken for hours and quoted case after case, State decision after State decision, every one of which has to do with the right of an officer to arrest without a warrant a person suspected of or charged with an offense or in the act of committing an offense, and not a single case touching the right to search his property or his house.

This question was lately decided in the city of Lexington by an accomplished judge. A man was charged with having committed a robbery, was arrested by an officer.

After the man was put in jail the officer went into his home and searched it and found some of the stolen property. That property was brought into court, and the judge very properly said, "You had no warrant to go into that man's house. That property can not be used for evidence, because it was wrongfully obtained. You had a perfect right to arrest the person of the offender upon probable cause, but you had no right to search his premises without a warrant." The distinction is perfectly palpable and perfectly simple.

Mr. President, an attempt has been made to split this amendment. It has been claimed that the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures is all the protection thrown about the citizen; that there are two classes of seizures, reasonable and unreasonable; that unreasonable seizures are prohibited by the Constitution, but reasonable seizures are permitted. In this connection I wish to read one section from Story on the Constitution, as follows:

Sec. 1902. This provision seems indispensable to the full enjoyment of the rights of personal security, personal liberty, and private property. It is little more than the affirmance of a great constitutional doctrine of the common law; and its introduction into the amendments was doubtless occasioned by the strong sensibility excited, both in England and America, upon the subject of general warrants almost upon the eve of the American Revolution. Although special warrants upon complaints under oath, stating the crime, and the party by name against whom the accusation is made, are the only legal warrants upon which an arrest can be made according to the law of England, yet a practice had obtained in the secretaries' office ever since the restoration (grounded on some clauses in the acts for regulating the press) of issuing general warrants to take up, without naming any persons in particular, the authors, printers, and publishers of such obscene or seditious libels as were particularly specified in the warrant. When these acts expired in 1694 the same practice was continued in every reign and under every administration, except the last four years of Queen Anne's reign, down to the year 1763. The general warrants so issued in general terms authorized the officers to apprehend all persons suspected, without naming or describing any person in special. In the year 1763, the legality of these general warrants was brought before the King's Bench for solemn decision, and they were adjudged to be illegal and void for uncertainty. A warrant, and the complaint on which the same is founded, to be legal must not only state the name of the party but also the time and place and nature of the offense with reasonable certainty.

Let us analyze this argument. Said the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], the Constitution prohibits only unreasonable searches and seizures; reasonable searches and seizures are permitted; and for that reason, because reasonable searches and seizures are not absolutely prohibited, they can be made without a warrant.

That contention ends in an absolute absurdity. If there are two classes of searches and seizures, reasonable and unreasonable, and reasonable searches and seizures can be made without a warrant, then the only kind of seizures for which a warrant is necessary are unreasonable searches and seizures, and unreasonable searches and seizures can not be made at all. A reasonable search and seizure is one for which you can give a reason. You can not secure a warrant unless you have probable cause; you can not have probable cause, i. e., a reason for doing an unreasonable thing, because you can not give a probable cause for a thing when there is no cause. Unreasonable searches and seizures are absolutely prohibited by the Constitution of the United States without regard to a warrant. With or without a warrant, no man can make an unreasonable search and seizure. The Constitution provides that citizens shall at all times in their persons, houses, papers, and effects be secure from unreasonable searches and seizures. There is only one kind that can be made, and that kind is a reasonable search. The meaning of the Constitution is that no warrant for a reasonable search shall issue "but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized." The effort to draw a distinction between two kinds of searches and seizures and to leave an inference that one kind requires a warrant and that the other kind does not must fall utterly to the ground.

From the case of Boyd against the United States the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] quoted the following language in arguing that there are two kinds of searches and seizures, one needing a warrant and the other not, intimating that the Supreme Court had such a distinction in mind in the Boyd case:

The search for and seizure of stolen or forfeited goods or goods liable to duties and concealed to avoid the payment thereof are totally different things from a search for and seizure of a man's private books and papers for the purpose of obtaining information therein contained or of using them as evidence against him. The two things differ toto coelo.

Is reference here made to the difference between searches and seizures that require a warrant and searches and seizures that do not? That is not in the judge's mind; that had nothing to do with it. It was the difference between things which can be seized after a search and things which can not be seized; the difference between the right of an officer to take property after it has been found, because of the fact that the Government had some title to it or that the holder had none, and to take things to which neither the Government nor the officer had any right, and the officer's only claim was for the purpose of using it as evidence elsewhere.

In the one case the Government is entitled to possession of the property; in the other it is not.

The court is referring not to the right to search but to the right to seize.

The seizure of stolen goods is authorized by the common law; and the seizure of goods forfeited for a breach of the revenue laws, or concealed to avoid the duties payable on them, has been authorized by English statutes for at least two centuries past (note by the court, 12 Car. 2, ch. 19; 13 and 14 Car. 2, ch. 11; 6 and 7 W. & M., ch. 1; 6 Geo. 1, ch. 21; 26 Geo. III, ch. 59; 29 Geo. III, ch. 68, sec. 153; etc.; and see the article "Excise, etc." in Burn's Justice and Williams's Justice, passim, and Evans's Statutes, vol. 2, p. 221, subpages 176, 190, 225, 361, 431, 447), and the like seizures have been authorized by our own revenue acts from the commencement of the Government. The first statute passed by Congress to regulate the collection of duties, the act of July 31, 1789 (1 Stat., 29, 43), contains provisions to this effect. As this act was passed by the same Congress which proposed for adoption the original amendments to the Constitution it is clear that the Members of that body did not regard searches and seizures of this kind as "unreasonable," and they are not embraced within the prohibition of the amendment. So, also, the supervision authorized to be exercised by officers of the revenue over the manufacture or custody of excisable articles and the entries thereof in books required by law to be kept for their inspection.

But, when examined with care, it is manifest that there is a total unlikeness of these official acts and proceedings to that which is now under consideration. In the case of stolen goods, the owner from whom they were stolen is entitled to their possession; and in the case of excisable or dutiable articles, the Government has an interest in them for the payment of the duties thereon, and until such duties are paid has a right to keep them under observation, or to pursue and drag them from concealment; and in the case of goods seized on attachment or execution, the creditor is entitled to their seizure in satisfaction of his debt; and the examination of a defendant under oath to obtain a discovery of concealed property or credits is a proceeding merely civil to effect the ends of justice, and is no more than what the court of chancery would direct on a bill for discovery. Whereas by the proceeding now under consideration the court attempts to extort from the party his private books and papers to make him liable for a penalty or to forfeit his property.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Kentucky began reading. May I ask from what he is reading?

Mr. STANLEY. I am reading from the case of Boyd against The United States (116 U. S., 616), I will say to the Senator. The Senator has, as I understand, argued that Justice Bradley in that case has spoken of two kinds of searches and seizures that differ toto coelo, and has drawn the inference that one was a search and seizure which required a warrant and the other was a search and seizure which did not require a warrant. The court was not talking about anything of the kind; the court was not talking about searches at all; the court was talking then about seizures when it said:

You have a right, whether you search or not, if you come across goods that are excisable or if you come across stolen goods and you know they are stolen, to seize them; but you can not seize a man's books and papers, because the Government has no title to them, for the purpose of using them in evidence against him in violation of the fifth, not the fourth, amendment to the Constitution.

That is the distinction which is drawn by Justice Bradley.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit an observation in that connection, I desire to say that the court had before it a case in which it would be unlawful to seize under a search warrant property that was taken for the purpose of obtaining incriminating evidence.

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly; in the Boyd case the court referred to the seizure of books and papers, and Justice Bradley quoted—and there is no use of repeating it—with complete and unequivocal affirmation the case of Entick against Carrington, in which Lord Camden says:

You can not search without a warrant; you can not enter the premises for the purposes of seizure or search without a warrant, no matter whether it is for the purpose of seizing stolen goods or whether it is for the purpose of seizing books and papers which are the private property of the owner; your right to seize depends upon the title of the owner to the property; but the right to search is predicated upon a warrant, whether the goods are stolen or whether it is some property of the owner which you want for evidential purposes.

Am I correct in that?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. That is correct. I was going to remark to my friend from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], who, no doubt on account of illness, was not present when I addressed the Senate the other day on this very subject, that the principle which was announced by the Senator from Kentucky is found in Boutwell's work on the Constitution, which is one of the most recent, one of the most thorough, and one of the highest standing volumes on the subject. In that work the right of the Federal Government to keep under surveillance—not to seize, but to keep under observation—certain imported goods was put upon the ground that the Federal Government had an interest in those goods so long as the import duties had not been paid.

I will say further that, in my judgment, there is no Senator who can construe the fourth amendment and account for the manner in which the word "warrants" is used after the comma in the second clause without necessarily coming to the conclusion that no warrant shall issue unreasonably, and that the second clause simply provides what shall be the reasonable ground upon which a warrant shall be issued.

Mr. STANLEY. I think I shall be able to show that beyond any doubt.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, let me suggest in connection with what the Senator from Georgia has said that the case of Boyd against United States goes much further than to permit the seizure of goods on which duties or imposts are due. Let me quote briefly from the decision.

Mr. STANLEY. I understand the Senator is about to quote from the case of Boyd against United States. From what page?

Mr. STERLING. I read from page 623, as follows:

So, also, the supervision authorized to be exercised by officers of the revenue over the manufacture or custody of excisable articles and the entries thereof in books required by law to be kept for their inspection are necessarily excepted out of the category of unreasonable searches and seizures.

I call especial attention to the next sentence:

So, also, the laws which provide for the search and seizure of articles and things which it is unlawful for a person to have in his possession for the purpose of issue or disposition, such as counterfeit coin, lottery tickets, implements of gambling, etc., are not within this category.

So, Mr. President, intoxicating liquors, the transportation, sale, and possession of which are forbidden by law, would by perfect analogy come within the opinion expressed by the court.

Mr. STANLEY. But there is no intimation in the case that there can be a search for excisable articles or gambling tools or counterfeit money or anything else without a warrant; the Senator from South Dakota seems to have overlooked that; because Justice Bradley in the Boyd case quotes with unqualified affirmation the opinion in Entick against Carrington, in which Lord Camden goes back to the days of my Lord Coke, declaring that even in the case of searching for stolen goods the law looked with disfavor upon the practice under a warrant, and quotes with approval the language of Entick against Carrington, in which the court says that it does not matter whether it be stolen goods or counterfeit money or what not, the premises of the person suspected can not be entered without a warrant describing the thing to be taken. Does the Senator mean to claim that under the Boyd case or under any other case a house or other premises can be entered and searched for stolen goods without a warrant? Is that the contention of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. That is not the contention, and it is not necessary for the Senator from South Dakota to make any such contention as that. I am taking the case where goods are unlawfully in the possession of a person and the use or disposition of which by that person is unlawful, in which case the seizure was authorized without a warrant under the authority of the Boyd case, just as I read it a few moments ago.

Mr. STANLEY. I am not questioning and nobody here has questioned, and I have just so stated to the Senator from Georgia, as the record will show, that you can seize stolen property if you happen to find it; you can seize counterfeit money if you happen to see it lying around; you can seize excisable articles or contraband whisky if you see it; but you have no right to search for it without a warrant in any kind of a house that belongs to any citizen, and that is what the court says in the case of Boyd against The United States.

Does the Senator from South Dakota contend that if an individual is suspected of having gambling implements in his possession his premises can be entered without a warrant to search for them? The only thing for which you contend you have a right to enter a man's premises is liquor. You are driven to that—an absurd proposition on its face.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator from South Dakota was very unfortunate in citing the Boyd case without having read the decision. He read from obiter; but the decision of the court, as all lawyers know, is in the syllabus. It is just exactly the opposite of what the Senator from South Dakota said it was.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia adopts a new rule when he says that the decision of the court is in the syllabus. We read the syllabus or the syllabi of the decision, of course, for the main features or points of the case. I do not stop with reading the syllabus. I read the opinion of the court in order to know just what the court has decided; and I read not from the syllabus but from the court's opinion.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the court did not decide what the Senator from South Dakota says it decided.

Mr. STANLEY. Why, nothing that winks at it.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. And the Senator will find, in Boutwell's work on the Constitution, the law just exactly as I put it in the Record here two or three days ago.

Mr. STANLEY. To throw a flood of light upon this question, I will say to the Senator from Georgia, after reviewing the case of Entick against Carrington, in which Camden goes back, reviewing Coke, and takes the position that you have not the right to place your foot upon the grass in the execution of a search warrant without a trespass, that every part of the curtilage, everything within the widest area of private property, is immune from this outrage, again referring to this case of Boyd against United States—into which the Senator from South Dakota would read this strained and utterly baseless construction—the right to search without a warrant is categorically challenged.

In quoting Entick against Carrington with approval, the court says:

"I have now taken notice of everything that has been urged upon the present point, and upon the whole we are all of opinion that the warrant to seize and carry away the party's papers in the case of a seditious libel is illegal and void."

The principles laid down in this opinion affect the very essence of constitutional liberty and security. They reach further than the concrete form of the case then before the court, with its adventitious circumstances; they apply to all invasions on the part of the Government—

All invasions on the part of the Government, whether after counterfeit money, or contraband booze, or what not—all invasions on the part of the Government and its employees of the sanctity of a man's home and the privacies of life.

All invasions of the sanctity of a man's home and the privacies of life. Can you make it broader than that?

It is not the breaking of his doors and the rummaging of his drawers that constitute the essence of the offense, but it is the invasion of his indefeasible right of personal security, personal liberty, and private property where that right has never been forfeited by his conviction of some public offense, it is the invasion of this sacred right which underlies and constitutes the essence of Lord Camden's judgment. Breaking into a house and opening boxes and drawers are circumstances of aggravation, but any forcible and compulsory extortion of a man's own testimony or of his private papers to be used as evidence to convict him of crime or to forfeit his goods is within the condemnation of that judgment. In this regard the fourth and fifth amendments run almost into each other.

Can we doubt that when the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution of the United States were penned and adopted, the language of Lord Camden was relied on as expressing the true doctrine on the subject of searches and seizures, and as furnishing the true criteria of the reasonable and "unreasonable" character of such seizures?

The court refers to the doctrine of Lord Camden in Entick against Carrington, in which he said that no search could be made without a warrant.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I suggest to my friend, the Senator from Kentucky, to have the decision, the syllabus, or syllabi, whereby the court announce what they do decide, printed in his remarks, because they absolutely blow the Senator from South Dakota out of the water.

Mr. STANLEY. I shall be more than delighted to incorporate this syllabus into the RECORD, and I ask leave to print such portions of this decision as may be pertinent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

It does not require actual entry upon premises and search for and seizure of papers to constitute an unreasonable search and seizure within the meaning of the fourth amendment; a compulsory production of a party's private books and papers to be used against himself or his property in a criminal or penal proceeding, or for a forfeiture, is within the spirit and meaning of the amendment. * * * The seizure or compulsory production of a man's private papers to be used in evidence against him is equivalent to compelling him to be a witness against himself, and, in a prosecution for crime, penalty or forfeiture is equally within the prohibition of the fifth amendment.

Both amendments relate to the personal security of the citizen. They nearly run into and mutually throw light upon each other. When the thing forbidden in the fifth amendment, namely, compelling a man to be a witness against himself, is the object of the search and seizure of his private papers, it is an "unreasonable search and seizure" within the fourth amendment.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, again an effort has been made to split and to put a strained and fictitious interpretation upon this great case. Justice Miller also delivered a concurring opinion; and this great justice, considered by some to have been the most astute legal mind on that bench since John Marshall, in concurring, says:

The things here forbidden are two—search and seizure. And not all searches nor all seizures are forbidden, but only those that are unreasonable. Reasonable searches, therefore, may be allowed, and if the thing sought be found, it may be seized.

An effort has been made to read into this decision the right to search without a warrant. There is nothing in Justice Miller's decision that winks at such a right, and the most casual reading of the decision will show it. Justice Miller does not concur in the opinion expressed by Justice Bradley that the fourth amendment is violated, and he quotes the statute under which this case arose providing that where excisable goods or goods subject to duty were smuggled, a notice could be served upon the person possessing such goods to produce his books and papers connected with the transaction, and upon failure to produce them the allegations of the petition describing such papers and stating their contents should be taken as confessed.

Justice Miller says that there was no violation of the fourth amendment, since it was in the nature of a subpoena duces tecum, and was not in the nature of a seizure, the possession of the books and papers remaining in the defendant, and the two things had no reference whatever to searches with or without a warrant. He says that the things here forbidden are two—search and seizure—and that there was no effort to seize, and for that reason in this case the constitutional question of immunity from search and seizure was not raised.

Justice Day [in Weeks v. U. S., 232 U. S., p. 383] says:

While the framers of the Constitution had their attention drawn no doubt to the abuses of this power of searching private houses and seizing private papers, as practiced in England, it is obvious that they only intended to restrain the abuse, while they did not abolish the power. Hence, it is only unreasonable searches and seizures that are forbidden, and the means of securing this protection was by abolishing searches under warrants which were called general warrants, because they authorized searches in any place, for any thing.

This was forbidden, while searches founded on affidavits—

Searches founded on affidavits only, is what he means—and made under warrants which described the thing to be searched for, the person and place to be searched, are still permitted.

There are two kinds of searches and seizures—reasonable and unreasonable. Unreasonable searches and seizures, says Justice Miller, can not be made at all, and reasonable ones must be made under warrants founded on affidavits, according to the Constitution.

Mr. President, Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations has stated the same question with remarkable clearness. I read from page 364:

Near in importance to exemption from any arbitrary control of the person is that maxim of the common law which secures to the citizen immunity in his home against the prying eyes of the Government, and protection in person, property, and papers against even the process of the law, except in a few specified cases. The maxim that "every man's house is his castle" is made a part of our constitutional law in the clauses prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures, and has always been looked upon as of high value to the citizen.

The constitution of Kentucky is almost identical with the Constitution of the United States in so far as the provisions touching searches and seizures are concerned; and the learned justice, Justice Carroll, in deciding the case of Youman against Commonwealth, on October 5, 1920, discusses these two provisions as one—that is, the provision in the constitution of Kentucky and that in the Constitution of the United States.

In this case Youman had alcoholic liquors concealed in an outhouse—a garage, I think. It was not in his dwelling. The man was suspected of having this liquor for purposes of sale, and after having arrested him the officers entered this garage—not his dwelling, but his outhouse—and found large quantities of moonshine whisky in such containers as indicated a purpose to sell it. The man was convicted. The whisky was used as evidence against him, and he sought to have the whisky restored and complained that the constitutional privilege had been violated, that the premises could not have been searched without a warrant, and that the liquors obtained under the circumstances could not be used in evidence.

Said Judge Carroll, in speaking of the taking of this whisky out of this warehouse, not out of the citizen's residence:

That it is a flagrant violation of this section of the Constitution, which is only applicable to public officers, for an officer of the law without a valid search warrant to search the premises and possessions of an alleged offender for the purpose of discovering evidence against him, or to seize or take possession of any species of property discovered in such unlawful search, or to search his person until after he has been lawfully arrested, has been made so plain by the words of the section, and is so well known to people generally and has been so often decided by the courts of the country, that it would appear to be unnecessary to refer to any authority on the subject.

But notwithstanding this general knowledge of the prohibition against unlawful search it is not an uncommon thing in this State for officers of the law, urged in some cases by popular clamor, in others by the advice of persons in a position to exert influence, and in yet others by an exaggerated notion of their power and the pride of exploiting it, to disregard the law upon the assumption that the end sought to be accomplished will justify the means, and therefore no attention need be given to constitutional authority when public approval will commend the unlawful conduct.

And as there appears to be a growing public sentiment against the observance of or obedience to any constitutional restraint that obstructs or stands in the way of the desires of those who seek to accomplish their purposes regardless of Constitution or laws, we will be at some pains to set down in this opinion the constitutional provisions protecting the citizen against unlawful search and seizure and a few of the principal authorities in which the force and effect of these provisions have been explained and expounded.

He then, quoting the fourth amendment to the Constitution, cites the case of Boyd against The United States, to which the Senator from South Dakota has referred, saying:

In Boyd v. United States (116 U. S., 616, 29 Law. Ed., 746) Justice Bradley, in speaking for the court in a case in which the admissibility of evidence secured by means of an unlawful search and seizure was challenged, said, in speaking of the incalculable value to the citizen of the section of the Federal Constitution referred to and in commending what was said by an English judge on the subject, that "the principles laid down in this opinion affect the very essence of constitutional liberty and security. They reach further than the concrete form of the case then before the court, with its adventitious circumstances; they apply to all invasions on the part of the Government and its employees of the sanctity of a man's home and the privacies of life."

Then he quotes Weeks against United States, and continues:

In Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (p. 367) this is also said: "Near in importance to exemption from any arbitrary control of the person is that maxim of the common law which secures to the citizen immunity in his home against the prying eyes of the Government; and protection in person, property, and papers against even the process of the law, except in a few specified cases. The maxim that 'every man's house is his castle' is made a part of our constitutional law in the clauses prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures; and has always been looked upon as of high value to the citizen."

Now, I wish to call the Senate's attention especially to this conclusive and sweeping statement. Said Justice Carroll:

It will be observed that the Constitution secures the people against "unreasonable search and seizure," and from the use of the word "unreasonable," it might be thought that a reasonable search and seizure, or one that was not unreasonable, would be allowed without a search warrant. But there is no foundation for this construction. The section does not permit any kind or character of search of houses, papers, or possessions without a search warrant.

Mr. President, if there ever was a case in which a home could have been entered without a search warrant it was in the case of Weeks against the United States. Weeks was charged with having lottery tickets in his possession and of passing them through the mail, not with having a pint of whisky but with having gambling instruments in his possession. He was arrested, and evidence was found upon his person. They then entered his home without a warrant and took possession of the lottery tickets. They found the evidence of his guilt, and the court held not only that the man should be returned to his liberty but that the lottery tickets could not be used in evidence. In the face of a decision of that kind, as unequivocal and sweeping as that is, to attempt to tell the Senate, or to attempt to maintain to any court of the country, that the only things which can not be seized are papers or some innocent article; that excisable articles, that gambling instruments, or alcoholic liquors can be taken from the premises of a citizen, his house, or his effects without a warrant is to insult the intelligence of any lawyer who can read and write.

Again quoting, with approval, Boyd against the United States and Bramm against the United States, the court said:

"It was in that case demonstrated that both of these amendments contemplated perpetuating, in their full efficacy, by means of a constitutional provision, principles of humanity and civil liberty which had been secured in the mother country only after years of struggle, so as to implant them in our institutions in the fullness of their integrity, free from the possibilities of future legislative change."

The effect of the fourth amendment is to put the courts of the United States and Federal officials, in the exercise of their power and authority, under limitations and restraints as to the exercise of such power and authority, and to forever secure the people, their persons, houses, papers, and effects against all unreasonable searches and seizures under the guise of law. This protection reaches all alike, whether accused of crime or not, and the duty of giving to it force and effect is obligatory upon all entrusted under our Federal system with the enforcement of the laws.

Does that settle the question asked by the Senator from South Dakota? Again I read:

The accused, without awaiting his trial, made timely application to the court for an order for the return of these letters, as well as other property. This application was denied, the letters retained and put in evidence, after a further application at the beginning of the trial, both applications asserting the rights of the accused under the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution. If letters and private documents can thus be seized and held and used in evidence against a citizen accused of an offense, the protection of the fourth amendment declaring his right to be secure against such searches and seizures is of no value, and, so far as those thus placed are concerned, might as well be stricken from the Constitution. The efforts of the courts and their officials to bring the guilty to punishment, praiseworthy as they are, are not to be aided by the sacrifice of those great principles established by years of endeavor and suffering which have resulted in their embodiment in the fundamental law of the land.

For that reason the court directed that the gambling instruments be returned to the man who owned them.

Mr. President, this question has been eternally settled. I do not like to prophesy what a court will do, but I have no more doubt that I will live to see to-morrow's sun than I have that the Supreme Court of the United States will spew this thing out of its mouth.

I have here the advance sheets of the United States Supreme Court issued April 1, 1921. On January 4, 1921, two decisions were handed down by Justice Clarke of the Supreme Court of the United States, one the case of Gould against The United States, in which papers were taken without a warrant. The other was the case of Amos against The United States, in which whisky was taken from a storehouse without a warrant, not from a dwelling, and Justice Clarke, in deciding the Amos case, said:

Mainly the questions just presented for decision are ruled by the conclusions this day announced in No. 250, Gould v. United States.

So that the law in the Gould case is made applicable to the case of liquors taken without a warrant. The question as to whether the seizure was reasonable or unreasonable was raised there, and every question raised by the Senator from South Dakota was raised in that case. In that case the plaintiff was represented by Charles E. Hughes, the present Secretary of State. The court said:

It would not be possible to add to the emphasis with which the framers of our Constitution and this court (in Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S., 616; 29 L. ed. 746; 6 Sup. Ct. Rep., 524; in Weeks v. United States, 232 U. S., 383; 58 L. ed., 652; L. R. A., 1915B, 834; 34 Sup. Ct. Rep., 341; Ann. Cas. 1515C, 1177; and in Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. United States, 251 U. S., 385; 64 L. ed., 319; 40 Sup. Ct. Rep., 182) have declared the importance to political liberty and to the welfare of our country of the due observance of the rights guaranteed under the Constitution by these two amendments. The effect of the decisions cited is: That such rights are declared to be indispensable to the "full enjoyment of personal security, personal liberty—

How strange that those words should be in there—

"and private property"; that they are to be regarded as of the very essence of constitutional liberty, and that the guaranty of them is as important and as imperative as are the guaranties of the other fundamental rights of the individual citizen—the right to trial by jury, to the writ of habeas corpus, and to due process of law. It has repeatedly decided that these amendments should receive a liberal construction so as to prevent stealthy encroachment upon or "gradual depreciation" of the right secured by them by imperceptible practice of courts or by the well intentioned but mistakenly overzealous executive officers.

The wording of the fourth amendment implies that search warrants were in familiar use when the Constitution was adopted, and plainly that when issued "upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized," searches and seizures made under them are to be regarded as not unreasonable, and therefore not prohibited by the amendment.

It must be remembered that searches and seizures are authorized by the fourth amendment as well as prohibited by the fourth amendment. The fourth amendment is not only inhibitory, it is directory. It prescribes the way by which searches and seizures can be made, but in doing so, as Justice Clarke has well said, prescribes the only way:

Searches and seizures are as constitutional under the amendment when made under valid search warrants as they are unconstitutional, because unreasonable, when made without them—the permission of the amendment has the same constitutional warrant as the prohibition has, and the definition of the former restrains the scope of the latter. All of this is abundantly recognized in the opinions of the Boyd case.

I would like to call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota to this statement. Justice Clarke said:

Searches and seizures are as constitutional under the amendment when made under valid search warrants as they are unconstitutional, because unreasonable, when made without them—the permission of the amendment has the same constitutional warrant as the prohibition has, and the definition of the former restrains the scope of the latter. All of this is abundantly recognized in the opinions of the Boyd case, the Weeks case, etc.—

So that my interpretation is assured by the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Justice Hughes included.

I continue reading:

in which it is pointed out that at the time the Constitution was adopted stolen or forfeited property or property liable to duties—

I hope the Senator from South Dakota will give me his attention—property liable to duties and concealed to avoid payment of them, excisable articles, and books required by law to be kept with respect to them; counterfeit coins, burglars' tools and weapons, implements of gambling, "and many other things of like character," might be searched for in home or office, and if found might be seized under search warrants lawfully applied for, issued, and executed.

Is there any doubt about that? And yet for days and weeks we have been told that any constable, without going before a magistrate of any kind, can, in search of half a pint of contraband whisky, enter any premises on earth and search them if a woman does not hide it under the bed.

I either do not know any law or I have lost my capacity to read it understandingly. It makes me absolutely ashamed, it is embarrassing, it is humiliating to read to the Senate of the United States a case practiced by Mr. Justice Hughes, in which the ink is hardly dry, in which it is stated with such reiterated emphasis that "a wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein," that any search is unreasonable, because it is unconstitutional, that is made without a warrant, for excisable articles, for gambling instruments, for stolen goods, for counterfeit money, or for contraband whisky; and yet when a Senator offers an amendment applying that principle to existing legislation, what is the answer? From obscure and unknown sources, through anonymous propaganda, he is charged with every character of corruption, and good and holy and well-meaning people are induced to notify him that his political career is at an end because he has become the willing tool of the bootlegger and the crook.

Oh, Mr. President, that might affect me, if I did not recall that when Thomas Jefferson stood against the union of the church and the state he was denounced as an atheist, when Galileo recognized the movement of the earth he was denounced as an infidel, when the great commoner from Kentucky stood for the maintenance of the Union his foes denounced him as a traitor, his friends warned him that his efforts to save the Union would cost him the Presidency, and the immortal Clay declared that he would rather be right than President. As a child I gazed upon the sarcophagus in which rests all that is mortal of that imperial and deathless spirit. Upon his tomb is inscribed:

I stand with unshaken confidence appealing to the Divine Arbitrator for the truth of the declaration that I have been influenced by no ulterior purpose, no personal motive, have sought no personal aggrandizement, but that in all my public acts I have had a sole and single eye and a warm and devoted heart, directed and dedicated to what is my best judgment and I believe to be the true interests of my country.

A greater than Clay has said:

If you have the light, you must bear witness to the light.

Men have borne witness to the light, have followed the light into the reeking and blood-stained arena of a Roman amphitheater. Men have followed the light into prison and to fields of battle. How small a thing it is to follow the light even though it lead you out of the United States Senate and into the shadows of private life, with your self-respect unimpaired, your courage unquestioned, and your devotion to the best interests of your country and its Constitution unswerving.

I swore, and I called the Senate to witness, I called God to witness, that I would protect, preserve, and defend the Constitution, and I know as I know that God reigns that I can not keep that oath; that no Senator seeing it as I do can keep that oath, and vote for this conference report. This is a lofty place in which I stand, a coveted honor, but I had rather go down to the vile dust from which I sprang, unwept, unhonored, and unsung—aye, better the oblivion of the humblest citizen true to his country, than to wear the toga of a Senator, the heart of a coward and the purposes of a traitor.

APPENDIX.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, November 14, 1921.

HON. ATLEE POMERENE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have read your speech of August 8, 1921, delivered in the Senate of the United States, and feel that I can not do otherwise than commend your position.

It seems to me that the question of the use of alcohol for beverage purposes and its use for medicinal purposes are two separate and distinct questions, and should be so regarded.

No physician worthy of the name would care to prescribe alcohol as a beverage even though this privilege were extended to him; but when anybody or any body presumes to say that he shall not have the right to employ any remedy he believes will be of value in the treatment of disease, his judgment is subordinated to that of people who have either made no study of the science and art of medicine, or his judgment is overruled by a member of the profession who differs from him as to the proper treatment of the patients who come under his care.

I think it requires no argument to show the absurdity of getting medical opinions from those who have never studied medicine. One might just as well obtain legal opinions from grocers.

When it comes to a consideration of the therapeutic value of remedies one encounters the very widest range of opinions, and, strange as it may seem, this divergence of opinion is what has led to therapeutic progress. The physician who endeavors to dictate to another physician in the matter of treatment must either be omniscient or very ignorant. I have never met an example of the former variety, but have met physicians whose ignorance gave them great assurance. It is my contention that each physician is required to use his individual judgment and ought not to be swayed or overcome by the mob spirit that condemns anything that does not agree with the opinions of those who raise a great clamor. Scientific progress has never been accompanied by much noise or dogmatic assertion.

There are fortunately many differences of opinion among physicians, but I think there is one point upon which they should all agree, i. e., that each physician be permitted to practice his profession according to his knowledge and best judgment. If this can not be granted, all further argument is futile, but if it is granted how is it possible for a physician to practice successfully if hedged about with restrictions which limit or annul his judgment? If Dr. Kelly does not believe that alcohol is of any value as a medicine, does Dr. Murphy have to accept the former's views? No more, I think, than that the former's opinion on every subject should be accepted and the latter's rejected.

Were some more deadly and more rapid poison, such as strychnia, substituted for alcohol, I venture the prediction that every physician in the country would rise up and protest more vehemently against Congress telling us whether we can prescribe more than one-fortieth of a grain at a dose, or that not more than six doses could be given in six days.

The main objection to the present law regulating the prescribing of alcoholic mixtures is the implied assumption that the medical profession can not be trusted to prescribe them according to the dictates of their judgment, but that they will be swayed by commercial or pecuniary motives; that they will sacrifice their consciences in order to gather in a few paltry dollars.

We all know that every profession, organization, or trade has some unworthy members, but I submit that the great mass of the medical profession are men and women of high ideals; that they, as a class, are less swayed by pecuniary considerations than are the vast majority of mankind. It is an indubitable fact that physicians have done more for the uplift of mankind than have any other class of persons. It is equally true that physicians have always been most earnest advocates of temperance and sobriety. Not only this but they have done more to prevent disasters and discourage the formation of bad habits than any other class.

Thus the question resolves itself into whether the medical profession can be trusted to continue prescribing according to the light they have, or whether they shall be hedged about with restrictions imposed upon them by persons assuming to know more about these matters.

If it is true that physicians will prostitute their noble calling by prescribing alcohol improperly, then by all means take every privilege away from them. Pass laws preventing them from learning enough about medicine to know how to produce an abortion—prevent them from acquiring enough familiarity with surgery to know how to use a knife, because they might use knives for improper purposes—do not let them acquire knowledge of poisonous drugs, because they might for a pecuniary consideration put some one out of the world.

If the medical profession has demonstrated its fitness, then by what process of reasoning should its hands be tied?

I, for one, am ready to agree that a physician who is venal enough to improperly prescribe alcohol is unfit to practice medicine, and I would advocate preventing him from practicing at all. This plan seems much more logical than that of putting the entire profession under suspicion—nay, of openly asserting that it can not be trusted. It is much more logical to punish the offenders than to besmirch the reputation of honest, conscientious men.

The suggestion has been made that physicians should not apply for permits to prescribe alcohol, because they can then say that they can not comply with requests for prescriptions containing alcohol. This suggestion is anything but complimentary to the medical profession, because it presupposes a weakness of conscience and a lack of judgment. A physician can not practice medicine a day without meeting conditions that require more courage and firmness than is required to refuse to do an improper thing. People trust their lives to physicians and yet are told that they can not trust them to know when to prescribe alcohol and when to refuse.

My object in this communication is to call attention to the fact that our law-making bodies are encroaching upon the prerogatives of the medical profession in such a way as to limit its powers and at the same time besmirch its reputation for honesty, integrity, and courage.

I am perfectly well aware that most physicians will not prescribe alcohol very often, but there is an immense difference between not prescribing and not being permitted to prescribe.

Before leaving this subject permit me to call your attention to the absurdity of the regulation which permits a physician to prescribe but a half-pint of whisky every 10 days for the same individual. The very wording of this regulation shows that it should be applied to alcohol as a beverage and not to alcohol as a medicine. It implies that a man can get one drink a day in this way, but a patient can get no more. Should the doctor give him 8 ounces in 1 day he will have to wait 10 days before the treatment can be continued. Could anything be more absurd from a medical standpoint?

In conclusion, Mr. Senator, permit me to say that Congress will either have to trust the honesty and integrity of the medical profession or it will have to assume the responsibility of absolutely refusing to recognize its right to use alcohol as a remedy under any circumstances.

Very sincerely, yours,

J. C. OLIVER.

Mr. WADSWORTH obtained the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know what is the desire of the Senate at this time. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. We would like to have an executive session for a few moments and then take a recess until 11 o'clock in the morning, because the conference report is to come up the first thing in the morning. If the Senator from New York desires to speak on it, I suggest that he yield at this time and he can be recognized when we meet to-morrow morning.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield the floor at this time in the hope that I may be recognized to-morrow morning.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, November 18, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate November 17 (legislative day of November 16), 1921.

CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES.

Ellis Loring Dresel, of Massachusetts, to be chargé d'affaires of the United States of America to Germany to date from November 14, 1921.

PROMOTIONS IN THE CONSULAR SERVICE.

CONSUL GENERAL OF CLASS 3 TO CONSUL GENERAL OF CLASS 2.

Nathaniel B. Stewart, of Georgia.

Evan E. Young, of South Dakota.

CONSUL GENERAL OF CLASS 4 TO CONSUL GENERAL OF CLASS 3.

Alexander W. Weddell, of Virginia.
William H. Gale, of Virginia.
Leo J. Keena, of Michigan.

CONSUL OF CLASS 3 TO CONSUL GENERAL OF CLASS 4.

DeWitt C. Poole, of Illinois.
Douglas Jenkins, of South Carolina.
Claude I. Dawson, of South Carolina.
Augustus E. Ingram, of California.

CONSUL OF CLASS 3 TO CONSULAR INSPECTOR.

William Dawson, of Minnesota.
Nelson T. Johnson, of Oklahoma.
Roger Culver Tredwell, of Indiana.

CONSUL OF CLASS 4 TO CONSUL OF CLASS 3.

Tracy Lay, of Alabama.
Harry A. McBride, of Michigan.
Clarence E. Gauss, of Connecticut.
Homer M. Byington, of Connecticut.
Clarence Carrington, of California.
Ely E. Palmer, of Rhode Island.
Ezra M. Lawton, of Ohio.
Edwin L. Neville, of Ohio.

CONSUL OF CLASS 5 TO CONSUL OF CLASS 4.

Louis G. Dreyfus, jr., of California.
Charles M. Hathaway, jr., of Pennsylvania.
Addison E. Southard, of Kentucky.
George S. Messersmith, of Delaware.
Henry P. Starrett, of Florida.
Theodore Jaeckel, of New York.
Kenneth S. Patton, of Virginia.
Thomas D. Bowman, of Missouri.
Walter A. Leonard, of Illinois.
J. Paul Jameson, of Pennsylvania.
Henry H. Balch, of Alabama.
Alfred R. Thomson, of Maryland.
Wilbur Kablinger, of Virginia.
Claude E. Guyant, of Illinois.

CONSUL OF CLASS 6 TO CONSUL OF CLASS 5.

Samuel W. Honaker, of Texas.
Irving N. Linnell, of Massachusetts.
Felix Cole, of the District of Columbia.
J. Klahr Huddle, of Ohio.
Ernest L. Ives, of Virginia.
Paul Knabenshue, of Ohio.
George K. Donald, of Alabama.
William L. Jenkins, of Pennsylvania.
Algar E. Carleton, of Vermont.
Elliott Verne Richardson, of New York.
Hamilton C. Claiborne, of Virginia.
Leslie E. Reed, of Minnesota.
Frank C. Lee, of Colorado.
Harris N. Cookingham, of New York.
Keith Merrill, of Minnesota.
Leland B. Morris, of Pennsylvania.
Thomas H. Bevan, of Maryland.
Charles Roy Nasmith, of New York.
Hugh H. Watson, of Vermont.
Robert Harnden, of California.
John J. C. Watson, of Kentucky.
Francis R. Stewart, of New York.
James P. Davis, of Georgia.
Frank Anderson Henry, of Delaware.

CONSUL OF CLASS 7 TO CONSUL OF CLASS 6.

S. Pinkney Tuck, of New York.
Coert du Bois, of California.
Thomas M. Wilson, of Tennessee.
Reed Paige Clark, of New Hampshire.
John Randolph, of New York.
William P. Blocker, of Texas.
Avra M. Warren, of Maryland.
Homer Brett, of Mississippi.
Chester W. Davis, of New York.
Harry L. Walsh, of Maryland.
Carol H. Foster, of Maryland.
Theodore B. Hogg, of Pennsylvania.
William C. Burdett, of Tennessee.
Charles R. Cameron, of New York.
Harry M. Lakin, of Pennsylvania.
Henry S. Waterman, of Washington.
John P. Hurley, of New York.
Thomas R. Owens, of Alabama.
James P. Moffitt, of New York.

VICE CONSUL DE CARRIERE OF CLASS 1 TO CONSUL OF CLASS 6.

William R. Langdon, of Massachusetts.
Ernest B. Price, of New York.

INTERPRETER AT $3,000 TO CONSUL OF CLASS 6.

Erle R. Dickover, of California.
Samuel Sokobin, of New Jersey.
Joseph E. Jacobs, of South Carolina.
Bernard Gotlieb, of New York.

CONSUL OF CLASS 8 TO CONSUL OF CLASS 7.

John R. Bradley, of Oklahoma.
Samuel H. Wiley, of North Carolina.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE CONSULAR SERVICE.

CONSULS OF CLASS 7.

Thomas W. Chilton, of New York.
Raymond Davis, of Maine.

COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION.

Luther Weedon, of Washington, to be commissioner of immigration at the port of Seattle, Wash.

AID IN THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Max Leff, of New York, to be aid, with relative rank of ensign in the Navy (by promotion from deck officer), in the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey in the Department of Commerce, vice F. W. Hough, promoted.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Fred Cubberly, of Florida, to be United States attorney, northern district of Florida, vice John L. Neely, resigned.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Ella M. Sullins to be postmaster at Hackleburg, Ala. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Alma Collins to be postmaster at Kennedy, Ala. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

William A. Dodd to be postmaster at Nauvoo, Ala. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Daisy White to be postmaster at River Falls, Ala. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

CALIFORNIA.

Ella Pratt to be postmaster at Fall River Mills, Calif. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

William L. Robbins to be postmaster at Orange Cove, Calif. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Harold G. McCurry to be postmaster at Sacramento, Calif., in place of Thomas Fox, removed.

CONNECTICUT.

Robert Whittaker to be postmaster at Stamford, Conn., in place of J. J. Bohl. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

Alfred W. Jaynes to be postmaster at Ansonia, Conn., in place of Stephen Charters, resigned.

FLORIDA.

Daniel C. Smith to be postmaster at Center Hill, Fla. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

William W. Zipperer to be postmaster at Jennings, Fla. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Thomas J. Nobles to be postmaster at Wildwood, Fla. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

GEORGIA.

Elizabeth L. Ragan to be postmaster at Brothwood, Ga. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

E. Stanley Burnett to be postmaster at Leslie, Ga. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

ILLINOIS.

John P. Kopp to be postmaster at Baldwin, Ill. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Philip W. Maxeiner, jr., to be postmaster at Dorchester, Ill. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Fred Schroeder to be postmaster at Matherville, Ill. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

John E. Miller to be postmaster at Tamms, Ill. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Olin L. Browder to be postmaster at Urbana, Ill., in place of C. M. Webber, resigned.

INDIANA.

Priscilla M. McDole to be postmaster at Clarks Hill, Ind. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Roy L. McCullough to be postmaster at New Palestine, Ind. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Marion L. Medcalf to be postmaster at Dale, Ind., in place of W. R. Dunn, deceased.

IOWA.

Amel F. Wunn to be postmaster at Everly, Iowa, in place of H. P. Gordon, declined.

H. H. Ahlff to be postmaster at Grandmound, Iowa, in place of V. R. Northrop. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Arthur M. Burton to be postmaster at Grinnell, Iowa, in place of W. J. Nelson, resigned.

Clyde E. Wheelock to be postmaster at Hartley, Iowa, in place of Albert Tagge. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Irene Goodrich to be postmaster at Lehigh, Iowa, in place of J. E. Lowrie, resigned.

Benjamin F. Shirk to be postmaster at Linn Grove, Iowa, in place of H. E. Erickson, resigned.

KANSAS.

Leslie Fitts to be postmaster at Reading, Kans. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

MAINE.

Nellie O. Gardner to be postmaster at Smyrna Mills, Me. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

MASSACHUSETTS.

George T. McLaughlin to be postmaster at Sandwich, Mass., in place of G. T. McLaughlin. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

MINNESOTA.

Nels J. Amble to be postmaster at Peterson, Minn. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Louis E. Olson to be postmaster at Nicollet, Minn., in place of L. E. Olson. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Arthur H. Rowland to be postmaster at Tracy, Minn., in place of O. J. Rea. Incumbent's commission expired May 6, 1920.

MISSOURI.

Raymond E. Miller to be postmaster at Carl Junction, Mo., in place of Effie Chitwood. Incumbent's commission expired July 10, 1920.

Peter S. Ravenstein to be postmaster at Hayti, Mo., in place of M. A. York. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1920.

John Kerr to be postmaster at Newburg, Mo., in place of W. E. Duncan. Incumbent's commission expired January 30, 1921.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Norton T. Hendrickson to be postmaster at Hoople, N. Dak. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

NEW MEXICO.

Ira Allmon to be postmaster at Estancia, N. Mex., in place of Ira Allmon. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

NEW YORK.

Norman L. Bedle to be postmaster at Spring Valley, N. Y., in place of G. W. Runyon. Incumbent's commission expired January 28, 1920.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Edith M. Phelps to be postmaster at Ludlow, Pa., in place of E. M. Phelps. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Willa Saylor to be postmaster at South Brownsville, Pa., in place of Matthew Storey, resigned.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charles C. Withington to be postmaster at Greenville, S. C., in place of T. H. Pope. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

VIRGINIA.

Charles E. Black to be postmaster at Fordwick, Va. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Mary L. Addison to be postmaster at Emory, Va., in place of S. F. Akers. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1920.

John R. Rowland to be postmaster at Hollins, Va., in place of G. P. Murray. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1920.

Leonard G. Perkins to be postmaster at Mineral, Va., in place of J. N. Walker, resigned.

William H. Dunlap to be postmaster at Stanley, Va., in place of C. N. Graves. Incumbent's commission expired January 18, 1920.

Leslie M. Gary to be postmaster at Victoria, Va., in place of W. C. Spencer. Incumbent's commission expired December 17, 1919.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Freda W. Mason to be postmaster at Bayard, W. Va. Office became presidential January 1, 1920.

James A. Little to be postmaster at Waverly, W. Va. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

WYOMING.

Albert J. Schils to be postmaster at Cokeville, Wyo., in place of A. J. Schils. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1920.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate November 17 (legislative day of November 16), 1921.

AID IN THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Nathan November to be aid, with relative rank of ensign in the Navy, in the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

John James Baker to be second lieutenant, Infantry.
Robert Clyde Padley to be second lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps.

James Richmond Simpson to be second lieutenant, Infantry.
Philip Schwartz to be second lieutenant, Ordnance Department.

Richard Brown Thornton, to be second lieutenant, Infantry.
William Bradford Plummer to be second lieutenant, Chemical Warfare Service.

Pacifico C. Sevilla to be second lieutenant, Philippine Scouts.
Charles Nicholas Senn Ballou to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Homer Wilbur Ferguson to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Harry Starkey Aldrich to be second lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps.

John Cyril Delaney to be second lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps.

Samuel Rubin to be second lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps.
James Goodwin Hall to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.
Donald Wallace Norwood to be second lieutenant, Air Service.
Joseph Rexford Vernon to be second lieutenant, Corps of Engineers.

Cecil Elmore Archer to be second lieutenant, Air Service.
Dudley Warren Watkins to be second lieutenant, Air Service.

Waldon Sharp Lewis to be second lieutenant, Infantry.
Andrew Julius Evans to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Paul Corson Howe to be second lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps.

Lindon John Murphy to be second lieutenant, Corps of Engineers.

Albert Ruth to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Joseph George Nathanson to be second lieutenant, Infantry.
Paul Ainsworth Berkey to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Robert Edward Robillard to be second lieutenant, Air Service.
Donald McKechnie Ashton to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Dana Gray McBride to be second lieutenant, Cavalry.
Clarence Edward Patterson to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Juan Rosales Labrador to be second lieutenant, Philippine Scouts.

Cecil Byron Jamieson to be second lieutenant, Infantry.
Clifford Oscar Webster to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Edward Alfred Mueller to be second lieutenant, Infantry.
Lisle Burroughs Swenson to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Robert William Calvert Wimsatt to be second lieutenant, Air Service.

Amado Martelino to be second lieutenant, Philippine Scouts.
Victor Z. Gomez to be second lieutenant, Philippine Scouts.

David Theodore Rosenthal to be second lieutenant, Corps of Engineers.

Clayton Huddle Studebaker to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

John Macklem Perkins to be second lieutenant, Infantry.
Howard Criswell to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Albert James Kiley to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.
Robert Brice Johnston to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Albert James Wick to be second lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps.

Earl Albert Hutchings to be second lieutenant, Infantry.
Ray Henry Clark to be second lieutenant, Air Service.

Joseph Brenner to be second lieutenant, Infantry.
Raymond Taylor Tompkins to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

George Alfred Arnold Jones to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Thomas Edward Moore to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Victor Friedrichs to be second lieutenant, Air Service.

Lyman Early Whitten to be second lieutenant, Air Service.

George Evans Burritt to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Charles Jacob Williamson to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Donald Boyer Phillips to be second lieutenant, Air Service.

Arthur Nathaniel Willis to be second lieutenant, Cavalry.

Louis Meline Merrick to be second lieutenant, Cavalry.

William Madison Mack to be second lieutenant, Signal Corps.

Robert Crane Hendley to be second lieutenant, Air Service.

Walter J. Klepinger to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Grady David Epps to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

John Otis Hyatt to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Frank Charles McConnell to be second lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps.

Dale Phillip Mason to be second lieutenant, Signal Corps.

Donald Fowler Fritch to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Nemesio Catalen to be second lieutenant, Philippine Scouts.

William Peyton Campbell to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Le Roy Ponton de Arce to be second lieutenant, Air Service.

James Madison Callicutt to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Walter Matlack Gormley to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Rox Hunter Donaldson to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Albert Raymond Nolin to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Herbert Melancthon Federhen, 3d, to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Lawrence William Kinney to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Reginald Pond Lyman to be second lieutenant, Cavalry.

Lee Roy Woods, jr., to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Hugh Perry Adams to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Robert Du Val Waring to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

Warren Penn Knox to be second lieutenant, Cavalry.

Stephen Yates McGiffert to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery.

James Stuart Wallingford to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Albert Sidney Howell, jr., to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

John Sharpe Griffith to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

William Wallace Robertson to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

George Louis Boyle to be second lieutenant, Infantry.

Pio Quevedo Caluya to be second lieutenant, Philippine Scouts.

Eli Alva Helmick to be inspector general with rank as major general.

Clement Augustus Trott to be colonel, Infantry.

George Van Horn Moseley to be colonel, Field Artillery.

Charles Michael Bundel to be colonel, Field Artillery.

Arthur David Haverstock to be captain, Medical Corps.

David Lloyd Stewart to be captain, Medical Corps.

Bernard Anthony McDermott to be captain, Medical Corps.

John Moorhaj Tamraz to be captain, Medical Corps.

Vivian Z. Brown to be captain, Dental Corps.

William Herbert Murphy to be captain, Signal Corps.

POSTMASTERS.

ARKANSAS.

Claude G. Felts, Alicia.

Louella Boswell, Almyra.

Mary Brown, Alpena Pass.

Frederick H. Burrow, Altus.

William C. Allen, Amity.

Edwin E. Blackmon, Augusta.

Adine Connevey, Bauxite.

Weddell W. Watkins, Belleville.

Floyd F. Nichols, Buckner.

Audie F. Hunter, Casa.

Horace C. Hiatt, Charleston.

Marie O. Pitts, Cherry Valley.

Milton T. Knight, Chidester.

Harriett M. Shrigley, Coal Hill.

Ira R. Silvey, Cove.

Floyd M. Carter, De Queen.

Reese D. Henry, Dierks.

Thomas W. Goodson, Fouke.

George H. Mills, Garfield.

Robert R. Wright, Garland.

Ray W. Walker, Gillett.

John W. Bell, Greenwood.

William M. Goucher, Huntsville.

John L. Collett, Huttig.

Flavel G. Briggs, Judsonia.

Ernest R. Clark, Knobel.

Grant B. Sparks, Lamar.

Samuel D. Thomasson, Leachville.

Frederick M. Youmans, Lewisville.

Bruce T. Wilgus, Madison.

Andrew I. Roland, Malvern.

Addison M. Hall, Marmaduke.

Dell W. Lee, Mineral Springs.

James L. Wilson, Moro.

John W. Webb, Mountain View.

Willard L. Brennan, Parkin.

Hugh T. Brown, Scott.

Garrett C. Chitwood, Scranton.

Maud Jackson, Sherrill.

Therese N. Scott, South Fort Smith.

William R. Blakely, Sparkman.

William J. Adams, Star City.

Robert E. Jeter, Wabbaseka.

Mary L. Beasley, Waldo.

William T. McKinnon, Wesson.

Ed C. Sample, West Fork.

John M. Harrell, Williford.

Florence F. McKinzie, Wilson.

Addie Morgan, Winthrop.

Howell A. Burnes, Yellville.

COLORADO.

Samuel Coen, Walden.

ILLINOIS.

Emma H. Paine, Alpha.

Fred Wilson, Broughton.

William J. Hamilton, Evanston.

William L. Beebe, Manito.

Leslie J. Smith, Mount Auburn.

William J. Thornton, Nebo.

Joseph L. Przyborski, North Chicago.

Polona H. Callaway, Tallula.

INDIANA.

Carleton H. Baum, Avilla.

McKinley Ayer, Chrisney.

Martha McGrew, Pleasant Lake.

Loren N. McCloud, Royal Center.

KANSAS.

Ralph A. Ward, Alden.

Claude C. Wheat, Augusta.

Robert W. Cyr, Aurora.

Ruth M. Kautz, Irving.

Sarah Lee, Louisburg.

Hollis L. Caswell, McDonald.

Mina V. Townsend, Nashville.

Leroy C. Sandy, Troy.

William T. Brown, Wilsey.

MICHIGAN.

William H. Richards, Perrinton.

MINNESOTA.

Otto W. Peterson, Audubon.

Bernard McGrath, Barnesville.

Ross Knutson, Bird Island.

Edward H. Hebert, Bricelyn.

William H. Kruse, Calumet.

Chris N. Nesseth, Deer River.

William O'Brien, Eden Valley.

Julius L. Jacobs, Franklin.

James C. Wilson, Grygla.

Henry W. Koehler, Hector.

Charles E. Cater, jr., Herman.

Clara O. J. Holtey, Hendricks.

Erna H. Benjamin, Kasota.

George W. Fried, Luverne.

Edward J. Factor, Montgomery.

Minnie Taipale, Nashwauk.

Edward J. Soland, Oklee.

Lydia Hansel, Palisade.

George H. Tome, Pine Island.

Christoffer Bjorgen, Rothsay.

Minnie W. Hines, Roosevelt.

Ella S. Engelsens, Storden.

Harry S. Gillespie, Virginia.

Iver Tiller, Wanamingo.
Charles Lindsay, Woodstock.
August F. Truwe, Young America.

MONTANA.

Curtis Burns, Coffee Creek.
Thomas Hirst, Deer Lodge.
Archie H. Neal, Phillipsburg.

NEW YORK.

Edward W. Hempstead, Ardsley on Hudson.
Allie M. Merville, Bliss.
Frank G. Seeber, Brownville.
Fred McIntosh, Churchville.
Elsie J. Moss, Collins.
William F. Bruno, Crown Point.
Raymond H. Ferrand, Gardenville.
Mark J. Balmat, Hermon.
Harvey W. Boisseau, Keeseville.
Herbert S. Luther, La Fargeville.
Mamie B. Evans, Machias.
Charles B. Stoddard, North Cohocton.
John Bentley, Ogdensburg.
Ralph D. Sessions, Palmyra.
William T. Hinman, Potsdam.
Elmer J. Conklin, Poughkeepsie.
George W. Babcock, Ravena.
Jessie S. McBride, Rensselaer Falls.
David R. Dunn, Scarsdale.
Edwin G. Conde, Schenectady.
Elmer C. Wolfe, Sherrill.
Walter B. Gunning, Ticonderoga.
Harry R. Northrup, Wurtsboro.
Henry C. Patterson, Youngsville.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Edward A. Simkins, Goldsboro.
Laura M. Gavin, Kenansville.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Delia B. Stromstad, Carpio.
John A. Halberg, Park River.
Jessie M. Lewis, Werner.

OHIO.

Carl Ledman, Byesville.
Edgar H. Bailey, Eaton.
Orin Breckinridge, Grove City.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Conrfrey Ickes, Boswell.
Ruby F. Austin, Edinboro.
Henry W. Redfoot, Fredonia.
Fred D. Heilman, Lebanon.
Patrick J. Molyneaux, Lyndora.
Boyd W. Brobst, Shickshinny.
Walter C. Taylor, White Haven.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Thomas S. Doar, Sumter.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Cecil L. Adams, Frankfort.
Mary S. Reed, Wasta.

UTAH.

Clinton Dutson, Lynndyl.

VIRGIN ISLANDS.

R. H. Amphlett Leader, Frederiksted.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Nancy J. Knapp, Buffalo.
Leander A. Lynch, Cowen.
George B. Thompson, Davis.
John C. Lowry, jr., Eccles.
Milton L. Hartley, Farmington.
Mary White, Matewan.
Ira W. Folden, Ronceverte.
Hugh H. Swiger, Shinnston.
Emmet E. Fowler, Wilsonburg.

WYOMING.

Arthur M. King, Diamondville.
Blanche Sutton, Hulett.
George R. Bringhurst, Lovell.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, November 17, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of Hope, Thou alone art able to go with us through all the scenes of life and be with us when we reach the end. O hear our prayer and establish hope eternal in all our breasts. May not discouragements depress us; may not failures make us weak nor trials leave their mark. Let us gratefully accept all of them as needful portions of life's discipline, and trust Thy unflinching love that outruns all the weariness of earth.

Gracious Lord, give the fullest measure of wisdom to our President and his counselors, that they be to our country the richest blessings, and give a new inspiration to all mankind. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—GARTENSTEIN AGAINST SABATH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Clerk transmitting original testimony, papers, and documents relating to the contested-election case of Jacob Gartenstein v. Adolph J. Sabath, which was referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Gahn	Larsen, Ga.	Sabath
Anthony	Garrett, Tex.	Lyon	Schall
Bell	Gorman	Mann	Sears
Bland, Ind.	Gould	Mansfield	Shelton
Brand	Griest	Michaelson	Snell
Brooks, Pa.	Griffin	Morin	Snyder
Burke	Hays	Mott	Stiness
Carter	Herrick	Mudd	Stoll
Cooper, Ohio	Hukriede	Noian	Sullivan
Copley	Husted	Oliver	Taylor, Colo.
Dale	Hutchinson	Perlman	Ten Eyck
Drane	Johnson, Ky.	Peters	Tilson
Elston	Kahn, Calif.	Porter	Tyson
Fess	Kelley, Mich.	Rainey, Ala.	Vare
Fish	Kless	Rainey, Ill.	Vason
Fitzgerald	Kinkaid	Rhodes	Williamson
Flood	Kitchin	Riordan	Wright
Freeman	Knight	Roach	Yates
French	Langley	Rucker

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 357 members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

TAX LEGISLATION.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider and to vote upon the following resolution without amendment. There shall be three hours of debate on such resolution, the time to be controlled, one-half by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and one-half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. At the conclusion of the debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution.

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House in the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8245) entitled "An act to revise and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes," now in conference, be, and they are hereby, instructed to recede from the disagreement of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 122, and to agree to the same.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I waive any points of order that may lie against the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this resolution does what was agreed would be done when this bill was sent to conference. At that time it was stated by the gentleman in charge of the bill that an opportunity would be given to vote squarely upon the proposition as to whether or not the House would concur to the Senate amendment relating to the surtax. This resolution brings the question squarely before the House, and will enable the House to express its judgment upon this question.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, we upon this side of the Chamber welcome the opportunity to vote on this resolution. Of course, it is very well understood that this is merely giving the House an opportunity to do that which it had an opportunity to do a few days ago, viz, instruct the conferees upon this very vital and important amendment. The situation is well understood. So far as I know, it needs no further explanation. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution, making the resolution in order.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution made in order, for consideration and vote.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House in the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8245) entitled "An act to revise and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes," now in conference, be, and they are hereby, instructed to recede from the disagreement of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 122, and to agree to the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for one hour and a half.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman permit a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand it, the time is equally divided between the gentleman from Michigan and myself, and I would like to inquire whether or not I can yield a part of my time to some gentleman on the Republican side who has similar views to mine to be distributed by him as he sees proper?

Mr. FORDNEY. It is perfectly agreeable to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is in control of one hour and a half time for debate—

Mr. GARNER. I understand that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Which he may yield as he desires.

Mr. GARNER. But if I yield to some gentleman on the other side, can he in turn yield time to whom he may desire?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion the gentleman to whom the gentleman from Texas yields time could yield to others with the consent of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the House conferees have kept faith with the House in their understanding that this matter would be brought back and the House given an opportunity to vote for a maximum of 50 per cent on the surtaxes. We have been in discussion with the conferees of the Senate now for several days, and in the outset let me say I most earnestly hope that the House will vote down the resolution. [Applause.] If the House does vote down this resolution, the House conferees have been assured by the Republican members of the Senate conferees that we can agree to 40 per cent as a compromise between the House and the Senate conferees. The House having provided for a maximum of 32 per cent and the Senate a maximum of 50 per cent, the 40 per cent surtaxes would mean a total of 48 per cent of those incomes will be taken by the Government—8 per cent by normal income tax—and when we know that there is added to the taxes of the taxpayer for local taxes anywhere from 5 to 10 per cent of the income we realize that under the maximum of 40 per cent on surtaxes that 65 or 70 per cent of the incomes of people coming under those brackets would be taken from them in taxes. Mr. Speaker, I ask in my time to have the Clerk read a letter from the President which I just received.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read the communication to which the gentleman refers. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, November 17, 1921.

MY DEAR MR. FORDNEY: In response to your inquiry as to the wisest course in dealing with the difference between the two Houses of Congress in the matter of higher surtax on incomes, I can say only that in view of our earlier conference on tax matters and the ultimate adoption of the higher surtax rate of 32 per cent I still believe the rate approved by the House to be the nearer to a just levy and the more promising one in returns to the Public Treasury.

The responsible administration is anxious, first of all, to lay the necessary taxes to meet the demands of the Treasury. There is a moral obligation, however, on the party in power to do everything possible to keep faith with promises made to the public.

We have been collecting the highest surtax on incomes levied at this time in all the world. The effect has been the restriction of the easy flow of capital in the channels most essential to our normal and very necessary activities. No one challenges the levy of the higher tax in the stress of war, but now we are struggling for the readjustments of peace.

[Applause.]

Where there is so wide a difference in the judgment of the two Houses, I have thought it might be possible, and wholly desirable, to reach an equitable compromise, say a maximum surtax levy of 40 per cent. This would put the higher Federal tax on incomes at a total of 48 per cent, which would measurably meet the expectations of those who are, above all else, concerned with the return of hopeful investment of capital, and the application of our capital resources to profitable productivity. I am wholly confident that the helpful results spreading therefrom to every active participant in our industrial and economic life, from management to every wage earner, would be vastly more advantageous to our people than the maintenance of war-time levies as peace-time penalties on capital which are certain to hamper the restoration of our activities for which we all so much hope.

One experience will afford a convincing illustration. In seeking to hasten the railway settlements growing out of Federal control, I authorized the director general to invite the cooperation of the War Finance Corporation to convert salable securities into the cash needed for the settlements in process of making. During the period of public belief in a 32 per cent surtax as provided by the House, the sale of these bills receivable was progressing in a most promising way. Indeed, we had converted more than a hundred millions of railway notes into ready cash. The very moment the higher surtax became a likely levy, those conversions ceased entirely. Manifestly the prohibitive surtax tends to divert our available and much-needed capital from employment in our every day activities to investment in tax-free securities. The records show that it is making a continued diminution in our receipts from income taxes and it is making more difficult the normal financing of every sort of essential activity and is emphasizing the tendency to turn to the Government for that paternalistic relief of both industry and agriculture which has no rightful place in a peace-time policy.

I am well convinced that a fair compromise between the rates adopted by either House will be the best possible solution of the situation, and an early decision will put an end to existing anxiety, even though the larger expectations of the country are not fully met.

Very truly, yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

HON. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

(The correction on page 1 is my own—W. G. H.)

Mr. FORDNEY. Gentlemen of the House, for the information of the House I have before me here the figures of the amount that would be raised by the surtaxes under the various proposals and under existing law. To show you what changes suggested would mean in the way of loss of revenue the Treasury Department furnished me with the estimate made of revenue that would be collected under existing rate provided by existing law at $462,500,000. If the rates were adopted as were provided for in the House bill as it passed the House it is estimated that those rates would gather or collect $364,000,000, or a loss of in round numbers $98,000,000 over existing law. The Senate provision, if adopted, provided such incomes are not invested in tax-free securities, would yield $401,000,000 from this same source. If the compromise of 40 per cent is adopted the estimates show that it would yield $359,000,000, and if the House were to insist upon the House rates on the lower incomes, then the maximum of 40 per cent in the surtaxes in the high brackets of the law would yield $399,000,000, or $2,000,000 less than the rate provided for in the Senate provision. Personally, although that matter has not been settled in conference, I want to accept the Senate rates on the lower incomes because they are lower than provided for by the House. [Applause.] It would make a reduction of surtaxes and income taxes from the beginning to end. Gentlemen, I am sincere in the belief that the Treasury Department will collect more money at the maximum of 40 per cent than would be collected with a maximum of 50 per cent. I will give you one good reason for this opinion. In 1918 under existing law there was collected on incomes of $50,000 or more $917,000,000.

In 1919, under the same law, there was collected $587,000,000, and last year, according to the last obtainable statistics, there was collected $347,000,000, or a loss of 62 per cent in income from the same people in three years during the operation of that law, which is conclusive evidence to me that the people with large incomes, because of those heavy taxes, especially those surtaxes, diverted their investment into tax-free securities, and therefore escaped the payment of taxes so far as it was possible.

There are outstanding to-day, in round numbers, $15,000,000,000 of tax-free securities that the people with large incomes may invest in in order to obtain a fair interest upon their income. I know of no sensible man, no matter how scrupulous he may be, who would not take advantage of the law and invest his money where he could get the greatest return lawfully. The law permits the people to do it, and the business interests of this country, when money is wanted to build a factory, to add machinery, to employ additional labor, go where capital may be found in order to get it.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield.

Mr. REAVIS. I understood the gentleman to say that, in his judgment, a surtax of 40 per cent would give more money to the Government than a tax of 50 per cent?

Mr. FORDNEY. I believe so; yes, sir.

Mr. REAVIS. If we take more money from them under 40 per cent, how will they have more left to invest?

Mr. FORDNEY. If you impose a greater tax you will drive that money into tax-free securities, where 40 per cent will not do it, but will throw it into the ordinary channels of trade, where men employing labor and employing capital must go and find capital. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to use some of his time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is recognized for an hour and a half.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, is there any Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee who is in sympathy with the resolution?

Mr. FORDNEY. I did not get the inquiry.

Mr. GARNER. I am sure the gentleman did not. I was directing my inquiry to the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee in order to see if they were in sympathy with the resolution, because, if they were, I would yield some time to them.

Mr. FORDNEY. You can not yield to me, my friend.

Mr. GARNER. I take it from that that there is no other member of the Ways and Means Committee who is in sympathy with the resolution, and I desire to yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], to be used as he sees proper. If the gentleman desires to occupy some time, he can do so.

Mr. FREAR. I desire to have a few moments to see those who wish to speak.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas yields 40 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], to be yielded by him as he desires.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, the basic theory upon which a tax of 50 per cent on big incomes is opposed is that they can go somewhere else and invest their money and make more money in tax-free securities. That propaganda has been very assiduously distributed throughout the country for a long time, but where will they go? If you have an income above $1,000,000 a year, you pay to the Government as tax, for example, 73 per cent of that surplus income above $1,000,000, and, of course, you do not like it any better than a soldier likes being killed. They tell you there is a "city of refuge" to which you can hurry with your excess baggage and make money out of it and pay no taxes. Well, where is it?

The gentleman from Michigan, Mr. FORDNEY, said a moment ago that a reasonable man will put his money where he can do the best with it. Suppose you with an income of over $1,000,000 a year invest $100,000 in Liberty bonds at par. You draw 4½ per cent interest upon your investment. Of that $4,250 you pay 73 per cent to the Government as taxes. You, therefore, get upon that investment an actual return of less than 1.1 per cent. Is there any reasonable man that is going to make any investment that will bring him 1.1 per cent only and less? I assert without fear of challenge that not one single solitary rich man in the United States with an income of over a million will invest one dollar in Liberty bonds as a money-making proposition now. That the Liberty bond investments have not taken a dollar of the big money out of business is self-evident. This hue and cry in the big newspapers about nontaxable Liberty bonds held by multimillionaires is raised simply because the present law does compel the men with big incomes to pay taxes on their big incomes, and they wish to avoid those taxes. Long since, Bill Nye published an account of his interview with Jay Gould. He learned that Gould had the rheumatism, and inquired with solicitude whether Gould "feared danger to his vitals." Gould answered, "No; I have my pocketbook wrapped up in red flannel." These new millionaires want us to do this for them. As a matter of fact, those people can not profitably buy any Liberty bonds under the present law which taxes them 73 per cent of that excess, and of course they will put it into business. The minute the House passed a bill reducing the surtax from 65 per cent to 32 per cent the big millionaires began taking their money out of business and buying those Liberty bonds, and they began to go up immediately. At 32 per cent surtax they get 3 per cent return if they purchase at the present rate. If we do reduce their surtax to 32 per cent, millions of the big money will go out of business and into Liberty bonds.

But they assert that there is another "city of refuge" for the big money that goes on a strike and will not work if it must sacrifice a little money annually in a cause for which thousands of Americans lost their lives in battle and thus lost all their capital as well as their incomes. They say that they can safely put that money into municipal and similar bonds that are tax free. Oh, if they will go and live in the community, in the Commonwealth where each bond is issued, they can get away with it; but the minute they take one of those bonds out of the State where it was made, they will pay taxes to the State to which they take it, and a 5 per cent municipal bond only brings them about 3 per cent, unless they have perjured themselves out of it. The supply of nontaxable securities of that kind is taken by many people besides the big millions and will be but a slender relief for those who have so much money they hate to pay taxes on it. The proportion of capital from great fortunes taken out of business and invested in such securities is comparatively infinitesimal and is a local matter in each Commonwealth, for none of them can afford to buy outside his own State. If these municipal bonds were nontaxable away from their own States, they would all be bringing 120 instead of 105 and less. The amount of money withdrawn by big business to invest in securities with small interest is comparatively insignificant. Big business is too good business to take such small returns.

But suppose they did have many millions so invested. What of that? These nontaxable securities are sold and paid for by somebody's money. What difference does it make whether it is your money or my money that buys it? That particular money is not engaged in the business of the country any longer. If not a millionaire in this land had not $1 invested in tax-free securities, there would still be exactly as much money invested in such securities as there is now, and therefore just as much money taken out of business as there is to-day. That is a fact so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, must know it if he will pause a moment and think; yet this fallacious propaganda that the big money will not work but will go into retirement if it is asked to pay its taxes like other people, has been circulated in every great metropolitan newspaper the big money owns, for a year or two till everybody began to think there was something in it. If those people were buying the Liberty bonds, they would long since have been at par.

It is not the amount of money invested in business that is its measure of success, but it is the amount of money that is paid for the products of business that measures its success. Every day now money is becoming cheaper and more and more easily secured to put into business, if you have securities. You will not loan the farmer a fair valuation because you say corn, for example, is so cheap and fluctuating. That is because average men have not the means to buy. What you must do is to take off the surtaxes on men of small means and moderate means and encourage them to buy, to invest their small funds in shoes and clothes and groceries and lumber and implements, in wheat and corn and cattle, and thus bring a renewal of prosperity. You gentlemen have simply got the cart before the horse. The people pull all this big business, and if you will quit your endeavor to put all the taxes on them who can least afford it, if you will begin to be guided by the dictates of common, ordinary horse sense, instead of the selfish flats of big business, your country will thrive and prosper by the prosperity of average men.

There is no more idle fallacy than the theory that the success of a few in amassing great wealth is an indication of sound business. On the contrary, the distribution among all men of the rewards of labor, industry, and genius is the first necessity for the business development of a nation of freemen. Oliver Cromwell said:

He that makes many poor to make a few rich suits not a commonwealth.

What we should have done was to have cut down the high taxes on men of small means and average incomes and modest competences, so that they might be able to put their money into circulation. The minute that a thousand of them spend $1,000 each, you have $1,000,000 thrown into business. If 10,000 of them each put $1,000 into business, you have ten millions thrown in. According to the information I have received, in 1919, 500,000 men paid taxes on incomes of from $6,000 to $100,000 each. If each of these men would put $1,000 into business, you would have $500,000,000 invested at once, all coming from safe and sane sources, and bringing with it the ambitions and interests of 500,000 of our very best citizens. You could get that money invested just as fast as you could get money from big sources invested. Why do you not relieve them of their surtaxes and enable them to start the river of prosperity from its source?

Of those having incomes of more than $100,000 there were only about 6,800. Is it possible, gentlemen, that you great statesmen can not see how much better it is to arouse the invested interest and ambition of 500,000 men, the backbone of our country, rather than the selfish self-aggrandizement of 6,800 poor slackers, who squawk and squeal, squatting on their millions, about paying a few taxes that they would never know they were paying if somebody did not tell them. It is a very curious thing that if you squeeze an eagle owned by a poor man and an eagle owned by a rich man, the rich man's eagle always squalls much louder than the poor man's.

Now, we all promised to try to decrease big taxes, but just whose big taxes are we going to decrease? Those of men who do not need help, or those of men who do? Those of men who are striving to acquire a competence, or those who already have money beyond the dreams of avarice? I never agreed to take any taxes off of any man with an income of over $1,000,000 a year. If you think that the millions of American voters in this country thought that they were giving you a mandate to keep them paying their taxes, and relieve these abnormal fortunes of their taxes, you have got another think coming to you, gentlemen. What has happened anyway?

In 1919 we had 500,000 paying taxes on incomes of from $6,000 to $100,000. At that time we had 284 distressed and downtrodden taxpayers paying on an income of more than a million dollars each, and thus assisting their countrymen in discharging the financial obligations our country incurred backing up the boys who died in the poppy fields. Instead of accepting the opportunity as a medal of honor these poor creatures announce that they are going on a strike. Great God!

One of these men had an income of $34,000,000. Robbed, as he claims to have been, by his Government, he was reduced to a mere pittance of $12,000,000 a year as his income and left to struggle along as best he could and support a family of golf balls on that infinitesimal trifle of money. Another by infinite labor secured an income of $16,000,000, and this high-handed Government, which sent the sons of his employees to France to die, actually reduced him to an actual return of $5,000,000 only. But it seems that we have solemnly pledged ourselves at the last election to relieve the distress and agony of those noble spirits! There were five men with incomes of more than $5,000,000 each.

In 1914 there were 114 men who paid taxes on incomes of between $500,000 and $1,000,000. In 1919 there were 405 such men. In five years during the war, by virtue of self-denial, by painstaking industry, by noble self-sacrificing patriotism, 291 people advanced their little competences so that they had enough to increase their incomes to $500,000. Now, gentlemen, these "gallant heroes" seek from you relief.

In 1914 there were 14 men who paid taxes on from $400,000 to $500,000 income. In 1919 there were 400 men who paid on incomes from $400,000 to $500,000. There were 386 of these war profiteers wringing their hands because a few of their ill-gotten gains will go to pay the debts incurred in prosecuting the deadly war from which they accumulated their swollen fortunes. In 1914, 130 men paid taxes on from $250,000 to $400,000, and in 1919 there were 350 such men. There were 233 in 1914 who paid taxes on from $200,000 to $250,000 and 750 such men in 1919. In 1914 there were 406 who paid taxes on from $150,000 to $200,000, and in 1919 there were 1,300 of them. In 1914 there were 957 men who paid taxes on more than $150,000 a year, according to the data furnished a United States Senator by the Secretary of the Treasury. In 1919 there were 3,489 of these get-rich-quick people. I take these figures from the statement in the press and presume the figures are correct. They have never been disputed, so far as I know.

Gentlemen, have you the heart to insist on these "noble sons of toil" who amassed these "competences" with the roar of the guns almost in their ears and the wounded and dying about them, contributing from their semisacred funds to the necessities of the Republic? Now, gentlemen, is there a man here who bears a mandate from his constituents to vote to cut their surtaxes and leave undiminished those paid by ordinary, average Americans, who, with their sons, fought the wars on the fields of France and came home in victory or died in glory and immortal honor?

When the first war-tax bill was brought into this House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] presented the amendment which exempted $5,000 of each of these Liberty-bond issues from taxation, and thereby made it possible for men of modest means to purchase the Liberty bonds and yet retain a reasonable income upon their investment—in my judgment, the highest single achievement of statesmanship in the American history of the Great War.

That bill levied surtaxes of such a nature as to place vast resources at the command of the Government while it was paying its war debts, and made it difficult for men of great means to accumulate vast issues of these tax-free bonds. Men say that because the war is over great wealth should be freed of this burden. These surtaxes were not levied because there was a war; the surtaxes were levied on great wealth in order that our Government might pay its war debts, and the war debts have not been paid, and every surtax should have remained just as it was during the war, until we have paid these war debts or at least have begun to see over the top of the great mountain of indebtedness in which the war involved our Government. I do not understand how any self-respecting rich man should want to lose such an opportunity to be useful, should be so lacking in patriotism, as not to be proud of so assisting the people of this Republic which protects him.

Every rich man saw hundreds of thousands of young Americans march with measured tread and singing lip to the rendezvous with death. Is there a multimillionaire in America so utterly lacking in all the loftiest attributes of patriotism, in spirit, in nobility of character, that he is not craving the opportunity to make his sacrifice of a few paltry thousands, when the youth of this country have laid their youth, their loves, their ambitions, and their lives on the altar of their country?

THE GREAT STRIKE.

On the floor of another body at the other end of this Capitol a distinguished statesman recently said, "Capital has gone on a strike."

The other day 450,000 laboring men began a movement to make a great strike, but stopped when they found that their action would be detrimental to the interests of their country and its people and would meet with the drastic administration of the laws within whose range they came.

Whose are these 3,489 big incomes that have gone on a strike because they are not allowed to accumulate mighty profits and have been compelled to assume some of the burdens of taxation, to an extent that they may feel it? I should think a man would be ashamed to talk about a few taxes, when other men's sons have died for their country. The gentleman from Michigan states an axiom when he says—that a reasonable man will put his money where he can do the best with it. I will give you another axiom: Any reasonable man wants to use his own life to make it as long and successful as possible for his own benefit and that of his family. It is true, no reasonable man wants to pay more taxes than he can help, and it is true, gentlemen, that no man wants to be killed on the field of battle. What are these few millions to these wealthy people compared to the lives of these boys to those that love them?

In all great emergencies, men must be ready to sacrifice their lives and their fortunes if necessary, to the good of their nation and humanity. The axiom the gentleman has quoted has no relation whatever to times like these, when the war debt of billions still hangs over us. Yet these men threaten us to go on a strike and stifle the business of the country if they are compelled to pay a few taxes. Why is this threat dangled in the faces of the people's Representatives as they come to vote? Why should capital have any better right to strike than labor? Can a man of wealth, for purely mercenary reasons, menace the safety of the business of a hundred millions of people and get away with it unpunished and uncontrolled? If so, gentlemen, there is a lack of equity in our legislation and in our civilization. We drafted the youth of the Nation, and until these war debts are paid we must draft the wealth of the Nation, and they should face the situation as patriots and Americans. The boys did their duty, now let the dollars do theirs. If men who labor for day wages can not strike when the country will suffer by it, neither can capital strike against paying its taxes if its strike injures the country's business. Take your gun out of my face while I vote for the interests of average men.

From the noise made you would suppose that such taxes were unheard of. They were in full flight during the war when these profiteers made more money than they ever did in the world. When that time began there were only 957 people in the United States who paid taxes on incomes of $150,000 a year.

Five years later there were 3,489 such men who made enormous fortunes and carried on a tremendous business under taxes which they say make business impossible. Why, it was possible then under all those difficulties. What happened?

On or about May 24, 1920, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORBNEY] introduced a bill which made still higher surtaxes for the big fortunes. Have you read title 7, called the Victory taxes of H. R. 14157? The subtitle says, "Additional surtax on incomes." Read it and the provisions that follow it. They placed those there to furnish a fund for the bonus bill, and practically every man in the House voted for additional taxes in that bill, including the gentlemen who oppose this 50 per cent, which is 15 per cent lower surtax than we had before the House passed the bonus bill just mentioned. If at that date that was a fair tax, why is this opposed now?

They try to tell us that such taxes as are named in part of this bill are radical and extreme and only radicals will be for them. The Government's indebtedness as a result of the war is radical and extreme. The demands upon the lives of the country were radical and extreme. Young men who deserted from the firing line in time of war were shot. What shall we do with these slackers of great wealth who go on a strike because they have to pay what to them is a mere trifle in money? What punishment is due these who threaten the business of the country if they are compelled to pay taxes to meet its debts accumulated while two-thirds of 3,489 of them grew immensely wealthy?

I can well understand how some poor boy under the fire of the big guns might falter and collapse as he went down into the valley of the shadow of death, but so help me God, gentlemen, I can not grasp and comprehend the infinite baseness of the nature of men who threaten to block and destroy the business of their fellow citizens if they are compelled to contribute to the discharge of our war debts 73 per cent of the excess of their incomes above a million dollars a year.

Radical! PENROSE and LODGE and CAPPER and KENYON and practically all the great conservative Republican leaders at the other end of the Capitol passed this bill, including this 50 per cent surtax, and sent it down asking for your indorsement. Is there anybody here that will tell us that these men are too radical and do not understand the possibilities of business? Who, then, is more conservative than this greatest deliberative body in the world? As for me, I am delighted to have the opportunity to vote with them in their effort to establish equitable taxes on great wealth.

Oh, I know that there are those who tell us that those gentlemen expect us to strike out the 50 per cent, leaving us to bear the brunt of the criticism, while they tell their constituents what they did for average men; but I have too profound a respect for the dignity and character of the greatest deliberative body in the world to even take notice of such an unwarranted and vicious assault upon their integrity of purpose. Come, gentlemen, let us line up with PENROSE and LODGE and CAPPER and KENYON in the great battle for human rights and good business for average men.

Gentlemen, you should represent the wishes of your constituents and vote without fear or favor for your convictions. On the 15th day of May, 1920, I heard an eloquent appeal to the self-respect of the greatest deliberative body in the world from a man of high character and rare ability, which I commend to you. He was speaking of the attempt of the then foremost man of all the world, the President of the United States, to dictate to the Congress of the United States what it should do, and he said:

The World War demonstrated that no one man and no one power can rule the world, and the Knox resolution is going to be a formal demonstration that no one man can run the United States of America. * * * I do not think any one man is big enough to run the United States Government, much less to attempt to run the world; and I believe it is going to be a fortunate hour in American history when the Congress has demonstrated once more that this Republic is not subject to the dictation of one man. I know of nothing in this Republic so valuable in the promise of influence for a popular representative Government as the proof of the capacity of Congress to function. * * * And so, Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact, more for the record than anything else, that in the passage of this joint resolution we are demonstrating to the people of the United States of America and giving notice to the world that the Chief Executive alone does not run the Republic of the United States of America; that this is still a representative, popular Government under the Constitution. * * * This joint resolution will establish that fact and that a Congress willing to submerge in war is once more functioning in peace. It will be the most wholesome message that can be sent to the world, and it will be the most reassuring message that can be given to the people of the United States of America.

The eloquent orator's philosophical understanding of the responsibilities of the Senate as to treaties suggested to me that such a view was of itself a material equipment for a successful President. As the Senate is vested with the final word of the Nation upon foreign treaties, so in the House is lodged the powers of the Republic for inaugurating all laws for levying taxes, a much more important and much loftier responsibility than is devolved upon any other department of the Government. For the exercise of that power each Representative of the people in the Congress of the United States must account to his own constituents, and this is a responsibility that he can not shift to any man on earth. Abraham Lincoln was gifted with the quality of never taking bad advice in great emergencies, as he demonstrated when he rewrote the great Seward letter to England, and this is a characteristic essential to the making of a great President. The Constitution assigns to each branch of the Government its work and its powers, and the mighty men who have preceded you in this Hall expect every man here to do his duty under the Constitution. Within the last few days our President has taken the leadership of the world in the greatest movement for the progress of mankind that has ever been practically attempted. As we vote to-day under the directions of the Constitution, our convictions, we join in the universal acclamations of mankind which have been showered upon our splendid President in his wise, discreet, courageous exercise of the great powers the Constitution has conferred upon him.

The administration avoided this anticipated strike of 450,000 workmen. The big strike of 3,489 capitalists must stop, even if Congress finds drastic remedies necessary. These men can not stop the country's trade just because they do not like to pay taxes. When we reflect on the position of our country, the 3,489 are mighty lucky in escaping with the payments required under this bill. Call off your strike.

This 50 per cent provision received the almost universal approval of the greatest deliberative body in the world after weeks of vigorous debate, yet men complain that they will not get time enough to talk about it here. This is a representative body first and a deliberative body secondly. Your first business here is to represent the people, while the elderly statesmen of the Senate were made by the Constitution a deliberative, not a representative, body, and they can talk their heads off if they want to.

Every day money is becoming cheaper and can be obtained at lower rates. The trouble with this country is not that there is not capital to do business, it is that there is not capital enough to buy the products of business. What we need is the money to buy corn and wheat and cattle. You diminish the surtaxes on from the lowest incomes up to $66,000 or $100,000 a year and let average men put their money into the purchase of the products of the country and the half million of them will get more money into business investments, too, in the next year than these 3,489 rich slackers will put in in 10 years. Two-thirds of that 3,489 made the capital on which they pay income taxes during five years of war, while the rest of us were making nothing. This is simply the propaganda of the profiteers to escape paying taxes on the immense fortunes they accumulated during the distress of the Republic.

Oh, men say that this tax is paid by the people. If the big incomes were not paying this tax we would never hear of their propaganda. If they were expecting to pay more taxes under a new system every one of them would set up a vicious and determined opposition to a new system.

What we need is not more investment power, but more purchasing power among average men. Come, gentlemen, let us cut down the big taxes on these half million, not upon the 6,800 favorites of fortune and circumstance, who had incomes over $100,000 in 1919, who can well afford to pay big taxes as long as the country is paying off its vast war debts. Of course, as incomes decrease the taxes on the incomes will decrease automatically, and yet men declaim here on this floor that the income taxes are not as great as they were when incomes were bigger. There is no argument advanced for this proceeding that is not bottomed on a gross fallacy that has its only possibility of success in the indifference of average men to what is really happening. What you want is not more capital, but more sales for the products you now have of capital.

We do not need more men with big fortunes, but we do need more men who possess modest competences. The inheritance tax the Senate has provided in this bill levies a 50 per cent tax on estates of more than $100,000,000. That is perhaps the wisest and most farseeing provision of all this legislation, and I earnestly hope it will remain in the bill. Coming here with the general approval of the greatest deliberative body on earth after weeks of debate, it will be a practical method not only of enlarging our revenues, but of curtailing the hereditary maintenance of those swollen fortunes which are the greatest menace to a free republic.

As a matter of fact, these people escape much of the surtax. If you are a stockholder in a corporation and they issue you a stock dividend instead of money, you escape entirely. So you do if they hold the dividend and put it in the business. Of course, the poorer have to get their cash dividends and the rich can get more stock dividends every year. Cut down the surtaxes paid by men of incomes below $100,000 and let them put their money into the purchasing the products of the farm, the factory, and the mine. Then the wheels of trade will quicken their roll.

This 50 per cent provision and the sections which make it impossible for a multimillionaire to evade the inheritance tax by gifts to his family, were inserted in this bill through the efforts of progressive men, of whom the junior Kansas Senator was one, and I understand that the senior Senator from Kansas in the Finance Committee made the motion to adopt the amendment that inserted the 50 per cent. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] brought in the rule for a vote upon the instruction to the conference committee to agree to the 50 per cent, and every Representative from Kansas will vote for the 50 per cent at the termination of this debate which I have the honor to open for those who believe that a man with income of more than a million dollars a year should pay to this Government 58 per cent of his profits above that million when our country has a war debt of billions, which is the provision inserted by the Republican Senate in this bill and the one on which we are now to vote. There are those who seem to resent with acrimony every effort of average men to compel the profiteers to disgorge from the fortunes they accumulated by profiteering during the war some actual assistance to discharge the great war obligations which still rest upon us.

Between 1914 and 1919, if the figures the newspapers publish as coming from the Treasury are correct, 2,532 men increased their fortunes to incomes of over $150,000 a year, when other men were dying at the front, and a Nation was putting every dollar it could raise into supporting the boys on the firing line. These men should be thankful that Congress allows them to keep a dollar of their conscienceless profits. Of these men, 224 at the close of that period, had incomes of more than a million dollars, who had never dreamed of such incomes before the war and its chances for these greedy grafters to prey upon the people of the country. Why should they not pay surtaxes on such gigantic ill-gotten profits? I should think that the very rich would have declined to accept any profits at such a time.

But some hysterical statesmen cry, "Oh, yes, you want to soak the rich!" Why, for five years during the war these profiteers soaked everybody else and the country in our hour of need. What did they expect—a medal of honor for valor and sacrifice?

This criticism of the profiteers has arisen in many wars, but never has there been so much cause for it as now. The great Marlboro' is said to have made a lot of money in Flanders out of the quartermaster's bureau. I believe it was our friend Brutus who told Cassius in the Caesarian wars, "Lucius Pella doth condemn thee in this, for that thou hast an itching palm." But these gentlemen whose delicate sensibilities are so profoundly moved every time a millionaire is mentioned in terms of anything but fondest admiration can find still higher source for these utterances they denounce as demagogic. Jesus of Nazareth said, "Verily I say unto you that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. And again I say unto you it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."

Those of you who challenge criticisms of the refusal of the multimillionaires to pay their taxes can go and call our Lord and Savior to account for criticisms of their love for their ill-gotten gains. He started it, and that is one of the reasons He was crucified.

Gentlemen, I am not one of those who believe in unjust treatment of the rich or the poor. When this war began they brought in a bill similar to this, which included an inheritance tax on the estates of rich men who died in battle for their country. I endeavored to secure an exemption for such estates, because I did not think that any family should be penalized because their hero died in action under the fire of the enemy's guns, for his country. But more than 4,000,000 young men went to war and placed their lives at the disposal of their country. Those who have come out of that war with vast fortunes can only excuse their profiteered wealth by now dedicating it to the service of their country. Yes; I know that every man wants to put his money where it will bring him the best return, but better men than they would have liked to have placed their lives where their families wanted them, but they considered that their highest value was to place those lives at the disposal of their native land. If the 2,289 are actuated by the same lofty motives every one of them will beg his country to take all his income over a million dollars a year and apply it to the war debts of the Republic. What, gentlemen, are these paltry dollars that stick to these itching palms as compared with the lives that were lost by the sweethearts and mothers and wives of America? Oh, these dollars the Government can replace and Congress can return them to you, but Congress can not fill one vacant chair.

"Why, uncle, thou hast many years to live," said King Richard. John of Gaunt said—

But not a minute, King, that thou canst give.
Shorten my days thou canst with sullen sorrow,
And take life from me, but not lend a morrow.
Thou canst help time to furrow me with age,
But not stop one wrinkle of his pilgrimage.
Thy word is current with him for my death,
But dead thy kingdom can not buy my breath.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, it would be a mockery to term the bill returned to us as the action of a conservative body, and it is a delusion to consider three hours as a sufficient time for our discussion here. We can hardly call ourselves a deliberative body when we give to this very important question so brief a time. [Applause.]

I am entirely opposed to the 50 per cent surtax. It will not increase revenue. It will not stimulate industry, but rather repress it. It will not benefit business or labor, but rather injure them. It will fail to reach the very men at whom those high rates are aimed.

The figures quoted by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] are startling in this regard. They show that the proceeds from taxes on incomes over $50,000 shrank from $917,000,000 in 1918 to $347,000,000 in 1920.

Some months ago I stated in this House the general tendency of all taxation to diffuse itself according to the consumption of each individual. That rule has many exceptions, but nevertheless is of very wide operation. It has been entirely disregarded in the Senate bill and is lost sight of by those who are crying out for this 50 per cent rate.

First of all, the wealthiest capitalist will evade it. He is like one who stands on a commanding eminence—he can forecast the future. He can shift his investments with a view to taking advantage of all taxing laws. He can purchase tax-free securities, which exist in very great number.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] has not studied the money market when he says that a 5 per cent tax-free security would be worth 120. [Applause.] The owner of such a security would go away rejoicing if he could sell it even at par. But there is another consideration in this connection which very closely affects the general welfare. Such a tax prevents investments in enterprises of the utmost value to the country. There are different ways in which the accumulated savings of the people are invested. The savings banks, the trust companies, the insurance companies, for the most part, place their funds in high-grade securities, bonds, standard railway stocks, or others which pay a settled return, often in mortgages. With them the motto is, "Invest in first mortgage and have absolute assurance for the future." But industrial enterprises, especially those of exceptional magnitude, which are necessary for the development of this country, are supplied with funds from men who have the larger incomes; not alone the largest but those included in brackets carrying over, say, 30 per cent in the Senate bill; and I may say here with the utmost confidence we would not have been prepared to wage this late war except for that class of investments, made by leaders who take the initiative in finance and industry. I have no brief for them; neither I nor any of mine will be affected by this bill. Neither have I any affiliation with any who will be touched by it. But we must face the facts, that if an enterprise is to be promoted, if new plans are to be made and carried out, or if old plants are to be extended, the support for them must come from those whom you would reach by these high surtaxes. Already the progress of recuperation has been seriously halted. The maintenance of these war-time taxes and the rates proposed in the Senate bill will continue their repressive influence. In fact, when you consider the colossal profits and great inflation during the war the figures proposed are much higher relatively than those in war time. Many who paid the highest taxes in those years now enjoy greatly diminished incomes or even are doing business at a loss. It is a mistake to suppose that those upon whom this burden will be imposed are mere owners of securities. A very large share of them are engaged in enterprises which give employment to labor and are highly essential to our prosperity.

These are the plain facts. Why, these men reason that if an enterprise promising unusual profit is presented, the risk is proportionately great. But if you add to that risk a surtax of 50 per cent, or even a less percentage, what is the use of an investment if the proceeds are to be taken from them by excessive taxation? You may say that such a view is selfish, but it is deeper than that; it is human nature. So I say this will not benefit the very ones who are advocating it most.

It is, again, an unprecedentedly high rate in a time of peace. We promised the people, in both parties from almost every stump, that the burdens of taxation would be reduced. The surtax, the excess-profits tax, and all these various taxes are reflected in the high cost of living. It is not those men who have these great fortunes alone who are affected; the influence is extended all over the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one feature of the House bill which I do not approve. I do not think the dividing line at which the highest tax is reached should have been fixed at the figure of $66,000 or $68,000. I think it would have been preferable if the brackets had a wider spread after $20,000, perhaps 1 per cent increase in each up to $20,000, and then make the spread $5,000 or more. A great many professional and other men have this income of $66,000. They are the ones who are quick to find investments. They have an important part in standing behind the growth of industry in this country. It would have been better if the lowest income for the maximum tax had been much more than $66,000. The result will be, if you pass this bill, a perfect drain on the capital which is so essential for maintaining our present industrial supremacy and for continuing that supremacy.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. BURTON. I am willing to vote for 40 per cent, though that is a very high rate. Those who are most able to pay must pay, but there is a limit, and when you go beyond that figure your rate is excessive. We had a rate of 65 per cent during the war and other taxes, and these were perfectly justified, because it was a time of exceptional emergency, when the fate of our country and the welfare of all the progressive world was at stake. But is there no change now when we are at peace? Are we not ready to relieve the burdens of taxation upon the people? This disarmament conference sitting now in Washington is as a rainbow of promise to the whole world. [Applause.] Does it not promise something to us in the way of lessening this heavy load upon the people?

It must be conceded that graded or progressive taxation has come, and come to stay, because it is fair and right; nevertheless it is of comparatively recent origin. It was adopted by Italy in 1864 and later by Austria in 1898. It was not adopted in Great Britain until 1909. The first income taxes in our own Civil War were levied at a flat rate; by a later act in 1864 the tax was 3 per cent on incomes below $10,000 and 5 per cent on incomes above that sum. The matter of adjustment, however, is one which should be most carefully considered. I can not favor either the gradation or the amount provided in existing legislation enacted under the stress of war, nor yet the rates in the bill as returned to us by the Senate.

Attention should be called to the inevitable tendency to extravagance in expenditure, to waste, to demoralization, the taking over by the Federal Government of that which should belong to the State. This is stimulated by other amendments for increase of taxes carried in the Senate bill. Are we to promote class distinction; are we to listen to the clamor and cry that says tax the rich; are we to show to the people that we believe in that grievous error that taxes are finally paid by those upon whom in the first instance they are levied? I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this House will act dispassionately. If we had time for a campaign of education, I should have no fear but that a correct conclusion would be reached in this matter. But we hear throughout the country a demand for immediate action. Let us pause and think; let us not follow those who shout without thinking. Let us not respond to a public sentiment which is tainted by prejudice, but let us rather act here with our polar star, that of fairness and justice to all; meet our responsibilities to this great country, and not make a mistake this day. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, of course in that time there could be no discussion of the question. I simply say that wealth has sought by all kinds of devices to avoid taxation.

The reader of history will recall that leading up to the French Revolution was the policy on the part of the French governing class, the powerful aristocracy, the rich landowning nobles, to relieve great wealth of all taxation. Landed estates were exempt, church holdings were exempt, and the burdens of taxation were placed on the poor alone. Wealth and power are in a different form to-day, but that history is trying to repeat itself.

Now it is pure, sheer nonsense to talk about these people of great wealth passing the burden in its entirety, because if they could do it, as argued by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], they would not so much object to being taxed in the higher brackets, at the higher rates.

It is said that wealth if heavily taxed on enormous incomes will retard business by investing in tax-exempt securities. In God's name, do not they do it now wherever they can? How many of the billions invested in tax-exempt securities to-day by great wealth would they take out of tax-exempt securities and invest in industry? It is all play. Whenever capital can combine and make an income of 20 per cent or 50 per cent on the capital invested they will do it. If you tax their net income 50 per cent they still have returns that the ordinary man can not approximate.

There are perhaps $15,000,000,000 now in tax-exempt securities—great savings corporations invest the money of children and estates that way because it is easily managed, and the ultrarich invest the same way for the same reason. You can not find enough tax-exempt securities to affect the industry of America. That is known by every man, and it is known that every man in industry who gets enough to invest will invest it in tax-exempt securities anyhow unless he can operate it more profitably.

I am not in favor of creating tax-exempt securities except as an urgent necessity, because it tends to create a class, a class of wealth that will always invest in tax-exempt securities, and then we have the fact that they do own them urged as the reason for not taxing them on their exorbitant earnings in their business monopolies. Inordinate earnings on capital invested do not come from the poor man; they do not come from the man who takes risks except in rare instances. The earnings of great wealth are not proportional to the risk as contended by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. The Steel Trust, the Standard Oil, and those that obtain a monopoly of the great necessities of life and then levy a tribute on the people to such an extent as they see proper are the ones who will pay the 50 per cent. If it were not for that there might be something in the argument of the gentleman from Ohio that taking a great risk is the only way of making great earnings.

Take the Steel Corporation that began with a real capital of about $400,000,000, capitalized it first at $700,000,000, and then arbitrarily increased it to $1,400,000,000, because they had control of the market and could make a dividend on the watered stock equal to the real investment. That stock which was at first not salable at par became worth a premium. The Standard Oil at one time carried stock that sold in the market for $600 for one share, because they had levied tribute on the people of the whole United States. They paid the men who produce the oil from the ground whatever price they fixed in their office. Then they manufactured it into the final product and, having a monopoly, they sold the finished product at any price they fixed. They sold to the consumer at any price they fixed and they paid those who took it out of the ground what they pleased. I think that great corporations worth billions of dollars that are allowed to earn 8 per cent before the excess-profits tax begins ought to be contented. There is no farmer in this land who would not be willing to take 8 per cent on all investments he has and let the Government take the remainder of it. [Applause.] Why, Mr. Speaker, if you take the average farmer, the average middle-class citizen, and count up the taxes he pays, you will find that he pays more than 50 per cent of his net income every year. And many a farmer in my State paid heavy taxes last year on his farm from which he had no net income, even though his own labor was given free. I confess I have no overpowering sorrow for the man who is taxed heavily after he has put in his pockets a net profit of $100,000, $200,000, or $1,000,000, yet that is the only class the Republican Party seem anxious to relieve, and when they relieve this class they must raise the revenue they remit to them by heavier burdens upon the moderately well-to-do and the poor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the resolution before the House provides that the House conferees be instructed to recede and agree to the Senate amendment substituting a 50 per cent maximum surtax on personal incomes instead of 32 per cent as reported by the committee and passed by the House. It has been a long, hard fight behind closed doors to secure this right to a record vote on surtaxes. The maximum rate under existing law is 65 per cent, so that a reduction to 32 per cent, as carried in the House bill, without possibility of a record vote, is a cut of more than one-half the present maximum income rate compared with a reduction by the Senate of 15 per cent from the maximum rate of 65 per cent contained in existing law. Let me state the issue in another way: As set forth under the resolution the House bill contained a 32 per cent maximum surtax rate to apply to all net annual incomes over $68,000, while the Senate rates continue on to 50 per cent on all net annual incomes over $200,000. As the surtax does not begin to run until the income exceeds $6,000, and then is raised 1 per cent on every $2,000 increase, the average surtax rate below $200,000 income is less than 25 per cent.

The statement is made by Chairman FORDNEY, who has just preceded me, that more income tax will be collected under a reduced 32 per cent rate, which was opposed in committee, than under a 50 per cent rate, because those having to pay a high rate will invest in tax-exempt securities. In a letter from the President to-day on the subject, and read by Mr. FORDNEY a few minutes ago, it is stated, if I heard correctly, that the House rate of 32 per cent is the more promising one in bringing returns to the Public Treasury.

If that be a fact, then it is idle to urge adoption of the higher maximum Senate rate of 50 per cent. The distinguished chairman of my committee, whom I respect very highly, says that the income will not be increased if the maximum surtax is placed at 50 per cent instead of 32 per cent. Consequently, the proposed reduction is not sought by rich men but Congress is remitting that tax without benefit to anyone. That same argument is made by other men who place their own opinions against concrete facts. Is the chairman right?

Let us learn from his statements uttered to-day whether he is not mistaken and whether the President has not been misinformed as to the facts.

The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] states to the House that a 50 per cent maximum surtax, according to Treasury Department estimates, will bring in $401,000,000 in personal income tax for 1922, compared with $462,500,000 under the existing 65 per cent maximum surtax law. Under a 32 per cent maximum surtax rate, as adopted by the House, the estimated Treasury income will be $364,000,000, or a loss in round numbers of $98,000,000 between rates under existing law and the House bill. Not a theoretical loss, but a reduction of practically $100,000,000 in Treasury receipts.

In other words, on the best information obtainable the Senate rate will cause a loss to the Treasury over existing law of $61,500,000, while adoption of the House rate of 32 per cent will cause an additional loss of $37,000,000 more for 1922. If that be true—and Treasury experts have determined that between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000 more taxes will be collected from large incomes under the 50 per cent Senate surtax than under the House rate of 32 per cent—then why do you, Mr. Chairman, discredit the experts whom you quote and who base their judgment on years of experience and existing conditions?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is on the supposition that the money is not diverted to tax-free securities.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, certainly; but that is a factor in the Treasury estimates to-day and has been during the last year and the year before that. Such investments have been made in the past and will be made in the future, but they are apart from tax-free investments and are the net estimates of receipts by Treasury experts, and I ask, gentlemen, are you to believe the Treasury experts, whom the chairman quotes as the highest authority, or are you to accept the opinion of the chairman, or even of the President, who apparently are both influenced by non-experts in reaching their conclusions?

WHY HAVE WE REPEALED THE EXCESS-PROFITS TAX?

We have by this act repealed from January 1, 1922, the excess-profits tax that brings in $450,000,000 annually under present depressed business conditions. The effort made to date that repeal from January 1, 1921, was reversed by a Republican conference after a close vote, as stated. We have repealed the so-called luxury taxes that largely affected those best able to pay, and now we are cutting surtaxes on incomes so as to lose nearly $100,000,000 if the House rate of 32 per cent is accepted, or about $61,000,000 if we adopt the 50 per cent rate on incomes of over $200,000 annually. Do you not think, gentlemen, when you go back to your constituents with that record you will be required to offer reasons for your vote on this resolution if you now reject the Senate rate that will require something in addition to the President's letter, strong as it may seem to be to the casual reader and however great our respect for him and his high office?

The suggestion is frequently made in discussion that our tax laws are more burdensome than those of other countries. No careful student of the subject will make that statement, because the tax rate of Great Britain is double and in some instances three times our own, not surtaxes but in total receipts it reaches approximately that figure. She taxes corporations 30 per cent normal tax, while in this bill we passed the corporation normal rate on to the Senate at 12½ per cent. In like manner inheritance and other taxes are far heavier in European countries than in our own.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think the gentleman is in error when he says that we lost $450,000,000 in the excess-profits tax, for the reason that we received a portion of it by increasing the corporation income taxes and did not lose the total amount.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman from Michigan may have misunderstood my statement. The question before the House when the tax bill was reported by the Ways and Means Committee in August was whether or not we would repeal the excess-profits tax and income surtax above 32 per cent so as to date from January 1, 1921, as reported by the committee or from January 1, 1922. The Republican conference reversed the committee. In other words, we were urged by the committee to make the repeal retroactive to date from January 1, 1921, and this the conference refused to do.

REPEALING TAXES ON EXCESS PROFITS AND ON HIGH SURTAXES.

Treasury experts declared we would thereby have lost $450,000,000 in excess-profits tax for 1921 and over $90,000,000 in reduced surtaxes, or a total loss of $540,000,000 for 1921. The committee's report to make the repeal retroactive was in face of the fact that every witness before us urging a repeal of the excess-profits tax insisted that the tax had been collected from the consumer by the one paying the tax through extra charges, and yet after having collected the tax for 1921 from the consumer the corporations that had passed it on to consumers through increased charges were to be permitted to retain in their own pockets $450,000,000 of taxes which they had thus collected in advance. In that case the President was quoted by House leaders for repeal from January 1, 1921, but the House Republican conference decided otherwise, believing his position had been misstated. Thereafter the Senate adopted the date of January 1, 1922, and accepted our effort to prevent a loss to the Treasury from these two sources of $540,000,000 for the calendar year 1921. The Senate is called conservative by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who just preceded me. If so, our committee was ultraconservative then, as it is now, in efforts to cut the income surtaxes of the wealthy to the middle and then take off some more.

Mr. FORDNEY. But if the 15 per cent adopted by the Senate on the corporation income tax is agreed to and enacted into law it will recover nearly the entire loss under the excess-profits tax. About 15 per cent would make an additional $450,000,000.

Mr. FREAR. Those are not the correct figures, according to my recollection, but I will insert actual Treasury estimates to test a fact that ought not to be in doubt. Here they are.

I quote from Secretary Mellon's estimate furnished the Ways and Means Committee on August 11, 1921, at the time the revenue bill was passed by the House:

Existing law 10 per cent corporation tax (1922).....	$445,000,000
House proposed additional 2½ per cent corporation tax.....	111,250,000

That was the tax estimate from corporations for 1922 as the bill passed the House. The 10 per cent normal rate quoted is law now. Addition of a 2½ per cent normal tax proposed by the Senate would add $111,250,000, according to Mr. Mellon's estimates, with which to meet a loss of $540,000,000 if the House committee's retroactive repeal on January 1, 1921, had been adopted. But I do not care to enter into further discussion on that subject beyond showing that the bill as reported by the House committee would have lost to the Treasury $540,000,000 in 1921, and the only substitute offered by the House was $111,000,000 in a 2½ per cent normal tax. Those of us who were not so generous to big business and large wealth helped save to the Treasury $540,000,000 for 1921, subject to that deduction, and the Senate may reduce the loss thereafter by adding 2½ per cent more to the corporation normal tax and bring in $111,000,000 from that same source. From Chairman FORDNEY's statement now to the House we may confidently expect he will recede and accept the additional 2½ per cent normal corporation tax added by the Senate.

THE PRESIDENT'S LETTER ON SURTAXES.

Mr. Speaker, a growing practice on the part of certain gentlemen of the House is to bring in at the last moment outside opinions or political influences to bolster up a weak cause. It has been done repeatedly, as in the dye-embargo case, when the President and members of his Cabinet were quoted to be in favor of the embargo. The case of the retroactive repeal proposal of the excess-profits tax has just been discussed. In both cases the judgment of the House was unaffected by outside influences whether correctly represented or not.

Again, at the last moment, a private letter is here read from the President to have the House disagree to the Senate amendment of 50 per cent maximum surtax, which Treasury experts say will lose to the Treasury $37,000,000 if the House rate of 32 per cent is adopted by the conferees.

Let me say that I recognize the President as the leader of my party, and I do not yield to anyone in admiration for his abilities and for the splendid way in which he has measured up to the highest ideals we hold for American Presidents. I will go further and say that to him and to Secretary Hughes will be offered the gratitude of the world if we make certain any agreement among nations to disarm, and I firmly believe they will be successful; but if he is badly advised in legislative matters we can not shift our own responsibility by following such advice.

To those Republicans who criticize others that differ in judgment I will say a brief examination of the vote on the emergency tariff, soldiers' compensation bill, and one or two other notable measures will tell their own tale of Members who accept and embrace Republican conference votes or high official requests only when it suits their convenience to do so. A Republican Senate has here accepted a 50 per cent maximum surtax and a Republican Rules Committee of the House presents a square proposal to us for acceptance. There can be no partisanship urged, and it is merely a question of whether the letter to Mr. FORDNEY is based on better understanding than the Senate's deliberate acceptance of the 50 per cent rate after long and thorough discussion, as shown by the record.

On a purely economic issue the President's letter must be subject to the same analysis as that of any other advocate, not for the purpose of discrediting or criticizing but in order to learn what information is to be had from the letter. Who are his advisers on the subject and what Members of the House or Senate were consulted among those who believe the higher Senate surtax should be maintained? Without full information from both sides any man may be misled and those who mislead and who place the Executive in a wrong position are responsible for inviting any disagreement.

No Member of this House acting under his oath and constitutional responsibility, accountable to his own conscience and judgment, can change his vote or his judgment on this resolution unless something is contributed that affects the real issue. What has the letter contributed to that end?

First, it says it is an answer to Mr. FORDNEY's inquiry as to some settlement of differences between the two Houses. Why appeal to the President when the House only asks for a chance to vote on acceptance or rejection of the Senate proposal? The letter from Mr. FORDNEY should not have asked to decide any difference between the House and Senate, because if a record vote had been permitted on the surtax measure when the bill passed the House originally it would easily have carried at 50 per cent the maximum rate now recommended by the Senate, and no difference would have occurred. There is no difference between the Houses if a vote now can be had uninfluenced by pressure. Differences exist between those who ask for a right to vote on the surtax rate and those who refuse that right. Was the situation misrepresented to the President; and if so, who misled him? Why can not a coordinate branch of government be permitted to vote on a single amendment to the revenue bill? Who is the guardian of our consciences and of our legislative records that not one record vote on the revenue bill has been permitted in the House to date?

REPUBLICANS AND REPUBLICANS.

We are not in difference with the Senate to-day, as suggested by the letter sent to the President, for we are with the Senate, and all we ask is a right to vote and prove our judgment is in absolute harmony with the Senate amendment.

Is it any act of party indiscretion to vote for a Senate amendment that has such famous Republicans among its supporters as LODGE of Massachusetts, Republican Senate leader, whose badge of Republicanism and leadership is as ancient and certain as that of any Member of the House? Or take WADSWORTH and CALDER of New York, and CURTIS and CAPPER of Kansas, joined with WATSON and NEW of Indiana and WILLIS of Ohio, who succeeded President Harding in the Senate. Who among us can speak for Republicanism as she spoke better than these Senators who were for the Senate surtax rate? Among able Republican delegations the mind naturally runs to CUMMINS and KENYON and KELLOGG and PENROSE and NORRIS and McCUMBER and the able Senator from Wyoming, WARREN. All are Republicans of a 4-X brand recognized the country over. The Senators from my own State, LA FOLLETTE and LENROOT, and among men of large means who apparently place Government needs before all else for the amendment are McCORMICK and MCKINLEY of Illinois and DU PONT of Delaware with many others. BORAH, SMOOT, and JOHNSON from the far western States are likewise presumably for this 50 per cent maximum surtax that went through the Senate without opposition. Who among you gentlemen of the House will challenge the Republicanism, patriotism, or ability of these Senators? If we are in error here, what about 98 Senators who also agreed to the 50 per cent rate?

Democrats can find common ground on this 50 per cent surtax amendment, which is a nonpartisan proposition. Veteran leaders like WILLIAMS, OVERMAN, REED, SIMMONS, POMERENE, UNDERWOOD, FLETCHER, SWANSON, and ROBINSON have joined hands with youthful graduates from the House like MCKELLAR, HEFLIN, HARRISON, and CARAWAY, all in agreement on at least one feature of the revenue bill, this maximum surtax. Advocates and opponents of a sales tax in the Senate, temporarily suspended hostilities as did supporters and nonsupporters of a soldiers' bonus measure in order to join on the Senate surtax amendment.

Even the ancient Newberry charges that only involved a paltry $176,000 and did not come within the $200,000 figure that marked the 50 per cent surtax limit, were laid aside by unanimous consent in order to reach agreement on the 50 per cent surtax, while the financial bloc and the agricultural bloc and the naval and peace blocs in the Senate sat down, figuratively, at the same table with the hard-worked post office bloc without holding weapons in easy reach. The surtax table of rates was a peace table that had no difficult boundary lines to settle, no reparations to adjust, and no capital ships or submarines to scrap. In fact, no Republican, whether reactionary or progressive, and no Democrat, whether bourbon or liberal, but could find congenial spirits in the Senate surtax vote which was the first real harmonious and political disarmament conference held in the north end of the Capitol since the laying of the corner stone of the building.

Some day soon history will be written of another disarmament meeting now holding in this city, and if Caucasians and orientals reach a measurably happy agreement, unbounded honor and glory will be given to the President and others in authority who bring it about. We are all behind the President in that program, but the letter received by Mr. FORDNEY is at variance with that of a unanimous Senate and many Members of the House, and we beg leave to differ in our judgment on the surtax rate.

I have briefly recounted the names of some of those who have agreed to the Senate maximum surtax amendment, not from any fear that bellwether Republicans at the south end of the Capitol will question the ability and character of men who a little more than 12 months ago sat as colleagues of the present Executive of the Nation, but in order that the real legislative situation may be understood.

All that we ask to-day, we who favor the Senate surtax amendment, is a right to help fix a 50 per cent maximum surtax, a rate that will not take away all of the $200,000 annual incomes, as claimed, but will leave over three-fourths to the owner with which to buy three full meals a day. We wish to show we believe the Senate did a good job with its surtax amendment, and we wish also to express our confidence that no one ever expected us to pull their chestnuts from the fire when fixing the surtax rate. We are satisfied to be found in such goodly company and again I say the President was misinformed as to any disagreement on our part with the Senate surtax amendment. We want it and do not want the low rate fixed in the House bill and never did.

The letter from Mr. FORDNEY presumably was asked for not to reconcile differences between the two Houses but to influence those who had finally secured a right to vote on the maximum surtax rate. If a correct understanding of the facts had been had, I can not believe the President's letter would have been written. It is by no means certain that a single Member of the 100 Republicans who favor the higher rate of surtax in the House or of the 98 Senators who voted for it was advised though effort to secure a record vote was refused until the last moment.

THE EFFECT OF THE SENATE SURTAX ON BUSINESS.

The letter recommends a compromise rate of 40 per cent, which is the rate urged by the House conferees ever since the bill passed the Senate. An illustration of the supposed effect of acceptance of the Senate surtax is offered by a statement from the War Finance Corporation. Information of the same tenor was given by Eugene Meyer, of that board, to our committee. In the letter it is suggested railway securities can not be floated because of surtax differences between the Houses. Mr. Meyer, who represents large financial interests, stated to our committee in substance that a 32 per cent maximum surtax would permit the financing of railway securities, but when a 50 per cent rate was proposed the difficulties seemed insuperable. Is 40 per cent any solution of the situation?

The President is one of the busiest men in the world. He is confronted with problems that challenge the attention of the world. In comparatively insignificant matters he must rely absolutely on the judgment of advisers. If those advisers are mistaken on the subject they assume to understand, the fault is theirs, not the President's. By that test let us examine into the comparative effect of a 40 per cent and 50 per cent maximum surtax on investments.

If the maximum surtax is reduced from 50 per cent to 40 per cent, the Treasury experts, according to Mr. FORDNEY, say it will save these large taxpayers $2,000,000. This is undoubtedly error in amount, for it is presumably nearer $20,000,000. In other words, the Treasury Department, according to Mr. FORDNEY's statement to us, estimates that at 50 per cent maximum surtax, receipts for 1922 will amount to $401,000,000, at 40 per cent maximum they will reach $399,000,000, and at 32 per cent, House rate, they are $364,000,000.

I submit that a difference of $2,000,000 or $20,000,000 is inconsiderable in its effects on business, and not a drop in the bucket compared with the billions of dollars of capital tied up in Liberty bonds and other Government indebtedness reaching $24,000,000,000 in addition to many billions of dollars in railway securities and of other utilities and private business securities now on the market that must far exceed in the aggregate $50,000,000,000, of which amount $20,000,000, the difference in surtax rates, is not one two-thousandth part of 1 per cent. What effect would that have on the investment market?

It will readily be observed that $2,000,000 or $20,000,000 or more that may be saved by rejecting the Senate surtax proposal, if all used for railway-security investments, as urged by Mr. Meyer, would not in the aggregate create a ripple. In fact, a bare statement of the case shows that the relative importance of comparative maximum surtax rates has been given little consideration by advisers who have misled the Executive.

Mr. Meyer is naturally anxious to have surtaxes reduced; that is a general wish in financial circles; but the impropriety of using a public position to unduly press such arguments on the committee or on Congress must be patent to those who analyze his statements. After a careful reading of the letter, I submit that nothing new is offered affecting the difference between a 40 per cent or a 50 per cent surtax rate other than that a few million dollars may be saved to men with incomes of over $84,000 by the lower rate. No principle is at stake that should cause the House to hesitate to accept the maximum surtax rate of 50 per cent adopted by a Republican Senate which is based on the well-recognized principle of placing tax burdens largely upon those best able to pay.

ARE LARGE INCOMES PLACED IN TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES?

It is commonly urged, as set forth in the President's letter, that incomes will be placed in tax-exempt securities unless surtaxes are largely reduced. The point to which the tax must be reduced to tempt investors from placing surplus funds in tax-exempt securities varies, according to witnesses.

Mr. Otto Kahn, representing a large financial house, stated to the Ways and Means Committee that the rate of surtax should not exceed 20 per cent, for beyond that point he believed it would be more profitable to place surplus funds where taxes would not apply. Others have placed the maximum around the same figure. Not one financial authority has suggested a 32 per cent surtax as any inducement to invest in taxable securities.

What, then, can be said of a 40 per cent rate, as suggested in the letter which proposes to loosen up moneys now kept in hiding?

If 20 per cent is the highest maximum that will induce investments in "business," how will the rate of 40 per cent help matters beyond reducing the taxes of a few hundred multimillionaires whose incomes reach $200,000 or more annually? In his testimony before the Senate committee, Secretary Mellon is quoted as saying that 25 per cent is a proper maximum surtax to invite investments in business, but after stating that investments in tax-free securities were quite general under existing law, with a 65 per cent rate, he further said:

From my knowledge of incomes in business, etc., of individuals I do not know among them any who to any large extent invest in tax-free securities, for the reason that they have not the free cash with which to do it. They are generally people who are in an industrial line of business, and they have to carry on their business and they need their capital. They can not get it out to invest it in tax-free securities. I do not think that is the largest item.

No one will question that Mr. Mellon, with his vast banking and industrial interests, is as competent to testify as anyone who could be called.

Further confirmation is had that the surtax rate has little effect on business. Of parties testifying before the Ways and Means Committee on the tariff bill, upward of a thousand witnesses were heard, if I remember correctly. None, to my recollection, attributed present conditions of business or lack of business to taxes. None were complaining of excess-profits taxes or surtaxes. All were ready and willing to pay taxes, excess profits and surtaxes if they could set their mills in motion and if orders were to be had. They urged as a matter of supreme importance to start home production that a tariff bill be passed immediately to give them protection against cheap foreign production against which they can not compete. That was the cause of poor business, according to their testimony, together with loss of the exporting trade, accompanied by foreign exchange conditions and high transportation rates.

As if to add a last blow to arguments that money, liquid money, is not to be had from financiers for general investment because of tax-exempt securities, I call attention to this morning's issue of the Washington Post—November 21—page 12, where the statement is made that $50,000,000 in 6 per cent bonds of the New York Telephone Co. were oversubscribed nine and a half times. What becomes of the claims so glibly made that only tax-exempt securities attract investors because of the 65 per cent surtax rate?

Money is to be had for good business propositions that return 6 per cent on investments. Nearly a half billion dollars was subscribed for that purpose in the telephone company bonds, compared to $20,000,000 in surtaxes that we have been asked to exempt in order to save the business of the country. Is it not about time that legislative sanity prevail?

DO TAX REPEALS SET THE WHEELS IN MOTION?

The argument in favor of reducing surtaxes comes from financiers like Otto Kahn, Eugene Meyer, Jules Bache, Meyer Rothschild, and others, who by a coincidence generally ask to have taxes shifted to the shoulders of the consumers of the country by a turnover sales tax in order to benefit the consumer. They first argued to Congress that a repeal of the excess-profits tax would start business, but the proposal did not start a wheel in motion. Next they declared that a reduction of maximum surtaxes would bring prosperity, and that suggestion is contained in the letter to Mr. FORDNEY, but not one wheel of industry, it is apparent from an analysis of the figures, will be affected by such reductions. Next and last it is proposed to adopt a turnover sales tax that will shift the remaining tax burdens from the shoulders of those best able to pay over to the backs of the consumers. A consumption tax, we are told, is now the cure-all to supplant eventually all income taxes.

These various acts of tax shifting to which Congress has lent aid will not be of any material value to anyone excepting the man whose tax is reduced, and he generally has power to fashion sentiment through the press and elsewhere.

Great financiers, whose millions have been increased by the war, now stand behind the excess-profits and surtax-repeal propaganda, and they have enlisted a number of enthusiasts in their cause. It is significant, however, that practically every tax expert I have met whose employment is of a disinterested character is in general agreement with the views here offered.

I do not deny that investors may place their funds in tax-exempt securities where they can thus escape income taxes. Neither will any intelligent man say that investments for municipal improvements are without value, frequently of equal importance to the country because of labor employed in municipal and other work.

These are comparatively side issues. The only proposal now before the House is whether or not we shall leave the conferees free to act on their own motion, which will mean a maximum surtax of 40 per cent or less than that, or shall we accept the 50 per cent maximum offered by a Republican Senate? It makes no difference, I concede, whether a Republican President or Republican Senate or anyone else offers the proposal if it is just and right, but there are those who like to have the seal of party approval stamped on some part of every measure, and they may find comfort in the Senate's deliberate and unanimous action increasing the surtax to 50 per cent.

THE MONEY ISSUE IS NOT THE MOST IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Let me briefly recapitulate the facts in issue. The House without privilege of a record vote passed a maximum surtax rate of 32 per cent in place of the 65 per cent in existing law. A 32 per cent maximum rate reaches to incomes of $68,000 and over. The Senate continued existing surtaxes up to 50 per cent, affecting incomes of $200,000 and over. The proposed compromise rate urged by the House conferees of 40 per cent reaches its maximum at $84,000. Based on the 65 per cent rate of existing law a 50 per cent maximum surtax rate would cause an annual loss to the Treasury of $61,500,000. A 40 per cent maximum surtax will lose approximately $80,000,000, and the 32 per cent rate will lose $98,000,000. The difference in loss between the 50 per cent surtax as adopted by the Senate and the 40 per cent compromise now proposed by House conferees is about $20,000,000.

Apart from the principle involved of taxing according to ability to pay the $20,000,000 is trivial in a tax bill estimated to raise over $3,000,000,000. The $20,000,000 tax difference can not possibly affect $50,000,000,000 or more in miscellaneous securities, including railway securities mentioned by Mr. Meyer, whether placed in the Treasury or left in the pockets of the owners. It is not a drop in the bucket, so arguments to that effect are clearly of no value. This issue is greater than any mere question of difference in amount of tax collected, however.

After weeks of controversy in the House in an effort to get at least one record vote on some phase of the revenue bill and an announced purpose on the part of many Members to agree with the 50 per cent maximum surtax adopted by the Senate we are confronted with the suggestion that to insist on this right and on our individual judgment is a political test of Republicanism because we must follow leaders who have reinforced their position by a letter sent from the President under a clear misapprehension of facts.

Many of us would prefer to surrender our convictions and vote as the President suggests ordinarily, but he certainly could not have known that every chance to vote on amendments has been refused heretofore in the House, and that when the right was finally conceded after long and heated controversy it was with a purpose to agree to the Senate amendment and a certainty exists that ordinarily that agreement will be voted in the House if a vote is permitted.

An enormous cut in high surtaxes, as stated, is a political as well as economic liability. Efforts have been made to place Members in a different position from Senators who unanimously agreed to the 50 per cent surtax rate. Of far more importance those of us who believe our constituents ask that we support the Senate rates are now told by so-called House leaders we must surrender our individual judgment and make a cut of over $80,000,000 in the taxes collected from large wealth instead of accepting the Senate rate. Why should we do so?

I realize now is the time that foolish advisers will ask that the Executive whip be cracked over Congress as certain inspired writers have been demanding for a long time, but we remember the President pro tempore of the Senate was one of the famous willful twelve, so declared by a former Executive, and holds his present high seat not because of that fact, but in spite of it, so no man should be called upon to stultify his judgment by voting contrary to his conscientious belief through fear. Every right and duty provided in the Constitution reads to the contrary.

I am not unmindful that tactless leaders may paint woeful pictures of lack of party discipline with resulting political harakiri if Members vote their convictions at the only opportunity ever given them to vote on any change in the committee bill as reported to and passed by the House. Speaking for myself alone, I do not know what well-founded excuse I could offer my constituents for voting to exempt wealth from taxes to the extent of $80,000,000, the 40 per cent rate, instead of $60,000,000, the 50 per cent rate. True, it affects a few hundred individuals of large wealth—from men with $2,000,000 each to those worth $500,000,000, but some of these multimillionaires possess more of the world's wealth to-day than all of the upward of 20,000 farmers of my district combined, and yet we term farmers "the backbone of the Nation."

Working from 12 to 15 hours daily to make ends meet, their wives and their children join in the daily toil round the farm. We are helping the multimillionaires in this bill, but we are not doing for the 20,000 farmers all that should be done, although the bill, I feel, is better than existing war-tax legislation.

Thousands of other workers in like manner are among the laborers who do not clip coupons or watch market quotations, but who try to save from their meager earnings enough to meet the annual tax collector. They do not get favored tax-payment extensions, but the homestead is sold for taxes if payment is not made promptly on the day when due. I know the majority leader says such arguments sound demagogic, but to my mind Senator WARREN sounds the sentiment of Wyoming and of nine-tenths of the people of this country when his judgment is evidenced by the Senate 50 per cent surtax amendment passed unanimously by the Senate.

Let it be known that men are threatened with punishment because they refuse to take an additional $20,000,000 tax off from wealth and those who threaten will be responsible for an issue that may react. The salvation for the party is to save it from money changers, and it will soon be time for plain speaking if we are to defeat the utterly selfish purposes of those who would willingly wreck the party for their own gain, as was done 10 years ago.

THE RIGHT TO LEGISLATE INDEPENDENTLY.

When the funding bill was before the House I offered some observations about the disposition in certain quarters, particularly among our own membership to have Congress act as a "rubber stamp."

I then called attention to the vigorous denunciation of President Wilson and of different Cabinet members of the last administration by gentlemen who to-day on our own side are foremost in demanding that Congress be subservient to the wishes of outside influences, nay more, they continually present letters and other messages from high officials to influence the American Congress in its deliberations.

I believe the party to which I belong is not a party of special privilege and any attempt to make it so is certain to bring the reward that befell our Democratic friends recently. The election in New York City a few days ago resulting in a Democratic mayor by over 400,000 majority was a reversal of nearly double that figure from the repudiation of the Democratic presidential candidate just one year ago. Overturning a political boss in Albany after 22 years of uninterrupted control is only an echo of many other results occurring at the recent elections that should cause reflection to those who are living among the election returns of a year ago.

A substantial reason affects this remarkable change in sentiment that is not governed entirely by local conditions or off-year reversals. I do not care to repeat predictions made by prominent Republicans whose judgment I consider far more valuable than my own as to what may be expected a year hence if we do not study the clouds and this judgment comes from men living in the heart of the world's financial district who do not see through the colored glasses of some of their neighbors that live for themselves alone.

Suffice to say that while the country has expressed no reason for confidence in the policies of our Democratic friends a disposition to blindly accept promises or legislation because it emanates from Republican and Democratic sources will not control the judgment of the people. They ask for results and while we can not bring good times or good business by legislation we must not shift the heavy tax burdens now borne by those best able to pay on the backs of those least able to pay without expecting to meet the issue and all the political sophistry that puts through such legislation will be of little value when facing an intelligent constituency that asks to be shown.

As a step toward well considered legislation let us pay more attention to the people than to party.

Those who believe that constitutional privileges include the right to consideration of ordinary legislation uninfluenced by party whips or party leaders will continue in their course without fear of losing their party label. In fact, the temptation to reply in kind is often subordinated because, if well founded, it can only work to the advantage of political opponents.

HAS THE HOUSE CEASED TO LEGISLATE ON GREAT BILLS?

I ask in perfect good faith by what right, political or otherwise, did not the tax bill under consideration reaching over $3,000,000,000 annually receive a single amendment when it passed the House originally? Why was no amendment permitted?

In this body that is supposed to represent the people, that goes back to the people once in every two years and is generally responsive to the people as a representative body, not one record vote amendment was permitted to a bill that covered nearly 200 pages and included many hundreds of tax proposals.

Two of the three days of "general debate" were allowed, but no amendment was permitted to be made to a bill that came from the committee to the House with many obvious faults and defects. That bill we swallowed whole and sent on to the Senate. Why was the House refused this privilege of amendment or more than two or three days' discussion when the Senate gave over two months' consideration to the same bill with apparently over 100 record votes on amendments or proposed amendments compared to none in the House? Why did the Senate make over 800 amendments to the House bill practically nine-tenths of which were accepted by the House conferees, while the House, the constitutional body in which all revenue bills must originate, was not permitted to add one amendment to its own committee bill? In other words, why should a committee be vested with all the rights of the House without any privilege of appeal? Why distrust our own membership?

No answer is offered by saying we can vote against a party rule when cries of "regularity" and "support the committee" guide the actions of all on both sides of the aisle. Do not make any mistake, because this is a partisan practice indulged in by both parties, but with a majority of 169 Members why did we not permit ourselves to indulge in the legislative practice of improving committee bills when this measure was before the House.

It is far more serious than matters of leadership or of regularity, because it resolves itself into a stifling of the rights of 400 Representatives, who under the Constitution are supposed to represent over 100,000,000 people. The injury, for it is a lasting and wrongful injury, affects over 100,000,000 people whom we do not represent, because their wishes are not made known and can not be made known under the practice adopted in the passage of the revenue bill. By what right and by what authority in or out of Congress can any such action be taken, and can we excuse our own failure to assert legislative prerogatives under the plea of party regularity? The matter of surtaxes would have been decided long ago by the House at a rate as high as the Senate amendment if we could have voted directly on the bill. Why were we not permitted to do so?

Most of the Members of the House do not care to oppose party leadership, and they are willing to surrender a reasonable amount of independent action to those who assume or are charged by their fellow Members with leadership, but it should be understood that the method of passing a revenue bill through the House which prevented a separate vote on any one of the hundreds of items, including surtax rates, was an act without precedent in times of peace. Apart from the stultification of individual membership, that is helpless to express itself on the merits of proposed legislation, it lowered the dignity of the House, and when compared with the freedom of action accorded in the Senate we stand confessedly bound and gagged by some mysterious force that works in secret its orders to prepare.

More important, we are answerable to the people for our acts, and that responsibility can not be shifted to the shoulders of any leader, whether within or without the House.

I have digressed from the subject under discussion, but I hope the House will accept the Senate amendment of 50 per cent maximum surtax, and I believe that amount would have been written into the bill when it passed the House if such action had been possible. The surtax here involved does not mean much in amount compared with many other measures that come before the House, apart from the principle involved of taxing those best able to pay, but it has brought a square issue from those who demand the constitutional right to record their vote on the subject. That right is infinitely more important to determine than can be any mere matter of dollars and cents, for responsibility rests with every Member, whose certificate of authority comes not from House leaders or party pronouncements but from those whom he represents.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to appeal to the prejudices of the House or to the prejudices of my or anybody else's constituents, but I am going to offer an appeal for the millions of unemployed throughout the length and breadth of this country because of the system of taxation with which we have burdened the employer. Business is the biggest gamble in the world. You have got a better chance at Monte Carlo or at the race track than you have in business. Ninety-three per cent of all the people engaged in business in this country fail. I want to appeal to gentlemen on that side of the House, most of whom have a professional training and have a professional view of this question. The business man is not always concerned in the amount of money he is going to make in his business, but frequently has the good of the community at heart. He desires to see his business grow; he has a certain pride in achievement, and unless you can make this gamble at least a 50-50 proposition, he is not going to continue along those lines. He is investing to-day in tax-exempt securities and going out of business and out of employment, not because the securities are tax exempt, but because the securities are the only safe investment that he can make. May I bring to your attention one instance. One of the Members of this body when he was elected to the House sold everything he had in the way of business activities and invested in industrials, which he supposed were good investments. There is not one of those stocks to-day that is paying a dividend, although when he made his investment every one of them was paying dividends, and he had reasonable assurance that they would continue to do so, but through the withdrawal of financial support they have been obliged to suspend both production and dividends. You seldom hear of a lawyer failing, he gets his fees, he knows what his income is going to be from year to year, but the business man does not know from year to year whether he is going to fail or be successful. This year he makes $50,000 and next year he may lose $75,000.

The business man is not so conservative that he is not willing to take a chance, but he is unwilling to take a chance if every time he makes a dollar the Government takes it away from him and does not recognize him when by hard work and industry he has built up his business and furnished employment. We have a concrete illustration in Russia. The very thing you are attempting here has been in force in Russia for the last three or four years. They started out to take the wealth of the country; they started out to soak the rich man. When they got all the rich men had they turned to the railroads and to industries, and they took those away. After exhausting them there was but one thing left, and that was the farmer, and what was the result in Russia? Every man in the country threw up his hands in despair and said, "What is the use." Now, you can appeal if you will to the prejudices of the people, but you are going to find when you go back home that the working man is going to say this, "I would rather be taxed and have a job than pay no taxes and be without a job." And that is what you are doing when you put this excessive taxation upon business men. Only one out of ten are successful and able to employ labor; the others fail, and if you are going to encourage employment you must encourage men to employ their wealth in industry. [Applause.]

The excess-profits tax and the surtax were taken from England at a time when the results could not be ascertained. But after a trial of more than four years in this country and a longer period in England they have proved absolutely inefficient and a great deterrent. A continuation means a confiscation of all wealth and a condition in industry closely akin to that of Russia.

A remedy for this situation has been urged frequently, but it has always been opposed by the demagogue and certain blocs, so called, who still appeal to prejudice of the people through the cry of "Soak the rich."

This is particularly true of the "farmer" bloc and the "labor" bloc who seem to be absolutely indifferent to the real results of this endeavor to "Soak the rich," ignoring the fact that it has withdrawn from industry and agriculture the necessary capital, and in consequence everyone has suffered. The remedy they suggest is a constitutional amendment allowing the Federal Government to tax all tax-exempt securities of the States, counties, and municipalities, something impossible of accomplishment because the States will not agree to having an additional burden placed upon them through the increased rate of interest at which these bonds will have to be marketed, and in addition, State rights would absolutely go into the discard; a very dangerous and impossible situation.

Investigation will show, however, that money is not being invested in tax-exempt securities for the purpose of escaping taxation so much as it is to secure a perfectly sound and safe investment, and that a man to-day, although he may see possibilities of a much larger return in industry or public service activities, realizes the risk and prefers to take the smaller return rather than lose his principal.

How many have invested in stocks and bonds supposed to be perfectly safe and sound, and have during the past two or three years had their dividends cut materially or discontinued entirely? How many, in view of past experiences, are willing to take the chance of losing the accumulation of thrift and industry over a long period of years and invest those savings due in many instances to sacrifices of all luxuries, and in many instances necessities—how many are willing to put those savings into such an uncertainty as business, which, under the present law, is subject to a tax far beyond anything that you or experts employed for that purpose can read into the law, and far beyond the safety of the business?

Here is a warning: Ten years ago the legislative branch of the Nation undertook, and successfully, to bankrupt the railroads, and they did some job. They would not allow them to make enough money to pay back the money they borrowed, or to keep up the railroads, and the result is that to-day 90 per cent of the railroads are in a bankrupt condition.

To-day the average business concern is in this position. Of all they make this year practically one-half of it will have to be paid to the Government in taxes; of all the income they make this year one-half of it is owed to the Government for taxes, so that the average business man in the country when he settles up his business at the end of the year will have nothing out of the year's business.

To-day not the executive but the legislative branch of the Government is doing to business and to the people who employ labor, and to the business men throughout the country, exactly what it did to the railroads, and if this policy is pursued and continued it will put business in the same shape as the railroads, which means nothing in the world but fewer people employed.

It is almost confiscation to-day, and there seems no chance to impress this on the farmer or politician, that there must be sufficient capital in the hands of the employer in order that it may be distributed through the medium of employment to the general public.

It is management more than money and it is leadership more than labor that make for progress and prosperity.

When 25 per cent of the time of the employers of this country is wasted in an effort to make up tax returns, 25 per cent of efficiency and management and leadership is lost, and there is 25 per cent of neglect of the employee and employment. Twenty-five per cent or more of time given to expert accountants and lawyers in making out tax returns properly, not to escape taxation but to escape jail or bankruptcy, or both, is a terrible tax in addition to the money tax.

The best way to increase production is to increase the number of employers and increase the number of employed.

It is a fact known to all of you that 90 per cent of those who start out in the business of employing others fail.

Therefore one of the hardest, most difficult propositions is to find a man or set of men or great group of men who can successfully employ labor.

This great by-product, which to-day seems to be something like 25 per cent of the Nation's wealth, is not utilized, because the people who have the ability to employ labor have not the money wherewith to employ labor.

They have not the incentive to make money which would induce them to take the risk in employing labor. The employment of labor means that if an employer undertakes a business adventure of about $100,000 he must have money enough to pay the people whom he employs to the extent of $80,000 out of the $100,000.

He must have money. He must have courage to produce results from raw material. He must have the courage which makes him undertake to pay interest of possibly $5,000 on the capital that he need employ, and possibly for making a return of $5,000 on his investment.

The men who can do this are ten out of a hundred. Ninety of them fail who undertake it.

Now that the by-product of $80,000 out of $100,000, this consumption of $10,000 worth of raw material and the interest paid on capital has all got to be jeopardized.

All this must be jeopardized, because the Government and the farmer and the planter of the South say that the man who has paid $80,000 for labor, who has paid for $10,000 worth of raw material, and paid $5,000 on the capital invested is in the rôle of a rich man, because he has made $5,000 for himself. He is a man of great wealth, so the Government takes 60 per cent away from him.

In this country of ours it has, within the last few years, become a great indoor sport of the politician and the demagogue to accuse and abuse the business man.

The man who has smoke coming from his chimneys and keeps the wheels of industry turning in any other country on the face of the globe, except in Russia, is a benefactor.

But in the United States of America a man who has smoke coming from his chimney and the wheels of industry humming is a malefactor. Soak him!

He is working anywhere from 14 to 24 hours a day. He adds to the wealth of the Nation and incidentally to his own wealth.

He would like to put the money he makes back into business. But the Government says, "No. You must pay it to us as a tax."

Hard times come. He may lose money, but the Government does not advance him his losses or reimburse him for his labor. If this man prefers to take the fruits of his thrift and industry and put them into the only positively safe investment he knows of under the present conditions—tax-exempt bonds—and spends his time playing golf or tennis or poker or in travel or in some other recreation without the worries and cares and risks of business, is he to be censured or is he to be commended as a man of good business judgment?

Can a man be censured when he sees the writing on the wall that in his days of prosperity he can not put aside a fund for the future calamities that may happen?

In the legislative halls he is considered as a man to be soaked. In the revenue office of the Treasury Department he is considered a subject for inquisition, and that the truth is not in him. In the face of all this, is he to be censured for retiring from business?

But what is the result? He does retire, and the only safe thing for him to do is to retire and invest in bonds.

Now, then, what becomes of his 2,000 or 3,000 employees, who have been happily located for so many years?

The Government has closed the factory in its foolish effort to exact more money from the man who owns the mill. It has driven him from business, and the employees have joined the rank of the unemployed.

The public interest is paramount, and when public opinion coincides with the public interest the politician and the statesman must give heed. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I would ask the gentleman from Texas to use some time.

Mr. GARNER. Let me say the gentleman from Texas has so far but one more speech on this side.

Mr. FORDNEY. If that is going to take all the balance of the time, he had better make it now.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman understands that the custom of the House which is that if you have several speeches you proceed until you have but one, and then if I have but one, I make mine and you make yours.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan has 58 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Texas has 40 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Wisconsin has 29 minutes remaining.

Mr. GARNER. I suggest that one side or the other on that side yield. So far as I know, there will be but one speech on this side.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I regret sincerely to find myself in opposition to the view of the leadership in the House and the head of the administration. It would be much easier for me if I were privileged to advocate those things for which the administration and the majority of my party seem to stand at this particular time. But I must follow the dictates of my own judgment and my own conscience.

I think it might be well for the membership of the House to reflect a moment on the proposition with which they are dealing. Never before within my experience in this body, never before within my experience at any time, so far as I now recall, has the House of Representatives been the conservative body and the Senate of the United States the radical. For the first time within my experience the House has been conservative, I think beyond the point of justice, while the Senate has been the reverse. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] made the statement that this was probably not a deliberative body. In large measure that statement is true. This tax bill, with much of which I am out of sympathy, was passed through this House rapidly, but the Senate of the United States, which considered it for weeks and with ample opportunity for debate, feeling constantly the pulse of the Nation, put a 50 per cent surtax upon great incomes. They did not act without advice, but there are certain things in connection with their action that I think might merit our attention. On practically every other thing of importance during the consideration of this bill in the Senate there was a roll call, but there was no roll call upon this one thing of supreme importance.

The record does not disclose how any Member of that body voted upon the 50 per cent proposition. When it came time to send this bill to conference, the motion made was unprecedented on a revenue bill, and I challenge any proponent of this bill to deny this statement. The motion made was not to disagree with the House; the motion was made to call for a conference. Every other time, within my knowledge at least, where a revenue bill had been sent to conference from that body, the first statement in the motion has been that the Senate disagreed to what the House has enacted. So we find the record disclosing that the Senate raised the House provision to 50 per cent. No roll call was had on the provision, which was called upon a motion that did not disclose a disagreement. And, in my judgment, the reason for all this was that the Senate expected the House conferees to cut down this surtax and the blame would be upon us. [Applause.] It would permit the Senate to say we tried to increase the surtax on great incomes, but the House prevented us from doing so.

I want to say to you, gentlemen, so far as I am concerned, that this great representative body, fresh from the people, that gets its commission every two years, is not going to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for the men who represent wealth at the other end of this Capitol. [Applause.]

The Member from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], for whose ability I have the very highest regard, made a very interesting speech with reference to the proposition, and the same sentiment was expressed by my friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], of whom I am exceedingly fond, that we could get more by a 40 per cent surtax than we could by a 50 per cent surtax. There is not a Member of this House who has not received, times without number, protests against the 50 per cent tax by the great wealth of this country. It is the first time in my experience that the wealthy men of America petitioned Congress to take more money from them than Congress has any intention of taking. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, I regret to disagree with the great man at the other end of the Avenue, who by what he is doing now in the world's affairs is writing his name among the immortals. [Applause.] I love him. I have the highest respect for him; the greatest admiration for him. I regret to disagree with the leadership on my side of the House, but may I be permitted to say this, not offensively, that there is no man in Washington to whom any responsibility attaches for my being a Member of this body. The people who are responsible, who sent me here, are the people who are in tremendous distress because of present conditions, a people whose work begins when the first flush of dawn stains the east, and who stop their work only when the stars swing out at night. And as long as I remain here, be it short or long, I shall speak their voice. [Applause.]

This whole tax measure, and especially this provision, is founded on the wrong theory of economics. The ideal tax, of course, is the tax that stays where it is put and can not be passed on to some one else. That tax is very rare, if it exists at all; but the real fundamental theory of taxation is that the burden shall be placed on the shoulders of him best able to bear it. I am fully as much concerned with what I leave a man after we tax him as I am with what we take from him when we do tax him. So far as I am concerned, I refuse to allow the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] in shedding tears for the man who has $560,000 net annual income after this tax is levied.

I appeal to the Republican side of the House in particular. If we go back to the country, distressed as it is, with all the uneasy feeling directed toward organized government, inspired and prompted by the deplorable industrial and commercial condition of America, and tell them that we forced the Senate to leave the $40,000,000 annually with the great wealth of this country that they tried to make them contribute to the general welfare, the casualty list on the Republican side will look like a sanguinary battle. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I opposed the repeal of the excess-profits tax, but, in my opinion, there was less excuse for repealing that tax than there is for the reduction of the maximum surtax to 32 per cent, as proposed by this House. Now, it seems, all that the people are going to get in the way of reform in the revenue act is the modest concession embodied in the amendment of the Senate, providing for a 50 per cent surtax on incomes in excess of $200,000 per annum.

It is true it will only yield very little in revenue—a trifle like $90,000,000, as the genial chairman of the committee puts it—but it will come out of the pockets of those best able to bear the impost, and it is much too large a sum to throw away at a time when the country is suffering from the burdens of the war.

It is very amusing to hear gentlemen plaintively complain about the atrocity of imposing taxes upon the poor fellows that have nothing to do except to cut coupons from their bonds and who, notwithstanding their industry, can only earn $66,000 a year. It is really pathetic. They are certainly entitled to the sympathy of the American people, and I have no doubt they will get it in due course.

The gentleman says we have been indulging in the gentle art of soaking the rich. Ah, gentlemen, they soaked us first; they struck the first blow; and so long as they continue the pleasant pastime of exacting war profits from the American consumer simple justice demands that they should turn back to the Government a substantial share of their surplus earnings in the way of taxation.

In the preliminary report of personal income-tax returns of the Treasury Department there is a table showing the number of personal income-tax returns made in the various income classes from 1914 to 1919. When we examine this and find that the number of returns for 1919 of those having incomes in excess of $200,000 per annum only amounted to 1,451 persons we are amazed at the fuss these few individuals have been able to raise, and we are tempted to wonder how they could possibly have enlisted so much sympathy and have drawn so many tears.

The President in his letter says, as nearly as I can quote, that war-time levies in peace-time conditions are penalties on capital. But if war-time profits continue, what defense have the people except to exact war-time taxes? That, I believe, is the answer to the imputation that we are imposing war-time taxes. Let these gentlemen who are reaping immense incomes cease making war-time profits; then they need not worry about the payment of excess-profit taxes or of surtaxes.

I ask you, gentlemen, to look at this schedule impartially. What is the tax proposed? Fifty per cent upon incomes in excess of $200,000. Should not men who are drawing $200,000 a year income—three times that of the President of the United States—be willing to yield up 50 per cent of their surplus earnings to the Government that fosters them? [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

The following is an abstract from the table referred to (see p. 19 of the preliminary report, Personal Income Tax Returns, published by the Treasury Department in 1921). It shows the number of persons who filed income-tax returns in excess of $200,000 per annum in the years 1916, 1917, 1918, and 1919. And these are the persons who would be benefited by the House proposal to put the maximum surtax down to 32 per cent:

Income classes.	1916	1917	1918	1919
$200,000 to $250,000.....	726	703	401	522
$250,000 to $300,000.....	427	342	247	250
$300,000 to $400,000.....	469	380	280	285
$400,000 to $500,000.....	245	179	122	140
$500,000 to $1,500,000.....	376	315	178	189
$1,000,000 and over.....	206	141	67	65
Total.....	2,449	2,060	1,275	1,451

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COLE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the question before the House to-day, I must confess, has perplexed me somewhat. Unfortunately, I find myself in disagreement with my colleagues from my own State, men whom I esteem highly and whose judgment by reason of their longer service in this House may be politically better than my own. But in thus differing with them I assume nothing for myself and I impute nothing to them. I am even more perplexed because my own sense of duty impels me to cast my vote on this measure against the expressed wishes of some of my constituents. But I have faith enough in the independent manhood and womanhood of my district to believe that they will respect me for casting my vote according to my own conscience, even if that can not be in consonance with their views.

I do not believe in excessive taxes levied against any one class of citizens. A man who owns 320 acres of land should not be taxed $2 an acre, while a "poorer" man who owns 160 acres is taxed only $1 an acre. I voted for 32 per cent surtaxes in the House bill, and I am now willing to accept the President's suggestion of 40 per cent as a compromise between the two Houses. I can not vote for 50 per cent, for I think it is too high. When to this we add the 8 per cent normal tax on such incomes, we have a total of 58 per cent. That is, the Government will take three-fifths of certain incomes.

If I believed in this principle of taxation, I would not stop at 58 per cent, but I would exercise the courage of my convictions and follow Lenin and Trotsky, who, proceeding along the same lines, have taken 100 per cent and have confiscated the principal to boot. In Russia they have eliminated capital and probably exterminated most of the capitalists, and only God in heaven, who sees all things, knows what they have done to the rest of the people. All that we know is that "capitalistic" America is now feeding soviet Russia.

I think overtaxation of capital is an unwise policy, for it may increase interest rates and hamper industry, thus affecting farmers' mortgages and the wages of laboring men. But I do not base my own opposition to this proposition on mere policy. With me it is a matter of principle and conviction.

About the only reason I have for speaking to-day is the fact that I am playing a lone hand here, all my Iowa colleagues being in favor of the resolution. It is therefore not an intrusion for me to state my reasons for being in this position in this controversy. In my brief midsummer campaign I announced repeatedly that if elected I would vote for the repeal of all the transportation taxes, the repeal of the nuisance taxes, and the repeal of all excessive war taxes, which included both the excess-profits taxes and the higher surtaxes. In voting, as I shall to-day, I am therefore not only true to my own convictions but to the promises which I consider I made as a candidate.

In discussing this question I realize that all matters of taxation are still somewhat chaotic. We have emerged from a great war. We find industries depressed, finances dislocated, and, worst of all, agricultural prices reduced to the lowest point in a generation. We find also millions of men out of work and without wages. In the face of these conditions we are called upon to levy over $4,000,000,000 in taxes. We have no choice. This House and this Congress are helpless. The taxes must be levied and they must be collected if this Government would go on, repudiating none of its obligations and tarnishing none of its honor. It is not for us to choose; it is for us to do the things that are required.

And we must transact this business somewhat in haste and in the realization that we can not find, as there never has been found, a wholly scientific basis for levying taxes. We can not postpone this work to find that desirable basis. Nor do I hope that we shall ever find it. On the contrary, we shall always be more or less constrained to violate economic laws as long as we who levy these taxes will be more or less swayed by public sentiment. Political considerations, all of us here realize, enter largely, and economic ones often very meagerly. May I express it more plainly by saying that we here feel a somewhat general desire to exempt those classes which cast the most votes. This evil, and it is an evil, is inherent in our political system, and none of us can pretend that it does not exist or that it does not influence us. But, swayed as we must be by these influences, at least let us not seek to array one class against another at a time when we need nothing so much as the cooperation of all the people in the restoration of our country and of the world in the work of restoring normal conditions.

I want to congratulate the Congress and the people on the fact that we have come into agreement to repeal all the taxes on freight rates and passenger fares, and also to repeal the bulk of the petty taxes on purchases made by the people, taxes that were so annoying that they have generally been designated as "nuisances." I am still more glad that we have had the courage to repeal the excess-profits taxes. These taxes should have been repealed as soon as the war was over. They could be excused only by the necessity of war. It would have been better if the Government had prohibited all excess profits instead of thus sharing in them. I need not restate now or here that those taxes were made the excuse and the screen for profiteering all along the lines from the manufacturers to the ultimate consumers.

So far as the higher surtaxes, which we now have under consideration, are concerned, there seems to me to be no more justification for their retention than for keeping the excess-profits taxes on the statute books. There are various reasons, or at least excuses, given for retaining them, the principal one of which seems to be the theory that these taxes are paid wholly by the rich. In vulgar political parlance, we are invited "to soak the rich." And one man in absent-minded seriousness told me the other day that he felt free to vote to increase these taxes to 50 per cent or even to 65 per cent, as they now stand, because it would affect so few people in his district. What I thought of his state of political morals I did not at that time express, lest he might mistake my mildest words for forms of violent profanity. But he was in error. Such taxes do affect the people of his State. I know that they affect the people of my district, because they must eventually increase interest rates and hamper the industrial activities without which we can have no restored prosperity and no higher prices for the products of our farms. This thought has been well expressed by one of the newspapers in my district, the Marshalltown Times-Republican, a paper edited by a man who is known in Iowa as a superprogressive. Protesting the Senate's increases, he said:

The rich man with the fat income will either call in his money and force every farmer to pay or he will have to boost a 6 per cent rate to 8 per cent, in order to pay his income tax. The rich will refuse to be soaked, but men will remain idle because money costs 10 per cent for industrial enterprises and farmers will be refused renewals on their mortgage loans, because it would require 9 per cent interest. * * * To yield * * * as much net income as tax-free bonds. * * * The foolish * * * may think that they are making solid with the farmer vote, but in fact they are soaking the farmer for higher interest rates. * * * The Senators are foreclosing on all farm borrowers. * * * Instead of soaking the rich the farmer friends in the Senate have written the tax bill that will continue to soak the farmer.

In my State least of all should there be a desire to "soak" anyone through this tax bill. On behalf of my constituents I want to thank this Congress, and especially this House, for the kind consideration they have given to the people of the agricultural sections of the country, where the present depression has wrought its greatest havoc. I think we have tempered the wind to the shorn lamb.

The charge so frequently made that we have shifted the tax burdens from the rich to the poor is wholly false. The truth is, we have largely exempted the average man. He will pay no tax at all on the first $3,700 of income, and by the average man I mean one who is married and who has three dependent on him.

In my State very few under present income conditions will be called upon to pay any part of these Federal taxes which we are levying. Even in the high tide of 1919 the people of Iowa were called upon to pay less than sixteen millions in income taxes and surtaxes. This year it is estimated they will not pay more than five or six millions in such taxes. When we compare this with the four billions total we realize how lightly the burden rests on us. And of that five or six millions we are going to get two millions back for the improvement of our roads.

Having fared so well under this bill, I think that we who represent the State of Iowa in this Congress are well prepared to justify our acts. And having fared so well ourselves, why should we now seek to continue these excessive surtaxes against the constituents of other Members of this House? Surely, it is not true that when as a party we promised to eliminate all excessive taxes that we did it with mental reservations and did not intend to include in these acts of justice those among us who have more than others.

I am not unmindful of the fact that we in Iowa, and in the Middle West generally, hold some grievances against capital, and that rightly. During the boom years of 1919 and part of 1920 the Federal Reserve banks loaned millions to our banks in a process of inflation, a process that spread financial debauchery. Under its spell we all turned speculators. We invested hundreds of millions in promoters' stocks. We financed packing houses and tire and even airplane factories that never existed outside of the minds of the promoters. We boosted land values to five and even six hundred dollars an acre. We sowed the wind in those years, and in the years that are still upon us we are reaping the whirlwind. And then the financial powers that be determined on a policy of deflation. They curtailed loans and they called in those that were outstanding. They raised the interest rates. They treated us after the manner of the robbers who overtook a good man on his way to Jericho. We believe that these processes of deflation were too drastic and that they largely contributed to our present distress. We think we know that the banking powers loaned more to gamblers in Wall Street than they did to men who were raising the corn and feeding the cattle on a thousand hills. They called loans to gamblers "liquid," because they renewed them from day to day, and they called the loans to farmers and cattlemen "frozen," because in these transactions time is the essence of the contract. That kind of Federal financing, together with excessive railroad rates, brought on my State more than the half of the people's distress.

But we shall not now help our State by retaliating on capital in kind. We might make matters worse and not better. We must not emulate that medieval people who, on account of a mistake made by a doctor, proceeded to kill all the doctors among them—and then the plague came and killed all the people. We still need capital to carry on our business and we should not make it dearer but cheaper. In levying such taxes we must bear in mind that the lender is better able to take care of himself than the borrower. To punish the lender may mean two punishments for the borrower.

I almost fear that this wave of "insurgency," this hostility to capital, is on the part of many an unconscious acceptance of the tenets of the soviet. In times of distress we are apt to lay the blame where it does not belong and to apply the remedy where it effects no cure. This is not the first period of distress nor is it the first time that men have followed some unscientific or at least economically unsound short cut back to prosperity. The delusions that have grown out of distress have been many. It was in Iowa that greenbackism found its greatest exponent in the person of the late Gen. James B. Weaver. But great as was his leadership, I am glad to say my State did not succumb to the pernicious theory that debts can be paid by printing promises on pieces of paper. In the wake of this fiat money delusion came Populism, and in 1896 there was a new outbreak and a more virulent one of the same disease in the form of free silver. In the beginning of that hysteria many politicians in their subservience sat astride a horse which they called Bimetallism. Let it be hoped that the lessons of history will not be forgotten. And however great our distress, let us seek no false ways out of it. Let us lay the new foundation in the eternal truth of morals and economic law. The basic fact is that it is by labor and by thrift that we must bring back what we have lost in the World War. The easiest and the surest way out is the right way.

In speaking after this manner, and casting my vote as I shall do in a few moments, I do not believe that I am misrepresenting either my district or my State. I think that I know Iowa and her people, that I can interpret them correctly, and sense and express those aspirations which are higher than mere political expediency. I have lived all my life among her people, and they are a people whom I love and whom I would serve honestly and well. I have never spoken nor written a word against my State nor against her people, and I think that I am speaking for that State and that people on this floor to-day. I say this in no spirit of self-praise, but only in justification of the position which my conscience compels me to take in this debate.

It was President Garfield who said, in the memorable convention of 1880, that all heights and depths must be measured not from the crests of the waves tossed in storm, but from the calm of the great ocean. The storms of the war are still beating upon the seven seas of the world. All nations and peoples are still engulfed in the trough of a perturbed sea.

Let us hold steady the boat on which we are embarked. Let us pray. Let us hope. The golden age is not behind us. It is still before us. Let us believe that we shall not have much farther to go to enter its dawn. To-morrow we may wonder why we were so depressed yesterday. Let us see to it that the memories of that to-morrow shall not be marred by any false moves we make to-day.

Let us see to it that the foundations of the new prosperity and the new era are laid not on the sands, but on the rocks. Let us be right, and go right, even if the way may seem a little longer and a little harder now. In this era no class hatreds should be enacted into laws. Let us bear and forbear. Let us give and forgive, doing justice, loving mercy, and walking humbly with our God, according to the immortal prescription for well-doing and well-being laid down by the old prophet Micah.

And here in Washington we have a man fit to lead us through these troubled times. He is not a perturbed helmsman, but a calm one. He beats no passions into tatters, and he repeats no mere vain words. He makes no promises that he does not believe can have fulfillment. He is sympathizing with us on the farms, and he would help those who are in distress in the great cities. As the responsible head of this Government, over his own signature, he has asked us to support the proposed compromise of 40 per cent, although he himself would prefer to have these taxes left at 32 per cent. Let us uphold his hands, and by our votes sustain him in his leadership. He is now seeking to compose the differences among the great nations of the world. Surely we owe it to him that we shall compose our petty domestic differences here in the Congress.

Gentlemen, I beg of you, do not by your votes continue any of the old class hatreds in the legislation of this new era, this era which is to be dedicated to peace and to good will among all men.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, excessive surtaxes, I might almost say surtaxes as a whole, are a device to prevent capital from being used at low rates of interest for the assistance of the people and the assistance of the Government, and to force capital either to be put in dead investments, which show no income, or to be used in investments which grant excessive incomes.

Take the extreme case of a fortune of $20,000,000, and suppose, as such fortunes are now being conservatively invested or were conservatively invested, that they would bring in only 5 per cent, or $1,000,000 a year. Ask the man possessed of such a fortune to lend to the farmer to promote farming at 6 per cent and tell him that he must give up half of the 6 per cent he will receive, and he will say, "I can get more upon Government bonds at 3½ per cent. I can get 5 per cent from the municipalities. I can get over 5 per cent from farm loans under the Government. I can get more by putting it in a coal mine that is not developed and pay taxes until it is developed and brings in money." Ask him to invest in railroads to carry on transportation and employ men. Ask him to help a mill owner who employs workmen. Ask him to take shares of stock in a bank which will make only a fair profit and which will lend to the community when it wants to move its crops. Ask him to take Government bonds which have been sold at 4½ and which he can buy at a discount but which are subject to a surtax. Ask him to help the Government in a new funding of bonds, and he says, "In order to get a fair return I must take municipal bonds, which will pay me 5 per cent net, and thus encourage the cities and towns in all sorts of extravagances while the mills and the transportation and exchange and the holding of crops and the loans to the farmer must stop because capital is not allowed to do business at a low rate of return."

Now, this is not a small question. Large estates all over the country held by executors and trustees must invest in trust securities at a reasonably low rate of interest, and they must invest as best they can for the persons they serve. They will never invest in such securities as only give them an income subject to high taxation—

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have only five minutes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that since the Senate fixed the rate at 50 per cent the 4½ per cent Government bonds have appreciated from 87 to 94?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not know; but I know that the Government will want to sell some foreign bonds if they settle with foreign countries, and that the interest rate on bonds of every country has gone up to 7 or 8 per cent. America can not do business in that way for the people or for the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I can not agree with gentlemen who think that the best interests of this country can be subserved by placing the tax under consideration at 50 per cent. I know the very serious condition that is prevailing throughout the land. I am only speaking the truth when I say that the people of this country employed in every vocation and in every character of business are giving this Congress hell. They are doing it because we have done nothing to stimulate business. They are doing it because we have done nothing to give employment to the unemployed. They are doing it because we have done nothing to benefit the farmer and stimulate the price of the farmer's products.

What are we going to do if we keep pyramiding taxes on wealth in the way of furnishing relief for all these different classes of distress? If we could give employment to-day to the unemployed in this country, we would furnish a very fair market for the overproduction of the farmers of this country. For the life of me I can not understand why it is that gentlemen coming from the Middle West, who are crying out because of the fact that they are receiving such small prices for the products of the soil, should try to destroy the very business which would alleviate and relieve that condition. We all know that the best market in the world is the home market; we all know that our country is in the happiest condition when the factories are going all the time. Build the fires in the furnaces of the land; it will give employment to idle hands, and through this means you are making the best market for the products of the farmers in this country. It passes my understanding, unless it be because, forsooth, for a number of years it seems to have been popular to jump on the men who by reason of their ingenuity and by reason of their thrift and desire to save—that they should be crucified on the cross of public opinion. If it were not for wealth, we would not have the glorious country we have to-day. If it were not for wealth, some of these gentlemen crying against this tax would be coming to Washington afoot or else in the old stage coach. Railroads never would have been built across the plains or over the mountains had it not been for wealth; we would have none of the great industrial corporations giving employment to millions of men and women that we now have if it were not for wealth.

I hold no brief for these possessors of wealth, but I do know that it is by investment of capital that nations are built; that by reason of the investment of capital men and women are given the opportunity to better their condition and secure to them the enjoyments of life. I do know by my observation, which everybody knows, that by reason of the destruction of capital in the distressed countries over the seas the greatest suffering and the greatest misery is now extant ever known in the history of the world. Has it become popular for us to imitate their example? Can we better the condition of our people by destroying our industrial institutions? The bolshevik believes that the factories should be razed to the ground. Are we to destroy them by taxing them to death? I say that if we are to progress and if the best interests of our people are to be conserved, the time has come when we should stand here as defenders of honestly acquired and invested wealth instead of trying to kill it. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, Congress can levy a high rate of taxes on the individual, but there is no power of the Government to compel the man to work and earn it. We must remember this, that if you can not compel a man to earn the tax he will not have the money to pay it. So the mere fact that we fix a high rate of taxation does not add to the income of the Government. Everybody now realizes that the Government is a partner in every business in the country. It is in partnership with every man who has an income of over $2,000 a year, and the purpose of the Government should be to tax as little of the earnings of its working partners as is necessary.

My contention is where the tax is high the man who may be called upon to pay it will not work to earn it, and there is no law that can compel him to do so. I further contend that with a 25 per cent rate, in the long run, the Government will receive more income than it will from a 50 per cent rate, because it will not induce the people who earn the money to pay the tax to slack up when they reach a certain stage of income. As it is to-day, after men who are in the industries of the country reach a certain stage of earning they stop. Why do they stop? Because they find it is no use for them to continue, for they will receive no part of the increased earnings. You may say that that is not patriotic. What is patriotism? Why did we make a high rate of surtax in the first instance? We made it because we were in the war and because they who were doing the work were charging excessive prices for the work that they did.

We knew there was no means by which we could compel them to do the work at a reasonable rate, and the only way we could level up was to take away from them in taxation the money they earned in excess of what they ought to receive. But that time is passed. We are here now to stabilize the Nation, to encourage everybody in the life of the Nation to do what is necessary to be done to create employment, to develop industry, to extend new enterprises. When you fix a 50 per cent tax rate you create stagnation, you create high prices, you keep the living costs higher than they ought to be, and our purpose now should be to bring levels down instead of keeping them up. I hope this House will have wisdom enough when the vote is taken to decide to adopt the House rate of 32 per cent in surtaxes instead of 50 per cent, as provided in the Senate bill.

One more thing we must remember, and that is this: The President of the United States and the Republican Party are committed to a reduction of taxation. The President has said that he favors a 32 per cent rate. He is the head of the Government, the head of our party, and do not let the Democrats divert you from the main purpose. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], if I were permitted to use superlatives, might be said to be the most eloquent man and the most convincing speaker in this body. The 10-minute speech which he delivered a few moments ago in favor of this resolution was very eloquent and very convincing, but he was inaccurate in his statement in respect to the action of the Senate. The gentleman from Nebraska stated that the Senate, when the bill was passed, did not disagree, but merely asked for a conference, and that such course was an unusual one. I have referred to the 1917 and the 1918 tax bill debates, and I find that the following was the language used in 1918:

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees upon the part of the Senate.

The 1917 action of the Senate was precisely the same. The action of the Senate with reference to the pending measure was as follows:

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and request a conference with the House.

Of course, there was nothing in the Senate for the Senate to disagree to, because it was a House bill and the Senate has put on these amendments and asked for a conference.

I hope that this House will not strike the blow at the industries of this country which will be struck if we vote for a 58 per cent surtax. There is no use disguising the fact that under the present system in this country the new industries that are opened up, the additions that are made to the present industries, depend upon the flow of capital into those industries, and there is no use disguising the fact that when we put a surtax of 58 per cent upon a great bulk of the income of this country it means that capital will not flow into those industries, but to a large extent will flow into tax-exempt securities. This will be the greatest blow to opening up industries and providing employment which can be imagined.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No; I can not yield. It is said on this floor that the tax-exempt securities are exhausted, and hence no more money will flow into those securities. Such a fallacy of argument! When we open this great flood of money into the tax-exempt securities, we issue a continuing invitation to the municipalities of the country to keep issuing more securities, piling up greater burdens of taxes on the different localities, and, finding a ready market in the situation we are perpetuating, new securities will be issued from time to time. This will mean that new industries—and I am speaking now of private industries—under private management will be crippled in exactly the extent to which these municipalities issue new bonds.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. No. It is stated by some one that we ought to control this question of tax-free securities by legislation taxing them. That can not be done. The Constitution of the United States does not permit us to tax municipal securities. It is contended by my friend from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], who wanted me to yield—I suppose to make that point—that municipal securities sold in other States are sometimes taxable. To be sure that is true, but the men of wealth in Pennsylvania who have money to invest can invest in Philadelphia securities, the men in Illinois who have wealth to invest can invest in Chicago securities, and the men in New York can invest in New York securities, and so on in all our municipalities. In our vote to-day let us lend our aid to the reconstruction and rehabilitation of our country.

Mr. LITTLE. That was not the question that I was going to ask.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman has something else on his mind, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LITTLE. I want to ask the gentleman if the interest rate has not fallen in the last few weeks. Is money cheaper or dearer?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Money is cheaper.

Mr. LITTLE. Then, what are you kicking about?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, that has about as much to do with this question as the question in respect to municipal securities which the gentleman raised.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER].

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I regret exceedingly that I can not follow the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. FORDNEY] in the matter now before the House. I regret even more that I can not follow that distinguished leader, not only of the Republican Party, but the Chief Executive of this great Nation, whose Capital to-day, because of him and because of the great events that are transpiring here, is the capital of the world. However much my desire personally might be to accede to the request of the President, and I would like to do so, did my conscientious convictions permit, I, like the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], believe that my first duty is to my constituents. As he has very aptly put it, there is no man in Washington, unless he be some constituent temporarily here, who is to any great extent responsible for the election of any Member in this House; those whom we serve and to whom we owe our highest allegiance are the folks back home in the far-flung constituencies throughout the Nation. After all, is it not possible that our President, in this instance at least, may have been misadvised? I for one feel that he has, and our Republican Senate evidently thinks so.

In the last analysis we must go back to those same constituents less than a year and a half hence and receive a new commission. Perhaps in my district, which happens to be one of the most salubrious in climate, as well as one of the most important financially and industrially speaking in the United States, there is as much concentrated wealth as in any other district in the United States. There are approximately 1,100 men in the country, so I am reliably informed, affected by this increase of from 32 per cent to 50 per cent. That would mean an average of less than three men in each congressional district in the United States. Upon information received from California recently I am informed that there are at least a dozen people living in my district who have incomes in excess of $200,000 per year. I have taken it upon myself to get the pulse of my district, and I want to assure you that the people of wealth of southern California, the men and women who live in my district, are not adverse in any sense whatever to bearing their just burden of taxation, and I am intensely proud of their attitude in this matter. [Applause.] Great stress has been laid upon the increase from 32 to 50 per cent. No Member has taken the opportunity, however, to observe that the 50 per cent adopted by a Republican Senate is a ratio decrease of 25 per cent from the 65 per cent now prevailing. The difference in revenue, in round numbers, between the 40 per cent proposed by Mr. FORDNEY and the 50 per cent adopted by the Senate, I am further informed would amount to about $40,000,000 per year, which is 1 per cent of the $4,000,000,000 which this country must raise in order to meet its current expenditures. There is no question in my mind of the equity of the principle that men should pay in proportion to their ability. All income from whatever source derived is derived in the last analysis from the body politic, and if this money does not come from one source, it must come from another within that body. Due to unusual conditions which prevailed as an incident of our participation in the Great War, it was in the very nature of things that certain gentlemen participating as they did in patriotic efforts along industrial lines in that war should have incidentally created great fortunes. Those men, I believe if it were possible to take a poll of their true sentiments, are willing to pay their just burden of taxation. Perhaps the President might have been urged by our good and genial friend Mr. FORDNEY, and I know whereof I speak, to a point where a refusal to accede to his request would have been embarrassing.

I have no doubt that the President's interest was aroused by Mr. FORDNEY, but had he been as deeply interested in this matter as his belated letter, written, mind you, only yesterday afternoon at the urgent request of our beloved friend FORDNEY, might seem to indicate, he would also have brought pressure to bear at the other end of the Capitol, to wit, on the Senate, which is at least half of Congress. No, friends, our President does not do things by halves when he is deeply and vitally interested, and Mr. FORDNEY knows it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield me one minute more?

Mr. FREAR. I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, we are placed in the peculiar position of forcing the Senate to recede on an amendment, thereby placing ourselves in a more reactionary or conservative position than the Senate itself. Shades of the past rise to counsel caution. This is not the first time that such a situation has arisen in this House. Many of you will recall when the upper body put in $50 a month in the Sweet bill for the totally helpless disabled men and that the House conferees forced the Senate to recede and put in $20 per month, a lesser amount; and I for one shall not impede progress any more now than I did then and place myself in the position of refusing to sustain the upper body whenever it shows a disposition toward liberalism and fair-mindedness. It is a rare opportunity to vote with the majority of my party in the Senate and at the same time to vote for the 50 per cent clause, which I feel the country desires, and I shall take great pleasure in doing so. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BURROUGHS].

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is a most difficult thing at any time to impose taxes sufficient to raise revenue amounting to the enormous sum of $4,000,000,000 necessary to run this Government for the next year, and probably for several years to come, and give general satisfaction to the people. It is a difficult proposition, I say, at the best; but it is our duty to do it as best we can. Now, I am one of those, Mr. Speaker, who believe that in the performance of this duty and in the performance of all duties incumbent upon us at this time, we should not lose sight of the fact for one minute that the public welfare requires, yes, demands of us, that we keep in view all the time the great and urgent necessity of a revival of the industries of the country now unhappily languishing and dormant everywhere. I am one of those, Mr. Speaker, who believe that whatever we do here there are some things that we should not do here. We certainly should not do anything that will tend to kill initiative and cripple industry, that will tend to discourage enterprise and thrift, so necessary to the revival of industry, that will tend inevitably to put a damper upon every form of industrial activity in the country. Now, Mr. Speaker, the imposition of a 58 per cent tax, for that is what this is, upon the larger incomes of this country in a time of peace will do exactly that thing. You are flying in the face of the law of diminishing returns. It can not be otherwise. Talk about the selfishness of capital in seeking tax-exempt securities, why, it is nothing but human nature; it is nothing more than any sane man would do. You have $15,000,000,000 of these tax-exempt securities, and there is no way under heaven that you can get rid of them or tax them without a constitutional amendment. Do you not suppose that people with large incomes are going to invest their money where they are going to get the best return for it? Is not that what everybody does? That is all this means. It is the only course that capital will ever take in the investment of its funds. And we must remember, too, as the gentleman from Ohio so well said, that we should face facts here. It is facts that we are interested in and not theory.

Now, the fact is that we have these $15,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities and more of them being issued every day. To urge these high rates—higher than those imposed by any other Government in the world—with the idea of obtaining a larger revenue from them, while this avenue of escape is left open, is to my mind little less than nonsense. It sounds to me like pure "bunk."

The fact is that the men with larger incomes are to-day investing in these securities instead of in productive enterprises, and the revenue of the Government is materially decreasing on that account. It is as certain as that two and two make four that these people will continue to do this very thing rather than take the risk of business losses when they know that in the event of success they must pay 58 per cent of their profits to the Federal Government for taxes. We face the fact that industry is languishing all over the country to-day. New enterprises are not being undertaken. Many industries long since established are shutting down or substantially curtailing production. From all sides we hear of the millions of unemployed.

Why, then, in the face of these facts do we continue in peace times a policy that can be justified only to meet the gravest exigencies of war? Do you not know that if there is to be a revival of industrial activity, if there is to be a stimulation of business and encouragement for people of means to embark in new enterprises, you must have the confidence and support of the very people you are striking at by continuing these huge war surtaxes?

Chief Justice Marshall once said:

The power to tax is the power to destroy.

Let us see to it that by the important action we take to-day we do not hamstring and cripple and destroy the industrial activity upon which the prosperity of the country so largely depends. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may extend their remarks on this resolution for five legislative days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that all Members may have leave to extend their remarks on the pending resolution for five legislative days. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I regret to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

(By unanimous consent Mr. J. M. NELSON, Mr. OSBORNE, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Mr. KELLER, Mr. STEENSON, and Mr. SCHALL were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] yields five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] said that for the first time in his observation the House in contrast with the Senate had become the conservative instead of the radical body. Much as I admire the gentleman from Nebraska, I beg leave to differ with him. For years past the tendency in the House has been to be conservative about all matters of expenditures, to be economical, to be careful, as contrasted with the position of the Senate. For years the House has been equally conservative in matters of taxation.

The gentleman from Nebraska says next that he believes we will not obtain as much revenue from 40 per cent as we will from 50 per cent. And in that the gentleman says that he differs with the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and with the President.

In war the safety of this Republic was the courage, the valor of those who represented us on the field of battle. In business the success of this great Republic depends not upon its accumulated wealth, not upon the amount of money which we have on hand to-day, not upon those who are rich as of this date, but its success and its glory and its progress depend upon the energy and the enterprise and the brains and the progressiveness of its business men, of its farmers, of its laborers, and of its mechanics. In the business world you can only have prosperity by inspiring confidence. You can only have confidence when you invite a man to expend his energies, by saying to him that he will have a reasonable part of that which he earns for himself. Otherwise there is wanting the incentive to endeavor.

Are you satisfied with present conditions? Are you satisfied with labor out of employment? Are you satisfied with the factory wheels stilled? Are you satisfied to go on as you are to-day?

The arguments of those who advocate 50 per cent are directed at extracting taxes from wealth which has accumulated. They are not directed toward increasing production, toward stimulating endeavor, toward resuming normal activity, and we say to the world that the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, we say to the world that the Republican leadership of the House, we say to the world that the great Executive, a Republican, at the other end of the Avenue, believe that by stimulating endeavor, believe that by holding out to the individual the belief that he can have a reasonable opportunity to save from that which he earns, we will stimulate business in the United States, we will resume normal conditions, we will enter upon a course of prosperity such as this Nation, the greatest in wealth of any nation in the world, has never before in its history witnessed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I come from a district which is mostly made up of men who have incomes that will not be affected by the surtax. I come from a district which has not for many years sent to this House a Republican Member, and upon my vote here, and perhaps upon this particular vote, may depend the retention or loss of my seat in this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I hear the applause on the Democratic side, and I understand it, because I recall that quite recently a Democratic gentleman put in a resolution to fire from the House all those of us who hold commissions as reserve officers in the Army. So I am not surprised. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Did not the returns of the last election indicate that the gentleman would not get back here?

Mr. HILL. No; Baltimore last week beat mostly prohibitionists.

I think the time has come for all gentlemen on this side of the House to follow the Republican President and stand by the Republican Party organization on such expert matters as revenue. [Applause.] I say—and I rise only for this purpose—that coming from a district that is not producing many rich men, and coming from a district from which I have been flooded by propaganda on behalf of those who favor tying up the hands of the conference committee, I rise against this resolution. The President of the United States, to whom the people of this Nation in no unmistakable terms gave the responsibility of guiding the Nation's financial policy, writes to the chairman of this committee and says:

Where there is so wide a difference in the judgment of the two Houses, I have thought it might be possible and wholly desirable to reach an equitable compromise, say a maximum surtax levy of 40 per cent. This would put the higher Federal tax on incomes at a total of 48 per cent, which would measurably meet the expectation of those who are, above all else, concerned with the return of hopeful investments of capital—

And so forth.

Baltimore and my district want a prompt resumption of business. We want to get rid of war-time taxes. The President should be supported in that position. And so, in spite of the fact that I have been deluged by ill-considered propaganda in favor of this resolution, I say to the Members of this House, and especially to the members of my own party, that the time has come for us to say whether we stand by the Republican President or whether we stand by the gentlemen on the other side of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this situation that confronts us to-day is not to our liking, I assure you, but I disclaim all responsibility for it. That can only rest upon those responsible for bringing the President into legislative contests. I find myself in the position of abrogating my better judgment or parting company with some of the men on my side. I may be wrong in my conclusions, but I am honestly wrong if I am, and so long as I see any proposition in such a way as to believe I am right, I say to you men that that is the side I am going to stand upon. [Applause.]

Now, just what is the situation? We have an income tax, a surtax, of 65 per cent on the statute books. If there were no income tax on the statute books, you could not muster 10 per cent of this House to write one of 25 per cent. But there is one of 65 per cent. And the leadership in my party have seen wise to reduce that 65 per cent by 50 per cent, or cut it more than half in two.

The reduction, as estimated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], will take off of the men with the income of over $200,000 the sum of $40,000,000 in taxes. Now, I want to ask you men who are trying to vote your convictions, I want to ask my colleague from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who, I understand, is going to close for the other side, where will you get your $40,000,000 which you are trying to remove from the big incomes? You are not cutting it out of the expenses of the Government. The actual cost of running this Government will be between $4,000,000,000 and $5,000,000,000 for the next decade, and your saving in the operations of the Government will not permit taking it off of a man with an income of over $200,000 without adding it on somewhere else. Where are you going to put it? You must have the money. You will either have to issue bonds to make up the deficit or you will collect the taxes. I am saying that you will collect the taxes, and you will collect them from the men with incomes under $200,000. If you want to go before the country with that kind of a proposition, you are welcome to do it. I say to you that there are not 10 men with an income of $200,000 in the thirteenth congressional district of Ohio, but there are 200,000 with incomes under that amount? Shall I represent the few or the masses? We have some of the biggest industries in the United States, and the argument which they are parading, that business will not run and is staggering to-day because eleven hundred men might have to pay 50 per cent of their income, is the biggest fallacy that was ever uttered on this floor. [Applause.] I say to you that will not open up business. Ninety-nine per cent of the business in Ohio—I can not speak for business in other States—but 99 per cent of the business in Ohio is corporate business, and corporate business is owned and controlled by men with incomes of less than $200,000. They will continue to operate, whether the few men with $200,000 incomes are taxed or not. However, if the man with the small income is compelled to bear the greater burden of taxation, then and then alone you will hamper prosperity and the return of the much desired condition of normalcy. Your plan leaves the tax of the average man as it is now and does not reduce them one cent, but does cut in half that of the man with an income of over $200,000. When the Republican Party pledged to reduce taxes I thought it meant to reduce the taxes of everyone and had no idea that it meant only those with incomes over $200,000. I want to keep my pledge to the people of my district and reduce the taxes of all the people in the same ratio.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask the gentleman if his argument would lead one to the conclusion that business men under this bill will have to incorporate in order to protect themselves from exorbitant individual rates?

Mr. BEGG. I will answer the gentleman's question and say no. Here is the proposition of the gentleman: This is an individual income tax. This is not a corporate tax; and as to the cry about the man who is taxed 50 per cent of his income—God bless you, what if he is—he is only taxed as others are. Who contracted the debt? The debt was contracted in this country by the whole people, and the debt was a mortgage on the entire wealth of the Nation, and if a man gets a private income of $200,000 he has the bigger claim to the wealth, and he ought to pay a bigger tax until the debt is cut down. [Applause.] The other side of this proposition says to the wealthy man, "Because you do not want to pay the tax, we will cut it out so that you will not have to pay it."

Then the argument is made that the money will go into tax-free securities in case this high rate of surtax is imposed. Is there a man in the United States to-day who will not still invest his money to-morrow if you tax him 40 per cent in tax-free securities. It is against every economic principle that ever was laid down; it is an idea that would not be entertained by any man who ever studied economics at all.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I would like to call your attention to the fact that every time $100,000 of bonds is bought by some one it is sold by some one else. The money has to go somewhere. It can not go into the air.

Mr. BEGG. Who issues tax-free securities? The cities, the counties, the States. Where does the money go? How can you make improvements in your municipalities if somebody does not buy them? If anybody is going to buy them, it is going to be either the man with $200,000 or else 20 men with $10,000 each. What is the difference, so far as industry is concerned? The issue of a tax-exempt security is here, and will be here until we pass some kind of a law subjecting those securities to taxation. So far as I am concerned, there is no argument in that at all. Wealth will go where the best return can be obtained, and if we pass this law and put a 50 per cent tax on incomes of over $200,000, you gentlemen who say it will go to tax-exempt securities are wrong. I say to you that when you come to Ohio for the purpose of buying tax-free securities you will find we will offer a lower rate of interest to you, and then our whole people will profit, because they do not have to raise so much tax to pay on your bonds that you bought as tax exempt. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I want to answer the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. I want to say that I respect his judgment in most things. The gentleman from Michigan made the flat statement on the floor of the House that if we did not cut the tax rate from 50 to 40 the effect would be to raise the cost of living. I ask you again what will be the effect on the prosperity of the Nation—

Mr. FORDNEY. I made no such statement.

Mr. BEGG. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon. I understood that somebody said that on the floor. I will retract my reference to the gentleman. I do not want to do anybody an injustice, but I think I am correct in saying that the Record to-morrow will show the statement of somebody who spoke on this bill to the effect that if we do not take the course prescribed it will increase the cost of living.

I want to ask you what will be the best for the interests of this country—leave a few men getting $200,000 income and over to go scot-free of the surtax and putting the tax burdens on the little fellows, or levy the tax necessary to pay the debt and cost of government on the wealth as it is found. By the Senate bill those men who are getting $200,000 or over are given a reduction bigger than any other class of taxpayers, but all get some consideration, while our leaders would have us believe we should grant all the relief to the real big and real small incomes, with no relief to the great army of middle class. Our bill cuts it off of the big fellow and takes a little less off from the small fellow. [Applause.] God knows the great army of people in this country to-day who are responsible for the prosperity of the Nation belong in the great middle class. [Applause.] They are not the little taxpayers nor the big taxpayers, but the middle class of people. You men who advocate this proposition are honest and as sincere as we are, but you are blind to the fact because you know not how to sympathize with a medium income man, for you do not know what it means to scratch like the devil for $10,000 a year. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I have great regard for the President of the United States. I think he is going down in history as one of the great men, as one of the great Presidents of the United States. [Applause.] But I can not follow him in this matter. I believe that the President's advisers have given him bad advice in this matter when he asked us to discard the Senate rates. [Applause.] I say he is a great man but we have the authority of the Book of Job that "Great men are not always wise." The Republican Party has promised the people of the United States a reduction in taxation. How are we giving them that reduction? What do these surtax rates mean? How can anyone in the next primaries or the next election justify this gross discrimination that is being made between men in different stations in life by the rate of taxation that we are imposing?

I only have the figures for 32 per cent, the House bill rate, and the 50 per cent, the Senate bill. You can make your own figures as to the 40 per cent. What does this surtax rate in the House bill mean? It means that the man with an income of $10,000 a year is saved the sum of $50 a year in taxation. The man with an income of $20,000 a year on his surtaxes saves $50. The man with an income of $50,000 saves $10. Now, an effort will be made to persuade the man with an income of $10,000, $20,000, or $50,000, or even $75,000, that the modification you propose making is going to bring him some substantial relief, some surcease, but that is all the relief he gets. Ten thousand dollars income—$50; $50,000 income the relief is $10. An income of $75,000 pays $170 less surtax. But when you get to the man with an income of $100,000 his saving is $2,730. When you get to the man with the income of $1,000,000 a year he is saving under this proposition of 32 per cent $274,730. How can you justify such discrimination? There is no material reduction in taxes by the House surtax rates till you reach an income of $100,000 per annum, when the reduction is $2,730; for $150,000 income the reduction is $12,730; for $200,000 income the reduction is $22,730; from this point on the reduction is startling, being $274,730 for $1,000,000 and $1,594,730 for a $5,000,000 income. You can not defend it on the hustings, you can not do it in the next primaries, nor can you do it in the coming November. It is not justifiable. Your constituents will not uphold you in this discrimination. There are 12,000 men in the United States who have an income or return over $66,000 per annum. When the $10,000 man or $20,000 man and the man with an income of $50,000 and even $75,000 compares the gross discrimination with which you have treated him and the favoritism with which you have treated the men with incomes of $1,000,000 a year they will rise up in their indignation and crush you. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. FREAR. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. SINNOTT. Oh, they tell us that this surplus money, these earnings of the man with a big income like $1,000,000 a year, is being poured into nontaxable securities. Did you ever try to find out from the Treasury Department in the last six months what has been the increase over prior years in the purchase of nontaxable securities by men having an income of $66,000 and over? If you have, you have received no information. They have had six months to produce these statistics—six months to go over 12,000 returns. There is a presumption of law—I do not wish to invoke it here—that he who suppresses evidence suppresses it because it is against him. Senators and Representatives have written to the Treasury Department for this information, and it has not been forthcoming.

Mr. CLARKE of New York rose.

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not yield. Senators and Representatives several months ago and several weeks ago have written for this data. I myself last Saturday asked for this information, and have had no reply from the Treasury Department. I feel that there is very little to that argument.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. I can not yield; I have not the time.

Mr. GARNER. I will yield the gentleman one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. GARNER. I yield the gentleman one minute to answer my question.

Mr. SINNOTT. I will yield.

Mr. GARNER. There is a provision in this bill inserted by the Senate requiring the taxpayer to give the information that the gentleman desires to the Treasury Department, but it will not be in the law when it comes to the President. These gentlemen will cut it out. They do not propose to give you this information now or henceforth.

Mr. SINNOTT. It should be written into the law so that we may have the necessary information hereafter, so that Members of Congress, Members of the House and the Senate may obtain the necessary information to discuss intelligently that feature of an important measure of this kind. [Applause.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, how much more time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Four minutes.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] not being present, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, of course I do not expect to be able to contribute any new thought in this debate. I have listened to practically all of the debate to-day, and I have to say in frankness, and with all possible respect to gentlemen who have spoken, that the only Member who has added to the sum total of human knowledge on this proposition, so far as I have observed, is the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL], provided, of course, he was accurate in his assertion. He gravely informed the House that it was the duty of the House to follow the lead of the President of the United States in this matter, because by a very decided majority he had been elected President. Up until the gentleman from Maryland made that statement, I had all of my life labored under the delusion that in view of the utterances of the Constitution of the United States all revenue measures should originate in the House of Representatives; the primary responsibility rested here. Of course, I shall not undertake to dispute the eminent authority which has led us into a new line of thought relative to proper governmental activity. [Laughter.]

But while I am not able to say anything new, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is not amiss to repeat some of the thoughts that have been expressed before, here and elsewhere. For instance, when really boiled down to its last analysis in the arguments made against this resolution and against the imposition of the 50 per cent tax, what has any gentleman said, except the gentleman from Maryland, beside the fact that it should not be imposed because those upon whom it is to be imposed do not want to pay it and will not pay it if they can avoid it. If there has been any other thought in principle suggested as a reason why this should not be imposed, I confess it has escaped my attention.

Oh, but it is said that money will be invested where the best profit is offered. Of course. And so they say that instead of engaging in business those who have money will invest in tax-exempt securities, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], among others, urged that as a matter of assuring employment—of course that was not an argument of principle, but an argument of expediency—we ought not to impose this tax. Let us analyze that for a moment. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] pointed out, succinctly and clearly, where do these tax-exempt securities come from? They come from the States, from the municipalities, from the counties. My own county has issued bonds, tax exempt, for the purpose of constructing highways. Not very long since, when the convention on unemployment was meeting here in the city, it was urged that we promptly pass a highway bill appropriating $75,000,000, and it was stated that the passage of the bill would assure employment to 300,000 people in the opening up of the highway work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not believe that the gentlemen who own the factories, from which they are making these large sums, those engaged in industry, are going to close down industries, sell their factories, and invest their money in these county and municipal and State bonds. Those are the people who give employment—those engaged in industry, in manufacturing, in the mercantile business, in all the activities of our business life. The money which is invested in tax-exempt securities is turned over and instantly goes to other sources, to other places, and with the proceeds of the sales of these tax-exempt securities men are given employment all over the United States. It is just as well to trace that matter out to its logical conclusion before we are swept off our feet by these statements that the passage of a 50 per cent tax as against a 65 per cent tax, which now exists, will result in industrial depression or a continuation of industrial depression.

It is said that there is not the same reason now for levying it as there was during the war. What is the nature of the obligations for which it is now being levied? To keep up the running expenses of the Government? Oh, no. If we could go back to prewar conditions, if we could have a budget amounting only to the budget before we entered the war, of course we could reduce these taxes. Probably in that event we could reduce some of the taxes that some of us who are in my class of brackets are paying. Are you going to excuse these other men from paying taxes simply because they do not want to? Then I would like to come in on that myself, because, to be perfectly frank with you, I shall tell you a thing that may surprise you, and that is that I do not myself enjoy paying the debts that I pay. This money is being collected to pay the debts which were engendered by the war. It is as much a war debt and it is as much the patriotic duty of men everywhere to meet it as it was at any hour while the battle flags were unfurled and while the swords were flashing.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is much disturbed because the President of the United States was considerate enough to give this Congress his views touching the very important matter now under consideration. The day was, under Democratic administration, when it was not a suggestion but a command that came from the White House, and you all obeyed it, every man of you, without regard to your individual opinions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], if he proved anything, proved too much, because, if his argument proved anything at all, it proved that there should not be any reduction of the present surtax. He knows enough about economics to know and to say that if we did not have a high surtax now there would not be 10 votes here for a maximum surtax of 25 per cent, and yet he now favors a maximum of 50. At the outbreak of the war the highest surtax was 13 per cent, and that applied only to incomes above a million. At that time the surtax on a $200,000 income, where the 50 per cent surtax of the Senate amendment attaches, was only 7 per cent. In 1917 gentlemen voted for only a 7 per cent tax on great wealth. They were not then, it seems, in fear of the soap-box orators on the street corners. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Let us talk plainly. Gentlemen were in favor of a reduction of the surtaxes to 32 per cent maximum when the bill was before the House and until here and there and elsewhere they began to hear the cry, "Tax the rich, tax the rich, tax the rich." I want to tax the rich, but I want to know that what I am doing will tax the rich, and I refuse to be led by any cheap demagoguery into doing a thing which will not in the long run accomplish the purpose of securing large returns from large incomes, but will drive wealth out of productive into non-productive investment and reduce employment. There is not a man within the sound of my voice or anywhere else who has studied the economics of taxation but knows that in the running of the years you will get more money out of the rich with a surtax of 20 or 25 per cent than at a higher rate, but knows that when you get beyond about that rate you drive money out of productive industry into nonproductive investments and compel a division of estates in trusts during men's lives, while they still hold full control over them. With a lower surtax men will pay it rather than change their business arrangements; but when the surtax reaches a point where it can not be passed on to the public and still yield a profit it becomes a question of tax-free securities, some sort of paper division of fortunes, or the suspension of business. In any event, under a high surtax no earnings of large fortunes will be invested in new enterprises; the risk is too great. If the investor loses, the loss is his. If he make ever so small a return, the Government takes the most of it.

In the long run you do not tax the rich with a 50 per cent surtax; you throw the burden of the tax that you claim to place on the rich on the poor. A certain great fortune is invested in the making of automobiles. That great fortune will continue in business and pay the surtax, provided it can sell those machines for enough money to pay the surtax and at the same time make as much as could be made on tax-free securities. In that case who pays the surtax? The man who buys the jitney, of course. But when the high surtax can not be passed on, that fortune will be divided and miss all the surtaxes, or a large part of it will be invested in tax-free securities. All of you know it. You would do it yourself. It is exactly what anyone would do. You certainly would not, no sane man would go on continually contributing 58 per cent of his earnings to the Government, unless he has a scheme whereby he can pass the tax on to the people. If he can not do that, he will so change or transform his business arrangements as to avoid it, and when he does so, the Treasury will lose all surtaxes on such an income that otherwise would pay a reasonable surtax. If Mr. Automobile Maker can make about 15 per cent on his automobiles, he can afford to pay the surtax which he has passed on to the purchaser, but if he can not, then his business will be so arranged that it does not pay the high surtax. No man will do business for fun or under conditions requiring him to take all losses and pay into the Treasury 58 per cent of his gains.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Not now, my time is short. The question now before us is one of sound taxation economics. The question is how shall we get large fortunes to pay the most toward the war debt and aid most in starting the wheels of industry? We will get them to pay the most by holding the surtax at a point where a man can pay it and have some profit remaining. When the surtax reaches a point where men can not continue in business and make some profit they will go out of productive business, men will not invest their money in new industries greatly needed, take all the chances of loss and pay in taxes half or more of all the gains, but will invest in tax-free securities not only of the States, counties, and municipalities but of the Government. Five billion dollars of Victory notes are tax free. Are men to be criticized because they put their money in them at a time when the Treasury was begging for investment in Victory notes to meet the awful cost of war? We have just sold $100,000,000 worth of Federal farm loan bonds based on farms in the great Central West. Are men to be criticized because they invested in those farm loan tax-free bonds or shall invest in like bonds in the future? They will invest in them just as long as they are available.

It may be that the easy way, before some constituencies, will be to say, "Oh, yes; I voted for the highest tax on the rich proposed by anybody." I realize that there may be demagogues on the street corners assailing you if you do not. I remember a time here when the Democratic side tried to stampede our side because we only put a 10 per cent tax on diamonds, and they said we laid a higher tax on woolen socks and shrouds; everybody knew, including the men who were engaged in that demagoguery, that it had been demonstrated that the largest tax return on diamonds could be secured by a tax of not over 10 per cent. Mr. Speaker, if we want to keep our platform and campaign pledges—not only the Republicans but the Democrats—if we want to do the sound, sane, sensible thing that will in the end give us the greatest tax income from large fortunes, that will restore industries and provide employment, that will meet the approval eventually of all right-thinking people, if we want to stand before the country and the people as those of sound views of the public interest and possessed of the courage of our convictions, we will vote against the Senate amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I understand that we have 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan has 10 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Texas has 28 minutes remaining.

Mr. GARNER. I understand the gentleman has only one more speech.

Mr. FORDNEY. Unless he yields one or two minutes of the 10 minutes.

Mr. GARNER. Very well, if he is going to use it in the closing argument.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 28 minutes.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, before I begin speaking on the pending resolution I want to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, slightly more than a week ago this revenue bill was sent over from the Senate, after having passed that honorable body, and a conference was asked for. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] requested that unanimous consent be given for the bill to go to conference and that conferees be appointed. This was agreed to; whereupon the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] moved to instruct the conferees to agree to Senate amendment No. 122. This motion was resisted by certain of the Republican leaders, because they hoped by postponing an agreement they might be able to bring influence to bear which would defeat the Senate amendment and substitute a compromise. We Democrats knew their strategy, and did not hesitate to say at the time that the sole object in refusing to agree to the Garrett motion to instruct the conferees was to give those interested in defeating the Senate amendment and substituting a lower rate an opportunity to get in their work. You gentlemen who were here when we debated the Garrett motion will bear me out in the assertion that I made the statement at that time that every interested party in the United States that thought he had influence would get busy and exercise it in the direction of having a compromise agreement effected which would fix a lower rate than 50 per cent.

I do not know what influences were brought to bear upon you, but sufficient to say, these influences are bearing fruit in the effort to fix a compromise at the figure of 40 per cent. To cap the climax of all these influences to-day we have a letter read from the President, and may I say in passing I do not now and never have indorsed efforts of the Chief Executive to influence the Congress except by sending a message in the regular way to be read in open session. [Applause.] I know President Wilson on some occasions used the method of letter writing, and I condemned it then and I condemn it now. The way for the President of the United States to communicate his views to Congress, under the Constitution, is either from the Speaker's platform in person or by a message read in the regular way in open session. He should not attempt to do it in any other way. But no one will deny that a letter from the President is a persuasive argument, persuasive to you Republicans, of course, for two reasons; first, you belong to the Republican organization and you are interested in its success and the leaders of the Republican Party must be held responsible for its action, whether good or bad. You can shun here and there your responsibility. But as a whole the head of a party must be held responsible for its action. In the second place, some of you Republicans are interested in the distribution of patronage, and that is a factor which will not altogether be overlooked in considering the President's letter. We are not interested in that on this side, but you are. Gentlemen, no such influences ought to operate in this legislative body. This House of Representatives is more directly responsible to the American people than even the President. The Executive is elected every four years; the Senate every six years. This House must go back every two years and get a new commission from the people. Therefore it is their most direct, responsive pulse. I protest, and I believe in your conscience most of you protest, even though you indorse the compromise suggested in the President's letter, that he should in this manner undertake to influence the House of Representatives in considering an amendment put on a revenue bill in the Senate.

Why, gentlemen, while I am speaking about the prerogatives of the House of Representatives, let me call your attention to the parliamentary status of this particular amendment, and let me also remind you—and I have called attention to it more than once—that by the adoption of some of these strait-jacket special rules we by our own acts deprive ourselves of the freedom of legislation which is our rightful heritage under the Constitution. We did it on this revenue bill. When the bill was originally considered in the House it was under a special rule which was so rigid in its specifications as to virtually prevent consideration of any amendments except those offered by the Ways and Means Committee. But when the bill reached the Senate, where there was no such restrictive rule, a majority of the Senators refused to accept 32 per cent as the maximum surtax rate and made it 50 per cent. You would have adopted these higher surtaxes here, if you had been given a chance. But you were not, and after this long wait you now have your opportunity. Gentlemen, the Senate also adopted an amendment increasing the inheritance taxes on estates over and above $10,000,000. You would have done that also if you had had a chance. You never had a chance to vote for that. You were cut off by the rigid special rule. The Republican conferees even now do not intend to give you a chance to vote for that. They are afraid to do it. No. We can not even make a conference report, as is provided by the general rules of the House of Representatives, but have to have a special rule in order to consider a revenue bill in conference. There were 832 amendments put on in the Senate, some of them meritorious, some of them appealing to your heart and conscience, and which I have no doubt the House would be glad to accept, but no opportunity is afforded for you to consider them or vote on them, and you will never have an opportunity to vote on them. When the general conference report is brought back the gentleman from Ohio will know how to take care of the parliamentary situation. He will fix it so you will vote it up or down. You will have no chance to change it. You will go back to your constituents and say this was the best we could get. But it will not be the best you can get. You can vote down the conference report and can get, if you will, an opportunity to vote on each one of these amendments in this bill.

Mark the prediction, when we come back from conference on this bill, if the House adopts the conference report we will have the House receding on a revenue bill rewritten by the Senate almost in its entirety, imposing over 800 amendments, and on 700 the House will recede and agree to the Senate amendments. Is that an example of the House of Representatives originating legislation on revenue matters as contemplated by the Constitution? Do you Republicans believe that procedure is a case of living up to the high duty which the fathers placed upon us when they wrote the Constitution? Under procedure of that kind we do not originate. There is very little in this bill now that we originated. The Senate originated most of it. You will continue to do this just so long, gentlemen, as you permit the leaders of your side to tell you that they will not permit you to exercise the right which your people thought they were giving you when they sent you to this Congress to act as their legislative representative.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did the gentleman vote to recede on all those 700 technical amendments?

Mr. GARNER. Why, Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman from Ohio would relate, if he will—and I will yield to him for such purpose—what occurred in conference with reference to this amendment relating to an increase of the inheritance tax and the gift amendment. I am willing to yield to him from my time so that he may tell us. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH, you are going to close this debate, and I ask you now, sir, to tell your colleagues on this side if the compromise rate of 40 per cent is accepted, do you intend making it apply, beginning at $66,000 or beginning at $84,000? Which? Do you intend to agree to the Senate reductions in surtaxes which were made in the lower brackets?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do you ask that question as to my individual attitude?

Mr. GARNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I shall favor it.

Mr. GARNER. Well, but will you vote, if necessary, with your Democratic colleagues in order to get it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I know that such a situation will never occur. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Oh, they always avoid it, gentlemen. I have never been with a conferee yet, when there were three, when, if you took one off privately and asked him to do a thing but what he always answered he could not do it because the other two wanted the other thing. Gentlemen, if you vote to concur in this amendment, and God knows I hope you will—if you put it in you will do, in my humble judgment—and I speak as truthfully as I ever spoke in my life—something which will make it harder for the Democratic Party to succeed in the next elections. I honestly believe, if I ever believed anything in my life, that if you adopt the 40 per cent and reject the Senate amendment of 50 per cent, it means a difference of 25 Democrats in our favor in the next congressional election. So, if I looked at this question from a partisan standpoint solely, I would be glad to see you commit the error. I would not be urging you now to agree to the Senate amendment. I call your attention to three gentlemen on the Republican side who have spoken and who scent the danger to their party in this vote. A gentleman who sits before me now said in the course of his remarks—and it was easy to say, for he was right—that you should vote for the higher Senate surtax. What did he say? He said it appealed to the conscience and good judgment of every American citizen.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. In just a moment.

Not only that, but the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] said on the floor of the House, "If I follow my President in this matter, I may commit hara-kiri." God knows the gentleman from Maryland would not anxiously commit hara-kiri, for he loves his position; but in order to follow his illustrious leader he is willing to sacrifice his political fortunes.

Mr. MONDELL. What I understand the gentleman from Texas is trying to do is to get us to take action that will defeat the Democratic Party. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. Oh, of course, the gentleman from Wyoming can not understand. The gentleman from Wyoming is a strong partisan and he can speak only from the partisan standpoint, whereas I would rather see my country prosper under a Republican administration than see the Democrats win under conditions which would be disastrous to the country. I want prosperity to prevail. I want to see American citizenship protected. But when you undertake to tell the people in the next campaign that when you came to revise the revenue law your purpose was to relieve them of the burden of taxation, the average taxpayer will rise in the audience and inquire, "In what way did you relieve me, Mr. MONDELL?" He will reply, "I relieved you indirectly by taking off the burdens from the rich. I did not reduce your taxes directly one dollar, it is true, but we reduced the taxation of the big fellows, of those living in the large centers of population. We reduced their taxes very materially, and as the result of their gain their money will go into the channels of trade and you will be prosperous and happy and everything will be doing well. Go ahead and pay your war taxes and stop grumbling about it. Do not you know these big fellows are the only people we promised to relieve?" [Laughter.]

Gentlemen, I was struck with certain statements in the President's letter, and I was also struck with the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] with reference to their party having made certain promises to the people. Who ever heard of the Republicans paying any considerable amount of attention to their campaign pledges? You Republicans promised to reduce taxes. How many have you reduced in this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Let me read a paragraph of what is in your party platform.

Mr. GARNER. Not now. I know when the truth stings it hurts, and the gentleman from Wyoming is "hurting."

Mr. MONDELL. I wanted to read an extract from the platform of the gentleman's party.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. GARNER. If I wanted to run against a Republican for the nomination and he had voted against this amendment, I would just take this law in my hand and I would go before the people and say, "What did you do to relieve the people of taxation? What did you do?" Then I would show your conception of who are the people? I would admit that you did relieve some people. But I would ask, "How many did you relieve?" Every man of any intelligence who heard me speak would know that he is paying many of the same taxes as he paid during the war.

I told you when I spoke in the opening of the discussion on this bill at the time it was originally before the House what the Democratic position was. We were in favor of repealing these taxes which are primarily war taxes. I am in favor of such repeal yet. Each one of these war taxes is in conference yet, but you could no more get the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] to agree to their repeal than you could take wings and fly. Possibly you could get the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] to agree to it—and, by the way, I am very thankful to our friend from Iowa for telling us that every man in the Iowa delegation will vote to concur in this amendment.

Mr. COLE of Iowa rose.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, I see my friend from Iowa, the great and only regenerated. I was amused when he told us what his platform was in his recent campaign. His platform was exactly what I said ours would be—that we would repeal these war taxes. We are going before the country next year on that issue and we will win the Congress on that platform. We are not only going to promise the people to repeal these war taxes, but we will do it when they commission us to the task.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I only wanted to make the point clear that there is one man from Iowa who is going to vote with the President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Oh, yes; there are all kinds of Republicans in Iowa, standpatters and progressives, radicals and conservatives. But the heart of the people out there is sound. I know it, and have great admiration for the people of the West. But when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COLE] votes against concurring in this Senate amendment he will not be voicing the conviction of his people. The people of the West are in favor of levying taxes upon those who are most able to pay. So are we of the South in favor of the same thing. And upon that issue the South and West stand firmly together.

I think the House ought to know what the conferees expect to do with reference to fixing the bracket where the higher surtax begins, in case this Senate amendment is not agreed to. I believe they ought to tell us. You will recall that I asked the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] about that, and he declined to tell us. In the absence of such information you are voting blindly upon this proposition. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and the gentleman from Michigan adopt $84,000 as the place where the 40 per cent surtax begins or will they adopt the $66,000? Get your bill and look at it. You have got $66,000 in the House bill as the place where the maximum surtax of 32 per cent begins, have you not? Eighty-four thousand dollars in the Senate bill is the place where the 40 per cent surtax begins.

Which one are you going to adopt? If I were a Republican and the conferees refused to tell me what they were going to do I would say, "If you can not put confidence enough in me to tell me what you are going to do, then I will not put confidence enough in you to turn over the bill to you." [Applause.] I think the House has a right to demand such information. It is important and they should have it.

Now, are you going to give us the benefit of the Senate amendments reducing the surtaxes in the lower brackets? If so tell us. If you Republicans give these gentlemen a vote of confidence and send them back to conference without agreeing to this Senate amendment they will stand for the House provision making the higher surtaxes start at $66,000, and will make the rate 40 per cent instead of 32 per cent, as now written in the House bill.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other things in this bill to which we should direct attention in connection with this vote, but time will not admit. How many of you gentlemen when you cast your vote against the adoption of the Senate amendment realize what an awkward predicament you are getting into? Here is a situation where the House of Representatives deliberately gagged itself through the influence of the Republican leaders and refused to consider the bill with a view to perfecting it by amendment, but sent it to another body, the Senate, where they did have that right and privilege and exercised it very freely, and then it was sent to conference where there was not a single Senate Republican conferee willing to make any fight for these important amendments. In other words, you have a Senate amendment of admitted great importance, agreed to by the Senate in open session, sent to conference, and all three of the Senate conferees on the Republican side declaring, "My God, I wouldn't agree to this Senate amendment for anything on the face of the earth." [Laughter.] Who ever heard of a parliamentary situation like that before? It shows the Senate rank and file put one over on the old-time leaders, which is proving a bitter and unwelcome dose. The only way under our procedure, now that the bill is in conference, that we can express our opinion and make it heard is the one that we have before us to-day. Do you want the Senate amendment or something in between? Do you want a compromise, as the President has suggested? Do you want eighty-four thousand or sixty-six thousand as the bracket where the higher surtax begins? I tell you how to answer these questions. Vote to concur in the Senate amendment and if that motion is adopted then the matter is at an end so far as this provision is concerned.

I will give the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] leave to answer in my time and to tell his Republican colleagues if he intends to agree to the increases in the inheritance taxes which were provided for by Senate amendments. I will leave it to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]. I can not get an answer. They are eloquent by their silence. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] leaves the Hall because he doubtless also does not care to answer. Are you going to agree to the gift amendment put in by the Senate on a record vote? Is the gentleman from Iowa going to agree to it? I still get no answer.

Gentlemen will see how dangerous it is to turn over an important bill like this in which the conferees are not in sympathy with amendments which represent the views of a majority in both the House and the Senate. I tell you that I would have an expression from these conferees or they would get an expression of direct instruction from me.

There is no politics in this. The gentleman from Wyoming tries to make it a political matter to-day. He can not make it a political matter, and you will not be able to make it so in your district, except it may be bad politics to some of you personally if you follow the blind leadership of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I hope, gentlemen, that you will instruct us to agree to this inheritance-tax amendment and this gift amendment, because if you do not do you know what is going to happen? Three Republican Senators are going to throw up their hands and say, "To hades with it; write the bill yourself; you have already ruined it." [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, in the very few moments that I have at my command I can attempt nothing more than to merely lay before you the exact question that confronts us. I am not going to rant or roar or exhibit my bleeding heart for the plain people as has the gentleman from Texas who just preceded me. The gentleman has but one object in view. He is an adept at muddying the waters in order to attempt, as he always does, to drive a wedge which shall separate the cohesive majority on this side of the House. [Applause.] We have had no more, we will have no more vital problem to pass upon than the one that faces us now, and I sincerely hope that we are going to meet it with regard less to what we may regard as political expediency than for the broad general interest of the great American Nation. [Applause.]

Of this fact, gentlemen, you may be well assured, if you vote to sustain a tax as high as 58 per cent, the rehabilitation of industry in this country, the prosperity for which we all hope, will not come. It is all very well to say that wealth ought to pay its full share of the upkeep of the Government, and with that proposition I fully agree, but we are not dealing with wealth as an abstract proposition now. We are dealing with human nature, and it is not human nature for a man to pay to the Government more than half of his income in time of peace when he can avoid it, and avoid it legitimately. There is no law, there can be no law, which will deprive an American citizen of the right to invest his money in any direction that he sees fit. He may do with his own as he pleases.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. Would there not be the same reluctance to pay a quarter of his income as there would be to pay one-half?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the gentleman could answer that better than I could, his income being much larger than mine.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, I must challenge that statement. I am sorry that the soundness of the gentleman's whole argument is impeached by the grave misapprehension of facts which his answer betrays.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] a few moments ago said that the enormous amount of money we have to raise every year was for the payment of a sacred debt. In time of war we were all willing to give all of our income, if necessary, to pay that debt; but to-day, in time of peace, it is one thing to pay the legitimate debt that we owe and it is quite another thing to cheerfully pay the amount that was piled up in reckless waste and graft during the last administration. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It is said that wealth should be taxed in proportion to its ability to pay. Of course, it should; but if you take more than 73 per cent, as in the present law, or 58 per cent, as provided in this resolution, you are offering a premium to wealth to seek investment in tax-exempt securities and hence escape taxation altogether.

After all, wealth is largely a matter of relativity. A man who has at the end of every year a substantial portion of his income to invest is in the true sense a richer man than he who spends his entire income, even though that income be greater, and it is a matter of concern to the public how surplus income is invested, whether it be great or small.

The average American who has every year a substantial amount of money to invest, if he is a man of any energy or enterprise, would far rather put his money into something which, while it might involve some risk, will produce some substantial gain if successful, than put it somewhere where the risk is slight but the return correspondingly small. But if you compel him to turn over more than half of his income, if successful, to the Government, in nine cases out of ten he will adopt the latter alternative and be content with a small per cent and no taxes to pay. The great need in this country to-day is to have large amounts of capital invested in productive enterprise, which will give employment to labor and hence stimulate the demand for farm products. As a matter of fact, it is not wealth that you are punishing with the present high taxes or would be punishing under taxes so high as those contemplated by this resolution, you are punishing millions of laboring men out of employment and farmers who lack a profitable market for their produce. [Applause on the Republican side.]

A reduction of the higher surtaxes from 73 to 58 per cent is not sufficient, I am absolutely certain, to cause a diversion of capital from nontaxable securities to active enterprise, and unless capital shall seek investment in active enterprise we can not hope for a business revival, we can not hope for a decrease in the number of unemployed, we can not hope for a profitable market for farm products. You are killing the goose that lays the golden eggs, or perhaps it would be more correct to say that you are dosing him with a prescription which prevents the golden eggs from materializing.

I voted for the taxes in the present law. I would vote for them again in time of national crisis. But peace is one thing and war is another, and human nature is not the same in peace as it is in war. No nation on earth has ever taxed incomes as high as we are taxing them. No nation can tax incomes more than 50 per cent and expect those taxes to be collected. I wish that we could constitutionally tax the income received from State, county, and municipal bonds, but we can not, and even then wealth would find some other means to avoid these enormous taxes.

It is a plain condition and not a theory that confronts us. It is idle to speculate on what wealth ought to do. We have got to face the fact of what it does do and does legitimately, and what this resolution proposes is not the way to meet the situation. I fully realize that gentlemen on this side of the aisle who have voted to sustain the House provision of 40 per cent are embarrassed by the fact that the Senate has made provision for 58 per cent, and for the very reason that I am certain that a majority of the Senate believe in the House provision I think that the yielding to the demand of a few determined men was the less excusable. I sincerely hope that the House will stand by itself and not reverse its former action, or at least will permit your conferees to make the best bargain they can.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If we take into consideration the deflation in the value of the dollar which existed during the war, is it not a fact that the rates carried in the present Senate amendment will be higher than were the war rates?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Unquestionably they would be.

I am authorized to say that the Senate conferees will accept a modification of their original provision to the extent of a maximum surtax of 40 per cent and that the bill can be adopted unquestionably in that form. Hence, I urge you to defeat this resolution and thereby permit the passage of a bill which will be a real reduction of taxation. Which will thereby permit the speedy resumption of active business enterprise and restore that prosperity which the country is praying for and which will surely come if you will only give it a fighting chance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 201, nays 173, answered "present" 1, and not voting 57, as follows:

YEAS—201.

Almon	Boies	Carew	Cullen
Anderson	Bowling	Chalmers	Curry
Andrews, Nebr.	Box	Christopherson	Davis, Minn.
Anthony	Brennan	Clague	Davis, Tenn.
Aswell	Briggs	Clark, Fla.	Denison
Bankhead	Brinson	Classon	Dickinson
Barbour	Brooks, Ill.	Cockran	Dominick
Barkley	Browne, Wis.	Cole, Ohio	Doughton
Beck	Buchanan	Collier	Dowell
Begg	Bulwinkle	Collins	Drewry
Bennham	Burness	Colton	Driver
Bird	Byrnes, S. C.	Connally, Tex.	Dupré
Black	Byrnes, Tenn.	Cooper, Wis.	Evans
Bland, Va.	Campbell, Kans.	Cramton	Faust
Blanton	Cantrill	Crisp	Favrot

Fields	Kincheloe	O'Brien	Strong, Kans.
Fisher	Kindred	O'Connor	Summers, Wash.
Foster	King	Ogden	Summers, Tex.
Frear	Kinkaid	Oldfield	Swank
Fuller	Klecaska	Overstreet	Sweet
Fulmer	Kopp	Padgett	Swing
Funk	Kunz	Park, Ga.	Tague
Gallivan	Lampert	Parks, Ark.	Taylor, Ark.
Garner	Lanham	Parrish	Thomas
Garrett, Tenn.	Lankford	Patterson, Mo.	Thompson
Gensman	Larsen, Ga.	Quin	Tillman
Gilbert	Lawrence	Raker	Tincher
Goldsborough	Lazaro	Ramseyer	Towner
Graham, Ill.	Lea, Calif.	Rankin	Upshaw
Green, Iowa	Lee, Ga.	Rayburn	Vinson
Griffin	Lineberger	Reavis	Voigt
Hammer	Linthicum	Rhodes	Volstead
Hardy, Tex.	Little	Ricketts	Walters
Harrison	Logan	Riordan	Ward, N. C.
Haugen	London	Robison	Weaver
Hayden	Lowrey	Rouse	Wheeler
Hoch	McClintic	Sanders, Tex.	White, Kans.
Huddleston	McCormick	Sandlin	Williams
Hudspeth	McDuffie	Schall	Williamson
Hull	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Scott, Tenn.	Wilson
Humphreys	McSwain	Shaw	Wingo
Jacoway	Maloney	Sinclair	Wise
James	Martin	Sinnot	Woodruff
Jeffers, Ala.	Mead	Sisson	Woods, Va.
Johnson, Miss.	Montague	Smithwick	Wright
Johnson, S. Dak.	Moore, Ohio	Speaks	Yates
Jones, Tex.	Moore, Va.	Stafford	Young
Kearns	Morgan	Stagall	Zihlman
Keller	Murphy	Stedman
Kelly, Pa.	Nelson, A. P.	Steenerson
Ketcham	Nelson, J. M.	Stevenson

NAYS—173.

Andrew, Mass.	Ellis	Layton	Reece
Ansonge	Fairchild	Leatherwood	Reed, N. Y.
Appleby	Fairfield	Lee, N. Y.	Reed, W. Va.
Arentz	Fenn	Lehlbach	Riddick
Atkeson	Fish	Longworth	Robertson
Bacharach	Focht	Luce	Rodenberg
Beedy	Fordney	Luhning	Rogers
Bixler	Free	McArthur	Rose
Blakeney	French	McFadden	Rossdale
Bond	Frothingham	McKenzie	Ryan
Bowers	Gerner	McLaughlin, Mich.	Sanders, Ind.
Britten	Glynn	McLaughlin, Pa.	Sanders, N. Y.
Brooks, Pa.	Goodykoontz	McPherson	Scott, Mich.
Brown, Tenn.	Graham, Pa.	MacGregor	Shreve
Burdick	Greene, Mass.	Madden	Siegel
Burroughs	Greene, Vt.	Magee	Slemp
Burton	Griest	Mapes	Smith, Idaho
Butler	Hadley	Merritt	Smith, Mich.
Cable	Hardy, Colo.	Michener	Sproul
Campbell, Pa.	Hawes	Miller	Stephens
Cannon	Hawley	Mills	Strong, Pa.
Chandler, N. Y.	Hersey	Millsbaugh	Taylor, N. J.
Chandler, Okla.	Hickey	Mondell	Taylor, Tenn.
Chindblom	Hicks	Montoya	Temple
Clarke, N. Y.	Hill	Moore, Ill.	Timberlake
Clouse	Himes	Moore, Ind.	Tinkham
Codd	Hogan	Mudd	Treadway
Cole, Iowa	Houghton	Newton, Minn.	Underhill
Connell	Ireland	Newton, Mo.	Vaile
Connolly, Pa.	Johnson, Wash.	Norton	Vestal
Coughlin	Jones, Pa.	Olpp	Volk
Crago	Kahn	Osborne	Walsh
Crowther	Kelley, Mich.	Paige	Ward, N. Y.
Dale	Kendall	Parker, N. J.	Watson
Dallinger	Kennedy	Parker, N. Y.	Webster
Darrow	Kirkpatrick	Patterson, N. J.	White, Me.
Deal	Kissel	Perkins	Winslow
Dempsey	Kline, N. Y.	Petersen	Wood, Ind.
Dunbar	Kline, Pa.	Porter	Woodyard
Dunn	Knutson	Pringle	Wurzbach
Dyer	Kraus	Purnell	Wyant
Echois	Kreider	Radcliffe
Edmonds	Langley	Ransley
Elliott	Larson, Minn.	Reber

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Rosenbloom

NOT VOTING—57.

Ackerman	Garrett, Tex.	Mansfield	Shelton
Bell	Gorman	Michaelson	Snell
Bland, Ind.	Gould	Morin	Snyder
Brand	Hays	Mott	Stiness
Burke	Herrieck	Nolan	Stoll
Carter	Hukriede	Oliver	Sullivan
Cooper, Ohio	Husted	Perlman	Taylor, Colo.
Copley	Hutchinson	Peters	Ten Eyck
Drane	Jeffers, Nebr.	Pou	Tilson
Elston	Johnson, Ky.	Rainey, Ala.	Tyson
Fess	Kiess	Rainey, Ill.	Vare
Fitzgerald	Kitchin	Roach	Wason
Flood	Knight	Rucker
Freeman	Lyon	Sabath
Gahn	Mann	Sears

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. ROSENBLUM (for) with Mr. VARE (against).

Mr. BLAND of Indiana (for) with Mr. MORIN (against).

Mr. LYON (for) with Mr. HUTCHINSON (against).

Mr. SULLIVAN (for) with Mr. PETERS (against).

Mr. COOPER of Ohio (for) with Mr. ACKERMAN (against).

Mr. FLOOD (for) with Mr. FESS (against).

Mr. BELL (for) with Mr. SNYDER (against).
 Mr. KITCHIN (for) with Mr. MOTT (against).
 Mr. POU (for) with Mr. WASON (against).
 Mr. OLIVER (for) with Mr. FREEMAN (against).
 Mr. BRAND (for) with Mr. SNELL (against).

General pairs:

Mr. BURKE with Mr. BRAND.
 Mr. KIESS with Mr. CARTER.
 Mr. GORMAN with Mr. STOLL.
 Mr. HUKRIEDE with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.
 Mr. NOLAN with Mr. DRANE.
 Mr. SHELTON with Mr. TYSON.
 Mr. FITZGERALD with Mr. SEARS.
 Mr. HAYS with Mr. RAINEY of Alabama.
 Mr. ROACH with Mr. RUCKER.
 Mr. TILSON with Mr. GARRETT of Texas.
 Mr. BURKE with Mr. RAINEY of Illinois.
 Mr. GAHN with Mr. MANSFIELD.
 Mr. PERLMAN with Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.
 Mr. STINESS with Mr. TEN EYCK.
 Mr. KNIGHT with Mr. SABATH.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE], I voting "aye" and he voting "no," and I desire to withdraw my vote.

The name of Mr. ROSENBLOOM was called, and he answered "present."

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I am advised that on the recording of the vote the Clerk erroneously recorded the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DRANE] as having voted. If I am in error about that, I desire to be informed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida is not recorded as voting.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Hour of Meeting to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming rises to prefer a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I make that request inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on Rules intends to present in the morning a rule for the consideration of the so-called maternity bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAYTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object, Mr. Speaker.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, November 18, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

265. A letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives transmitting testimony, papers, and documents in the contested-election case of Gartenstein v. Sabath, fifth congressional district of the State of Illinois; to the Committee on Elections No. 3, and ordered to be printed. (H. Doc. No. 122.)

266. A message from the President of the United States transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations for the Department of State in the amount of $1,002,000 for the expenses of taking part in an international exposition to be held at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and for the maintenance of the international latitude observatory at Ukiah, Calif.; to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed. (H. Doc. No. 123.)

267. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy transmitting a tentative draft of a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept certain land at Rockaway Beach, Long Island, N. Y., for aviation and other naval purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9103) for the appointment of additional district judges for certain courts of the United States, to provide for annual conferences of certain judges of United States courts, to authorize the designation, assignment, and appointment of judges outside their districts, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 482), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 9184) to create a bureau of civil aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, to encourage and regulate the operation of civil aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURROUGHS: A bill (H. R. 9185) for the relief of the widow of John L. Vennard; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CONNELL: A bill (H. R. 9186) for the relief of William H. Thomas; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER: A bill (H. R. 9187) granting a pension to Louisa Firkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 9188) granting an increase of pension to Phoebe Laing; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINDRED: A bill (H. R. 9189) granting relief to James N. Cochran; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LEHLBACH: A bill (H. R. 9190) donating a captured German cannon or field gun and carriage to the Leslie J. Rummell Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Newark, N. J., for decorative purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 9191) granting an increase of pension to Florence Marquis; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9192) granting a pension to Anna R. Wright; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OGDEN: A bill (H. R. 9193) granting a pension to Eliza Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TINCHER: A bill (H. R. 9194) granting a pension to Eliza A. McClellan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEAVER: A bill (H. R. 9195) granting an increase of pension to John P. Stewart; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE of Maine: A bill (H. R. 9196) granting a pension to Luke Woodard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WURZBACH: A bill (H. R. 9197) for the relief of Margaret C. Lacks; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEWTON of Missouri: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 224) to reimburse Susan Sanders for expenses and services rendered in behalf of the Eastern, Emigrant, and Western Cherokees by blood; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

3074. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of members of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of Georgetown, S. C., urging the passage of the Dyer antilynching bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3075. Also (by request), resolution adopted by the American Legion in third annual convention assembled at Kansas City, this year, urging immediate action on S. 2448, creating bureau of civilian aeronautics in the Department of Commerce to encourage and regulate the operation of civilian aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3076. By Mr. APPLEBY: Papers in support of House bill 9139, granting a pension to Joseph S. Hetherington; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

3077. Also, resolutions adopted by Twin Light Council, No. 51, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of Highland, N. J., urging Congress to reduce appropriations for military work and to pledge its active support to the disarmament movement; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3078. By Mr. BARBOUR: Petitions of citizens of Bakersfield, Calif., and members of the Bakersfield Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, urging support of the Dyer antilynching bill, House bill 13; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3079. By Mr. BEEDY: Resolutions by Conklin Class, Portland, Me., favoring an equitable, just, and wise plan for the limitation of armament which will promote peace; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3080. By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Papers to accompany House bill 9161, granting a pension to Etta King, widow of Thomas King; to the Committee on Pensions.

3081. By Mr. FENN: Petition of men of the parish of the First Church of Christ, of Glastonbury, Conn., expressing approval of the Conference on the Limitation of Armaments; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3082. By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the Civic Federation of Chicago, Ill., opposing the Sheppard-Towner maternity bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3083. By Mr. GLYNN: Resolution of the Calvary Baptist Church, of Torrington, Conn., in favor of House joint resolution 159; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3084. By Mr. KINDRED: Resolutions condemning Polish atrocities at Vilna, Lithuania, adopted at a mass meeting of American-Lithuanian organizations of Greater New York, held at Cooper Union Hall, November 13, 1921; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3085. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Textiles, Boston, Mass.; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

3086. Also, petition of the Franklin Society, New York City; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3087. Also, petition of New York State League, New York City; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3088. Also, petition of James McCreery & Co., New York City; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3089. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of N. Greenwald & Co. and Steinmetz Electric Motor Car Corporation, Baltimore, Md., favoring legislation for reduction of traveling fare as per Senate bill 848 and House bill 2894; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3090. Also, petition of Walter Green Post of American Legion, Baltimore, Md., favoring passage of antilynching bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3091. Also, telegram from president National Federation of Federal Employees, Baltimore, Md., favoring passage of Lehlbach bill; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

3092. Also, petition of Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion, Washington, D. C., favoring House bill 6309; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

3093. By Mr. MORIN: Telegram from the officials of the Irene-Kaufmann settlement and the people of that district in Pittsburgh, Pa., heartily indorsing the disarmament program and urging support of proposals to reduce expenditures for naval and military purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3094. By Mr. RAKER: Resolution by Winchester Post, No. 197, Department of New York, Grand Army of the Republic, relative to the examination of prospective immigrants to this country before taking passage to this country; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

3095. By Mr. ROSE: Petition of electors of Johnstown, Cambria County, Pa., asking the International Conference for the Limitation of Armament to do its utmost to preserve peace, curtail wars, and destroy armament; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3096. By Mr. SANDERS of Texas: Petition from Kiwanis Club of Tyler, Tex., calling attention to the vital importance and beneficial results to humanity and industry which will ensue if the Disarmament Conference will give consideration to the most stringent limitation of armaments of all the great powers, and seek to insure and assure the peoples of the world against the probability of future wars; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3097. By Mr. WHITE of Maine: Petition of Raymond W. Farley and other citizens of Bath, Me., protesting against legislation to regulate observance of Sunday in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

3098. By Mr. WILLIAMSON: Resolutions on limitation of armaments of the faculty and students of the University of South Dakota, pledging support to the conference now in session for that purpose; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3099. Also, petition of citizens of Ipswich, S. Dak., relative to international disputes and the methods for their settlement; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, November 18, 1921.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, November 16, 1921.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Senator from Kansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McLean	Simmons
Ball	Gooding	McNary	Smith
Borah	Hale	Myers	Spencer
Brandeggee	Harris	Nelson	Stanley
Broussard	Harrison	New	Sterling
Bursum	Heflin	Nicholson	Swanson
Capper	Johnson	Norbeck	Townsend
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Trammell
Culbertson	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Underwood
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Wadsworth
Dial	Kenyon	Owen	Walsh, Mass.
du Pont	Keyes	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	King	Phipps	Watson, Ind.
Ernst	Ladd	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	La Follette	Ransdell	Willis
France	Lodge	Robinson
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard
Gerry	McKinley	Shields

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] on official business.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent on official business.

Mr. FERNALD. The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] are absent on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION LAW.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for a statement or request.

Mr. CURTIS. As the unanimous-consent agreement does not provide for laying before the Senate the conference report, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the conference report be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the conference report be laid before the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7294) supplemental to the national prohibition act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, thus far I have taken no part in the discussion upon that phase of the measure relating to searches without warrant, searches of dwellings, books, papers, persons, or property. I have felt that that was a matter which might better be discussed by those who are learned in the law. I have listened, however, with great interest to the arguments made upon both sides.

Since that discussion commenced with the introduction originally of the so-called Stanley amendment, my interest in it has been so great that I have taken some pains to ascertain some of the practical effects of the present practice, under which apparently there is no restraint imposed upon officers of the Government, or, if there is restraint, it is of such a mild or futile character that it amounts practically to nothing.

As an example of what may be done under the present system at any time and at any place, I wish to lay before the Senate the details of an incident which happened in the State of New York in the month of September last. It comes to me in a newspaper account published in the Albany Evening Journal some time in the neighborhood of September 6 or 7. The account is headed:

Shooting to be investigated by United States district attorney.

Portions of the account I desire to read:

Investigation of the shooting of William Weisheit, a Glenmont farmer, last night on the Kenwood Road by Frank Galloway, one of three prohibition enforcement agents sent out from the Albany office to run down bootleggers, will be made by Hiram C. Todd, United States district attorney for northern New York.

Weisheit and his son, farmers living outside of the city of Albany, were returning from the city to their farm with their truck. They had been marketing vegetables and other produce at the city market. It was in the evening, and as they were going along peacefully with their truck three men stepped out into the road and ordered them to halt. The younger Weisheit was driving the car. He and his father immediately feared and were convinced that the men who ordered them to halt were highwaymen, and at the father's instant direction the son speeded up the car to get out of danger.

They proceeded along the road but a very short distance until they reached a house, when both father and son leaped from the car to run into the house to get help. As they did so one of the prohibition officers, for so they turned out to be, fired and shot the older man, inflicting a severe wound in the thigh. The truck turned out to be loaded with empty market baskets.

There was nothing in the incident that would lead anyone to suppose that these men were bootleggers. The officers who perpetrated this atrocity, and I use that term advisedly, had no information to the effect that Weisheit or his son were bootleggers or were engaged in illicit practices. Apparently their explanation or defense, if one may deem it so, was to the effect that it was suspected that bootleggers were using that road, and that it was the duty of officers to hold up citizens and search their vehicles. The officers were not in uniform nor did they show any badge. Weisheit and his son, believing that they were highwaymen and having heard, as thousands and thousands of citizens have heard, that one of the favorite devices of highwaymen is to impersonate prohibition enforcement agents, failed to halt their car. The elder man was shot. The matter very naturally excited a great deal of attention in the community, and I beg leave of the Senate to read an editorial from one of the newspapers there which I think expresses the sentiment of every man and woman who has some regard for law and order and the responsibility of public officials as well as the rights of citizens. The editorial is headed, "So it has come to this," and reads:

Last night William E. Weisheit, a farmer who lives at Glenmont, having disposed of the produce which he had brought to the market in this city, headed his motor truck, holding only empty baskets and other containers, for home. Near the bridge across the Normanskill, on the Kenwood Road, his son, who was driving, was ordered to halt by three men who were lined along the road. One leveled a revolver at the younger Weisheit.

Believing that the men were robbers, the driver put on more speed. When he came to a house near the road, he stopped, and he and his father got off and ran toward the house, shouting for help. One of the pursuers shot at them. The bullet struck the elder man in the leg and he fell.

Then the pursuers came up and informed the wounded man and his son that they were prohibition-enforcement agents, and that they had suspected that the truck contained "booze." They asserted that they had declared themselves to be officers when they gave the order to halt. The Weisheits said that the men didn't so declare themselves. If they did, the men on the truck did not hear the information.

However that may be, the fact remains that highwaymen might have represented themselves as officers in order to accomplish their purpose.

So it has come to this, that peaceful, law-abiding wayfarers must obey the command of armed men to halt when they are going about their business on a highway, under penalty of injury or even death, if they refuse.

These officers of the prohibition-enforcement bureau are reported to have said that they had been trailing a truck resembling that driven by the Weisheits, in which they believed liquor was carried. If they were, they must have lost it. They ought to have been able to see that a truck carrying empty baskets and boxes and barrels, such as are used to convey vegetables and fruits, was not the one for which they were looking. When the Weisheits stopped and fled, fearing highwaymen, the officers could have quickly assured themselves that the truck did not carry liquor. Instead, one of them discharged the weapon that he held, evidently not giving a thought to the consequences of his shots, which might have been the taking of a life.

In plain words, these officers committed an unwarranted assault upon law-abiding citizens. They are of a type that haven't sufficient intelligence to use authority with proper discretion, that deems possession of a badge and a revolver to be license to resort to violence, even to kill, whenever an arbitrary command is not obeyed.

These officers did not have a warrant against the Weisheits. They did not have even reasonable cause to suspect that the Weisheits were violating a law. They took it into their heads to exercise their authority recklessly. That they did not commit murder was a providential accident.

Manifestly it is in order for the men higher up in the prohibition-enforcement bureau to select their subordinates with due regard for fitness for their duty.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for a question.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to say that I have presented to the Government the claim of the mother of a Maryland boy who was shot under very similar circumstances on his way from Philadelphia to Baltimore.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the Senator that if that claim arises from an incident such as the one to which the editorial which I have read refers, there is nothing which can satisfy it save a special act of Congress, for, of course, the department has no money made available by appropriations to meet such claims. The only relief of a financial nature in a case such as that to which I have referred and in the case cited by the Senator from Maryland, would be an act of Congress, and we all know what delay ensues when legislation of that character is attempted.

Mr. President, one might believe that an incident of this sort would teach a lesson at least to those in charge of enforcement in that district, but the official in charge of prohibition enforcement in Albany, commented upon this incident and issued an interview in the newspapers which I think is somewhat interesting and significant and certainly has a bearing upon the question originally presented by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I quote from the newspaper article:

STATEMENT BY GANTER.

Ruddle E. Ganter, chief of the Albany prohibition enforcement office, in a statement made to a reporter of the Evening Journal, declared, in effect, that while the "accident" was unfortunate, his men were justified in what they did, and he saw no way to avoid similar "accidents" in the future unless every citizen ordered to halt by a prohibition enforcement agent obeyed promptly.

Then follows the interview:

"Prohibition enforcement agents carry badges and a pocket commission," said Mr. Ganter, "but they do not display them when after persons suspected of bootlegging, because that would put the offenders on their guard. In this case Weisheit was informed by the agents what they were when the farmer's automobile was under the electric light near the approach to the bridge, and the information was repeated several times after one of the agents had jumped onto Weisheit's machine.

The young boy denies that.

SHOULD STOP WHEN ORDERED.

When a citizen is ordered to stop by a prohibition enforcement agent he should do so, for the Government instructions are that when such an order is disregarded the prohibition agent should use his revolver if he believes a bootlegger is attempting to escape. The fact that we had information that many bootleggers were using the Kenwood Road, and that our men in pursuit of them stood a good chance of being shot may have been a factor in inducing our agents to use their guns.

It is true that there have been so many automobile hold-ups of late that reputable citizens would naturally hesitate to obey anyone's order to stop, especially at night. There really is no way in which a prohibition enforcement agent can be identified at night. They can't wear a uniform, for that would give them away. It is unfortunate that such accidents as that on the Kenwood Road occur, but apparently there is no way of preventing them when a person ordered to halt by one of our agents refuses to do so. I admit that there is nothing to prevent highwaymen from declaring themselves prohibition enforcement agents when plying their trade, but our agents nevertheless have to protect themselves and are going to use their guns when they think they are justified, either for their own protection or in order to capture a bootlegger.

What becomes of the peaceful citizen between the upper and nether millstones in that situation I can not imagine. He is helpless; he is either held up by highwaymen and filched of his property, if the intruder is a highwayman, or if he attempts to escape in the darkness and it turns out to be a prohibition enforcement agent he is shot.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. Is the Senator from New York aware of the fact that a bulletin has been issued advocating the shooting on sight of persons suspected of illicit traffic in liquor. The bulletin does not state whether they are to be shot when suspected or whether they are to be stopped and captured and then shot, but that is the propaganda.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I had not known of that bulletin, Mr. President, although—

Mr. STANLEY. It purports to come from certain organizations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thought the Senator referred to some official Government bulletin. I have noticed the bulletin to which the Senator calls attention, and I regret that any such exhortation was issued to the American public as the one which I saw. I can not believe that the people who compose the organization whose officials issued that bulletin are in sympathy with their advice and insistence that violence should be used indiscriminately in the enforcement of the law as referred to.

Mr. President, I am not competent to discuss the legal or the constitutional side of this question. As I understand, the conference report carries a portion of the Stanley amendment which would make punishable by fine or imprisonment or both the searching without warrant of a citizen's dwelling, but it fails to include that part of the original Stanley amendment which would make it punishable by fine or imprisonment or both to do the thing that was done in the case which I have described. For myself, I think something should be done by the legislative branch of the Government at least to decrease the danger of accidents of this kind happening from time to time over the country, for, otherwise, we shall find ourselves living under a reign of terror, and the humble and peaceful and helpless citizen traveling in his own automobile about his own business, interfering with no one, violating no law, if he happens to travel upon a road which prohibition enforcement officers believe has been used by persons violating the law, is in danger of his life or of having his property taken away from him by highwaymen impersonating prohibition enforcement agents.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I sympathize with the views the Senator expresses, and I think that the amendment which has been substituted for the Stanley amendment does not go far enough.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not.

Mr. BORAH. I also think, however, that the Stanley amendment itself goes too far. But here is the proposition which I wish to submit to the Senator: The substitute does protect the dwelling; the present law does not. Assuming that one is in favor of the law, aside from the question of the fourth amendment, I have found it difficult to justify myself in voting against it, because to defeat it would leave the law without any protection of the home or anything else. In other words, if we were to succeed in defeating the conference report, the law as it now stands would be much worse than the law as we would enact it in this instance. Does not the Senator think that is true? If I were permitted, I would like to vote for a bill which would embody exactly the principle of the fourth amendment; but if I can not do that, then I want as much of it as I can get. This bill, when it becomes a law, will be much better than the present prohibition law relative to search and seizure.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, undoubtedly the Senator from Idaho is right, if he confines his comment solely to this portion of the bill presented in the conference report. If there were nothing in the conference report except what is left of the Stanley amendment, I would vote to adopt the conference report, regretting that it did not go further; but I can not vote to adopt the conference report on account of the provisions in the bill itself as originally passed by the Senate. The restrictions imposed upon the medical profession of a severity equal, in my judgment, to savagery, make it impossible for me to support it.

Mr. President, if I may say a few words in conclusion, for two years now the country has endeavored to adjust itself to the new conditions prescribed under the eighteenth amendment. I need not indulge in lengthy comment or discussion upon the effect of that amendment throughout the country and the manner in which it has been received in many great communities. Every Senator on this floor knows that while it has been enforceable and has been enforced in many communities, in many other communities it has given rise thus far to an orgy of corruption, smuggling, forgery, bribery, violence, and evasion of the law. I do not have to cite the instances. The public officials in charge of it in many places have referred to them. It is a difficult problem which we have undertaken, Mr. President, and my complaint against the pending bill is that it goes even further in its attempt to impose with savage rigidity—if I may use that expression—the ideas of those who are in favor of prohibition. We are all in favor of enforcement; but it goes so far as, in my judgment, to make it inevitable that further resistance will be built up against this amendment to the Constitution and the existing statute.

I think myself that this bill as contained in the conference report does an injury to prohibition enforcement. It says to a reputable physician, "You shall not prescribe more than this little amount to the sick man whom you are attending." It has nothing to do with the use of these liquors as beverages. The bill relates only to their use as medicines, and then proceeds to put upon the physicians of the country such savage restrictions that there is not a sensible man but knows that times will come when physicians will have to violate the law or evade it or encourage some one else to violate or evade it. There is too much of that going on now. The truth of the matter is that we are filling the country with a spirit of hypocrisy. Thousands and thousands of people give lip service to the law and violate it on the sly; and I do not want that spirit increased. There is far too much of it to-day.

Therefore let me say to the Senator from Idaho I can not vote for this bill, for the reasons that I have stated. In my judgment, it is injurious to respect for law and the Constitution of the United States, and if legislation of this kind is enacted year after year, instead of fortifying the prohibition act and the Constitution of the United States it will eventually break them down and destroy them, and in that breakdown and in that destruction much of the sense of responsibility which the citizen owes to his Government will disappear.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, just a word, and I shall be very brief, because I know that other Senators desire to express their views before final action upon this conference report. I simply want to make a statement, to go into the record as to why I could support neither the bill nor the conference report upon the bill.

The Senate is now considering the conference report on the bill (H. R. 7294) entitled "An act supplemental to the national prohibition act." The eighteenth amendment to the Constitution prohibited the manufacture, sale, transportation, and so forth, of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. The bill which was passed by both branches, and which is the subject of the present conference report, seeks to prevent the use of beer for medicinal purposes under the authority of the eighteenth amendment, prohibiting intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes. I think that bill is unconstitutional. I think it will be so declared as soon as it is brought before the Supreme Court. I voted against it on that ground when it was in the Senate.

Mr. President, before the Senate passed that bill they attached to it an amendment known as the Stanley amendment. That amendment undertook to prohibit the prohibition officers and other officers of the United States from searching the houses and property of citizens without a warrant. I agree with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that it went too far, in my opinion.

I do not think we should have attempted to prevent other officers of the United States, and I do not think the courts would have held that it did if it had become a law. At any rate, it was adopted by the Senate, was sent to the conference committee, and the conferees declared that they would stand by the action of the Senate. The conferees met, and instead of reporting the Senate amendment they reported a substitute for it, which appears as section 6 of the conference report, which I will send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read into the record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That any officer, agent, or employee of the United States engaged in the enforcement of this act, or the national prohibition act, or any other law of the United States, who shall search any private dwelling as defined in the national prohibition act, and occupied as such dwelling, without a warrant directing such search, or who while so engaged shall without a search warrant maliciously and without reasonable cause search any other building or property, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined for a first offense not more than $1,000, and for a subsequent offense not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

Whoever not being an officer, agent, or employee of the United States shall falsely represent himself to be such officer, agent, or employee and in such assumed character shall arrest or detain any person, or shall in any manner search the person, buildings, or other property of any person, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It will be noted that the substitute reported by the conference committee penalizes these prohibition-enforcing officers only if they search a private dwelling without a warrant. I read the fourth amendment to the Constitution, which is as follows:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

It will appear, therefore, that there are four things guaranteed to the people in the fourth amendment, which is a part of the Bill of Rights, to wit:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects.

That includes about all that a man has—his person and his property.

Mr. President, I want to say in answer to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who states that he may vote in favor of this conference report, because at least it prevents the unlawful search without a warrant of a man's dwelling house, that if we adopt this conference report it will be notice to all these prohibition officers all over the country who are holding up, shooting, and searching the persons and property of citizens without warrants that the Senate has refused to pass any law by which they can be held responsible for violating the constitutional provision protecting the people from unreasonable search and seizure of their persons, papers, and effects. If the constitutional guaranty contained in the fourth amendment ought to be maintained by congressional legislation with reference to a man's house, it should be maintained as to the man's person and his property. The amendment proposed by the conference committee protects simply a dwelling house. Under the fourth amendment all a man's houses of every kind are protected from unreasonable search and seizure.

Mr. President, I will not longer weary the Senate, except to say that I base my opinion that the person, papers, and effects of a person can not lawfully be searched or seized without a warrant any more than his house can, upon the leading case of Boyd v. United States (116 U. S., 616), and upon the case of Gouled against the United States, decided February 28, 1921, and the case of Amos against United States contained in the advance sheets of the United States Supreme Court reports, No. 10, published April 1, 1921. I believe the court will not reverse those decisions.

During the delivery of Mr. BRANDEGEE'S speech—

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Will the Senator be kind enough to permit me to read a letter at this time?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If it will not take more than two or three minutes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. It will take only two or three minutes.

This letter is from Dr. W. E. Parker, of Hot Springs, Ark. Dr. Parker is a brother of Gov. Parker, of Louisiana. He is an eminent physician, and a man fully to be trusted. He wrote me this letter on July 28, 1921:

DEAR SENATOR: * * * Something over two months ago I heard Roy Steagal, head enforcement officer here, say in the Elks' Club that the night before a car would not stop, and that he "shot hell out of the tires, and then did not find a damned thing in the car." A few days later, an old friend who lives about 18 miles out into the mountains sent in word that he had been ill for three weeks, and asked if I would go out if he sent a Ford car for me. As we were coming back, about 10.30, and were about 1½ miles from town, at a dark place in the road, we were held up by three revenue men. It looked like a hold up, and the driver of a car just behind us tried to make a run. The revenue men opened fire, and the driver stopped about 75 yards away. They searched his car, and nothing was found, and then searched ours, with similar results. A few days before they fired at a car driven by a lady who had her family with her.

Surely we are coming to a fine state of things when reputable citizens can not go out after dark without being annoyed by these people who look and act like highwaymen; and then it is always along the most-traveled roads, and there is no telling where a stray bullet may go, or what innocent person it may hit.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Connecticut if he is disposed to yield for the reading of a communication such as is being read now by the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I had intended to speak this morning; but, seeing that there will be no opportunity, I want to thank the Senator from Connecticut for yielding to me.

After the conclusion of Mr. BRANDEGEE'S speech—

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I confess a little surprise at the turn the discussion has taken this morning. I find that in that discussion objection is made, not so much to the conference report but to the bill itself, which long ago passed both Houses by decisive majorities.

Just a word or two with reference to the bill. It was said by a great Chief Justice in a great case:

Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

That was said by Chief Justice Marshall in the great case of McCulloch against the State of Maryland.

When is the end? It is embodied in the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution itself, and the end is the prohibition of the manufacture, the sale, and the importation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President—

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think that in the very brief time I have I will not yield for an interruption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. STERLING. I beg the Senator to excuse me.

Mr. SHIELDS. So far as I understood the objection made this morning—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. It is to the effect that the law contributes to the end, but that it does not consist with but is at variance with the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. STERLING. I shall be able, I think, in the brief time I have to show that it does not violate any provision of the Constitution, notwithstanding the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] insists on making his statement in the face of my declining to yield.

Is the end legitimate? Let the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution itself answer. Is it within the scope of the Constitution? The eighteenth amendment is a part of the Constitution.

What as to the means? Are the means sought to be provided by the bill, the conference report on which we are considering, appropriate to the end? I will let the Supreme Court of the United States answer that. Take the case of Jacob Ruppert against Caffey (251 U. S., 264). In referring to a case previously before the Supreme Court, the court said:

Purity Extract Co. v. Lynch (226 U. S., 192) determined that State legislation of this character is valid and sets forth with clearness the constitutional ground upon which it rests.

This is a quotation from the language of Justice Hughes in the Purity Extract Co. case:

When a State exerting its recognized authority undertakes to express what it is free to regard as a public evil, it may adopt such measures having reasonable relation to that end as it may deem necessary in order to make its action effective.

I think Senators will remember the Purity Extract case, which arose out of the sale of a malt beverage having no alcoholic content whatever, but the law of the State of Mississippi forbade the manufacture and sale of such malt beverages. Justice Hughes said further in that case:

It does not follow that because a transaction separately considered is innocuous it may not be included in a prohibition the scope of which is regarded as essential in the legislative judgment to accomplish a purpose within the admitted power of the Government.

Further, and what is more applicable to the present case:

That the Federal Government would, in attempting to enforce a prohibitory law, be confronted with difficulties similar to those encountered by the States is obvious; and both this experience of the States and the need of the Federal Government of legislation defining intoxicating liquors, as was done in the Volstead Act, were clearly set forth in the reports of the House Committee on the Judiciary in reporting the bill to the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session (Rept. 1143, Feb. 26, 1919), and to the Sixty-sixth Congress, first session (Rept. 91, June 30, 1919).

The court further says, quoting from another case, the case of Hamilton against Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., in this same report, at page 156:

When the United States exerts any of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution no valid objection can be based upon the fact that such exercise may be attended by the same incidents which attend the exercise by a State of its police power.

There is found the complete answer to every objection to the original Volstead Act and its provisions, and a complete answer to the objections to the pending bill, the conference report on which we are now considering.

So, Mr. President, it was proper and lawful and constitutional for the Volstead Act to declare that liquors or beverages containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol were intoxicating, though in fact they might not be so, in order to reach the evil and prevent a resort to those subterfuges and evasions which would nullify the constitutional amendment itself.

Now, let me quote just a little further in this connection from the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in the same great case from which I first read:

Where the law is not prohibited and is really calculated to effect any of the objects intrusted to government, to undertake here—to inquire into the degree of its necessity, would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department and to tread on legislative ground.

That is, by the court—

And thus, Mr. President, we reach the logical, the inevitable conclusion that this bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of beer for medicinal purposes is constitutional, and firmly believe that the Supreme Court will, in accordance with the principles it has laid down in other cases, so hold.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President—

Mr. STERLING. I have already declined to yield to another Senator, and I can not yield now.

Mr. PHIPPS. I shall seek an opportunity to say what I have to say when the Senator has concluded.

Mr. STERLING. Now, one word as to the conference report itself. Objection is made to it on the alleged ground that it does not go far enough in protecting the rights of the citizen under the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution. Neither the conference report nor the bill deprives the citizen of a single right he may have under the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution. Is it the compulsory production of papers to be used in evidence against him? Read the Boyd case, and you will find the answer and the citizen's remedy.

Is it the entering of the house of the defendant without a warrant, as the marshal did in the Weeks case, and searching that house for papers? He has his remedy.

Is it a case of the unlawful detention or commitment of a party without jurisdiction or without due process of law? He has his remedy by habeas corpus proceedings and can invoke the protection guaranteed him under the Constitution.

What is the effect of this conference report? Instead of nullifying or detracting from the fourth amendment to the Constitution, or depriving a citizen of a single right thereunder, it adds at least two additional guaranties to the rights of the citizen.

It never before has been a penal offense for an officer to invade the dwelling of another without a warrant, but this conference report makes it a penal offense, and punishes the officer so doing by a fine of not more than a thousand dollars or by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of not more than a year, or both. If a man without a warrant seeks to stop an automobile, or seeks to search a building, doing it maliciously and without probable cause, under this proposed law he will be liable to a fine of a thousand dollars or imprisonment for not exceeding one year in the penitentiary, or both. And thus the conference report provides these additional safeguards to the rights of the citizen as guaranteed by the fourth and fifth amendments.

So, Mr. President, we have all this storm and all this furor about a report and about a bill which, instead of depriving a citizen of a single right under the Constitution, affords him additional guaranties. So much good at least has come from the Stanley amendment.

I ask that an editorial from the Journal of the National Association of Retail Druggists against the manufacture and sale of beer for medicinal purposes be inserted as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

[Editorial from the Journal of the National Association of Retail Druggists, Nov. 10, 1921.]

After reading the various articles which have appeared in the daily papers regarding the regulations recently issued by the Treasury Department permitting and governing the prescribing and dispensing of beer and similar malt products for medicinal purposes, the situation is about as clear as mud to the ordinary intelligent individual. There is, however, one phase of this matter upon which there is absolutely no doubt, and yet this particular phase appears to have been entirely overlooked. We refer to the attitude of the drug trade toward this question, and in this connection it should be borne in mind that the drug trade did not seek the privilege of dispensing beer, and that these regulations were not issued as a result of any effort put forth to that end by any branch of the drug trade, but rather in spite of the numerous protests filed against the granting of any such privilege, and it may in all truthfulness and candor be said that the drug trade generally regrets the issuance of the beer regulations.

In the consideration of this question it should be borne in mind that in only 9 of the 48 States of the Union can the privilege granted by these regulations be exercised, owing to the existence of State laws, the remaining 39 States prohibiting such transactions. * * * Now, as to the remaining States, the druggists in those States should, before engaging in this business, bear very clearly in mind that a bill prohibiting the prescribing and dispensing of beer has passed both Houses of Congress and is now in the hands of the conferees appointed by both Houses for the purpose of ironing out other differences in the measure, both the Senate and the House being in agreement in favor of prohibiting beer. It can, therefore, readily be assumed that when this bill finally becomes a law, as it undoubtedly will, the prescribing and dispensing of beer will be prohibited in all of the States.

In view of these facts, we ask in all seriousness, is it worth while for anyone to become excited over this question, or is it advisable for anyone to take the trouble to qualify under these regulations to engage in this business, when every indication points to an early and complete ending of the whole question?

Mr. McKELLAR obtained the floor.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to his colleague?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SHIELDS. Immediately after the recess of Congress, although not having time for proper preparation, I addressed the Senate upon this bill and the report of the conferees, urging various constitutional and legal propositions, upon which I predicated opposition to the report of the conferees. I had not examined the authorities at length then, but since then I have, and I desire to include them in my remarks, which have not yet been printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall have to go on. I want to make just a few remarks, and I hope I shall be able to conclude before the time for a vote.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Without taking the Senator's time, I wanted to inquire as to the request made by the Senator from Tennessee, which I did not hear. Was it a request to extend his remarks in the Record?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; my colleague desired to have inserted in a speech which he has already made some authorities bearing on the subject.

Mr. President, in a rather long experience I have known but one person that intoxicating liquors did any good, and I believe that any other stimulant would have had the same effect on him. On the other hand, I have known literally thousands of people that intoxicating liquors have injured and many were ruined by them. It is my belief that no man can habitually use them without being greatly injured or destroyed. Some of the brightest intellects I have ever known have been at first dimmed by the use of intoxicating liquors, and in many cases finally destroyed. The chief difference between the use of intoxicants and the use of poisonous drugs is a delayed result. The drugs act quickly, the intoxicants more slowly; but both, if continued, are certain destroyers of the human system.

Knowing these facts—and we all know them—it would seem the most reasonable thing in the world that we should put the use of intoxicants on the same footing with the use of poisonous drugs. Such is the apparent human desire for intoxicants or stimulants that our experience has shown that there is but one way with any degree of success to limit the use of intoxicating liquors, and that is by prohibition. It is not an absolutely effective remedy. It does not prevent all men from using intoxicants. Some liquors will be smuggled in. Some will be illegally made in violation of the law. But this does not mean that because the law is violated we should have no law. We have a law against murder, but that does not prevent all murders. We have a law against arson, but that does not prevent the illegal burning of houses by many. We have a law against robbery and stealing, and yet we find innumerable violations of these laws every day; but surely no patriotic citizen would want these laws repealed or seriously modified because they are being violated. And so I take it that any unbiased and observing man will say in reference to the prohibition laws, that even though they are violated they have greatly lessened the consumption of liquors and greatly added to the welfare and happiness of men and women in our whole country.

I think the result of the law is well illustrated by its effect in the city where I live. Ten years ago we had some six or seven hundred saloons in the city of Memphis. Men drinking and drunk were to be seen everywhere. Last July I was at home in Memphis for six days and mingled with all classes of our people. I did not see a single person that I thought was under the influence of liquor or who even had a drink while I was there in those six days. I do not mean to say that there was no drinking in Memphis during that time or that the law was not being then violated. Intoxicating liquors are being drunk there, but what I do mean to say is that the consumption of liquors has been enormously decreased by the prohibition laws and that this enormous decrease has brought about the greatest benefits and blessings to our people. It has contributed untold happiness to innumerable families and makes for a higher, cleaner, more sober, and more prosperous life.

Now, Mr. President, in reference to the particular bill under discussion, its opponents claim it is unconstitutional. I do not believe so. That same claim has been made as to practically every temperance bill that has ever passed in any legislature or in Congress. When I first came to Congress I was caught by one of these claims myself, and yet, Mr. President, practically every temperance law that has ever passed, either in a State legislature or in the Congress, has been declared valid and constitutional. I do not believe there is a single exception, so far as congressional legislation is concerned, and judging from the decisions of the Supreme Court in previous cases, I have not the slightest doubt but that this bill will be declared valid and constitutional if a question is raised about it.

The opponents of the bill then claim that it is an invasion of the rights of the citizen preserved in articles 4 and 5 of the amendments to the Constitution, and especially of article 4, which reads as follows:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause supported by oath or affirmation and particularly describing the place to be searched and the things to be seized.

If I thought this bill violated that article of the Constitution or any article of the Constitution, I would vote against it; but I do not so believe. The Stanley amendment provides a penalty for a violation of the fourth amendment to the Constitution above quoted. On its face this would seem fair; but, as a matter of fact, what this proposed amendment does is to prohibit the search by officers of the law without a warrant of automobiles bringing whisky into the country or carrying it through the country. Now, we all know that the automobile is the principal means used for the transportation of illicit liquors. If this Stanley amendment were passed the whisky blockade runners from Canada and Mexico would be practically immune from arrest. They could be 50 miles away and their cargo delivered before a warrant could be sworn out.

Mr. President, I desire to say that it is most remarkable that the fourth amendment of the Constitution has been a part of our Constitution since 1791, 130 years, and no legislator, so far as I am informed, has ever proposed a penalty for its violation until recently. The effect of the Stanley amendment will aid the illicit automobile. I am willing at any time to vote for a bill fixing a specific penalty for the violation of the fourth amendment of the Constitution, but I am unwilling by my vote to say that a penalty should be imposed in such a way as to protect a means of transportation commonly used by the illicit whisky dealers. Amendment 4 of the Constitution was enacted for the purpose of protecting the person and home, and this bill without the Stanley amendment fully does that. That amendment has not even the faintest application to a means of transportation. If you apply the principle of the sanctity of the home and of the sanctity of the person to the protection of automobiles, why not apply the same principle to railroad trains and to wagons and to airplanes, and to all other means of transportation? The question answers itself, there is nothing in that contention. We all know that one of the means principally used to bring in and distribute illicit liquors to the American public is by means of automobiles, I do not for an instant question the good faith of those who favor the Stanley amendment. I know they conscientiously believe they are right. I simply differ with them. Believing in the Constitution and laws of our country I would not want to modify that Constitution and those laws by putting this premium upon their violation. The passage of a law prohibiting murder but providing that no person should be arrested for murder without a warrant would be practically as reasonable. Mr. President, I hope the conference report will be agreed to and that the President may speedily sign the bill. A great majority of the people of these United States favor prohibition. The constitutional amendment voicing the will of the majority is on the statute books. Why not enforce the will of the majority of the people?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on November 8, 1921, the hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to state the pending question, which is, Shall the conference report upon House bill 7294, an act supplemental to the national prohibition act, be agreed to? The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], who is unavoidably absent. I am informed that on this question he would vote as I intend to vote, and I shall, therefore, vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. LENROOT's name was called). The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is paired on this question with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. If present, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] would vote "yea" and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] would vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I observe that that Senator is not in the Chamber. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW], who is absent from Washington, and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY (when Mr. REED's name was called). The senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD]. If present, the senior Senator from Missouri would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who is absent from the city on account of very serious illness in his family. That Senator informed me before leaving the city that if present he would vote on this question as I intend to vote, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Upon this vote I am relieved from my general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], and I vote "yea."

Mr. SPENCER (when his name was called). I have a pair upon this vote with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], but on this question I am relieved from the pair. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKINLEY. My colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], is detained from the Chamber on account of the death of his wife's mother.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted. Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer my pair to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on official business. My colleague is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON. My colleague [Mr. KELLOGG] is detained at home by illness. If he were present he would vote in favor of the conference report.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs on this vote:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]; and

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. STANFIELD] is necessarily absent. If present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 56, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—56.

Ashurst	Glass	McKellar	Poindexter
Borah	Gooding	McKinley	Robinson
Bursum	Hale	McNary	Sheppard
Capper	Harris	Myers	Simmons
Caraway	Harrison	Nelson	Smith
Culberson	Hefflin	New	Smoot
Cummins	Hitchcock	Nicholson	Spencer
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Sterling
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Swanson
Elkins	Kendrick	Oddie	Townsend
Ernst	Kenyon	Overman	Trammell
Fernald	Keyes	Owen	Walsh, Mont.
France	Ladd	Page	Watson, Ind.
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Pittman	Willis

NAYS—22.

Brandagee	King	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Broussard	La Follette	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
du Pont	Lodge	Shields	Watson, Ga.
Edge	McLean	Shortridge	Weller
Gerry	Penrose	Stanley
Johnson	Phipps	Underwood

NOT VOTING—18.

Ball	Dillingham	McCormick	Sutherland
Calder	Fletcher	Moses	Warren
Cameron	Harrel	Newberry	Williams
Colt	Kellogg	Reed
Crow	Lenroot	Stanfield

So the conference report was agreed to, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 7294, "An act supplemental to the national prohibition act," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 14.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15 and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to said Senate amendment.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 17, 18, and 19, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate insert the following:

"Sec. 6. That any officer, agent, or employee of the United States engaged in the enforcement of this act, or the national prohibition act, or any other law of the United States, who shall search any private dwelling as defined in the national prohibition act, and occupied as such dwelling, without a warrant directing such search, or who while so engaged shall without a search warrant maliciously and without reasonable cause search any other building or property, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined for a first offense not more than $1,000, and for a subsequent offense not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

"Whoever not being an officer, agent, or employee of the United States shall falsely represent himself to be such officer, agent, or employee and in such assumed character shall arrest or detain any person, or shall in any manner search the person, buildings, or other property of any person, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

And the House agree to the same.

THOMAS STERLING,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ANDREW J. VOLSTEAD,
HATTON W. SUMMERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

ADJUSTMENT OF WAR CONTRACTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 843) to amend section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

Add to the first paragraph of section 5 the following proviso: "Provided, That all claimants who, in response to any personal, written, or published request, demand, solicitation, or appeal from any of the Government agencies mentioned in said act, in good faith expended money in producing or preparing to produce any of the ores or minerals named therein and have heretofore mailed or filed their claims or notice in writing thereof within the time and in the manner prescribed by said act if the proof in support of said claims clearly shows them to be based upon action taken in response to such request, demand, solicitation, or appeal, shall be reimbursed such net losses as they may have incurred and are in justice and equity entitled to from the appropriation in said act."

"If in claims passed upon under said act awards have been denied or made on rulings contrary to the provisions of this amendment, or through miscalculation, the Secretary of the Interior may award proper amounts or additional amounts, which shall be paid from the unexpended portion of the appropriation carried in said act, when reappropriated for such purpose."

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House, with an amendment to strike out of the substitute proposed by the House the following language, in the last three lines:

Which shall be paid from the unexpended portion of the appropriations carried in said act, when reappropriated for such purpose.

I also move that the Senate insist upon its disagreement in this respect and ask the House for a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask for an explanation of the House amendment and the position which the Senator from Washington takes with respect to the Senate proposition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will state the substantial difference between the substitute proposed by the House and the bill as passed by the Senate. The Senate bill provided that the Secretary of the Interior might make a just and equitable settlement of claims if they had been proved by the testimony already submitted. The House substitute provides "if they shall be proved," under which would be considered the testimony already submitted or any testimony which may be offered. That is the substantial difference, with the exception of the change to which I have just referred and on which I ask a disagreement; that is, the provision in the House substitute providing that there must be a reappropriation of this money, which has already been appropriated.

The Senate bill provided that the claims when allowed in accordance with the terms of the bill as passed by the Senate might be paid out of the appropriation already made, while the House bill requires that there shall be a reappropriation. Upon that last change I ask for a disagreement and a conference.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as I understand my colleague, he moves to concur in the House amendment with an amendment. It occurred to me that probably it would not be wise to ask for a conference, because the House might accept the amendment as proposed by the Senate. I merely make that suggestion. The Senator from Washington moves to concur in the House amendment with an amendment. The House might accept that amendment when it is presented to them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My information is that they are not very likely to accept it; they insist that this matter was very thoroughly debated on this particular point in the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that, but, so far as any official advice we have is concerned, they might do it. It seems to me it would be the proper thing for them to ask for a conference if they disagreed to the amendment made by the Senate. I merely suggest that to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My information is that we shall expedite the consideration of the bill by now asking for a further conference; that it is inevitable that we shall have to have a conference.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the amendment which has been offered by the Senator—there was so much noise I could not hear all the Senator said—change the fundamental provisions of the bill or in any way limit the use of the fund which is available to meet the claims which may be presented and finally adjudicated?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all.

Mr. KING. It does not enlarge or diminish the provisions of the bill with respect to the right of recovery as those provisions were carried in the Senate bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it does not, with the exception that, as I have already stated, the Senate bill was so worded that the consideration of the claims would be confined to the proof which has already been submitted. Under the House provision the claims may be submitted upon any proof that may be offered, including that which has already been submitted.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what provision has been made for a tribunal to pass upon the additional proof and make adjudication?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No change whatever has been made in that respect. The same tribunal is to consider the claims.

Mr. KING. As I recall, one of the members of the tribunal was the former Senator from Colorado, Mr. Shafroth, who is not now a member of the tribunal. My understanding was that the tribunal had ceased to function, and I was wondering if a new tribunal had been constituted either by the House bill or by the Senate bill or by any proposed amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is not changed in the slightest particular.

Mr. NELSON. My understanding is that these claims are pending before the Secretary of the Interior, and he has appointed a board to consider them. The bill relates to manganese and other mineral claims.

Mr. KING. I used the word "tribunal" as meaning board.

Mr. NELSON. The Secretary of the Interior has appointed a board. The members of the board are not appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, but it is simply a board appointed or created by the Secretary of the Interior. Our late colleague, Senator Shafroth, was formerly a member of the board.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the confusion in the Chamber is so great that some of us have been unable to hear the statements made by Senators who have recently engaged in the colloquy. I desire to ask the Senator from Washington some questions about the matter. Is this the bill which was introduced by myself during the last session and which passed the Senate some months ago?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is practically the same bill, but it was reintroduced by the Senator from California. It was based upon the former bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. In what respect does this bill differ from the bill which was passed by the Senate during the last session?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The bill does not differ from the bill to which the Senator from Arkansas refers. It is the same bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington what is the distinction between the House amendment to the bill and the original bill itself? What changes does the House amendment propose to make?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The chief change is the one upon which I have asked a disagreement and a conference; that is, that the House substitute provides that there must be a reappropriation of the funds which have already been appropriated under this bill to satisfy these claims. The Senate bill provides that when the claims are allowed under the terms of the bill they may be paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is that appropriation still available?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is already available.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the reason for requiring a reappropriation when the fund is already available?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think there is any reason for it at all; but, of course, the Senator from Arkansas understands that that provision was put in by the opponents of the bill; that it was not put in by the friends of the measure, and if it should remain in the bill it would have the effect of returning to the Treasury the appropriation which has already been made, requiring it to be again taken out by another appropriation. Then the whole matter of the allowance of these claims and the satisfaction of these meritorious services on the part of producers of these essential war minerals would have to be fought over again in the effort to pass through Congress another bill appropriating the money for their satisfaction, though the funds have already been appropriated as the law now stands.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, does the Senator from Washington move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment and ask for a conference? Is that the motion?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment with an amendment, namely, to strike out of the House amendment the words which require the reappropriation of the money, and to ask for a conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the motion which has just been made by the Senator from Washington be agreed to, in what respect will that leave the bill different from the original bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would leave it substantially the same, with the exception which I have stated several times, that it would permit the claimants to introduce any evidence which they may have to prove their claims, whereas the Senate bill apparently would have confined them to the record which has already been made.

Mr. ROBINSON. In that, then, the House provision is more liberal than the original Senate bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is more liberal, and I think it is more just, especially, as the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] suggests to me, if there has been any mistake or miscalculation concerning the claims heretofore presented.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to be heard for just a moment on the motion of the Senator from Washington, if he has said all he intends to say about it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think I have stated the whole matter, and I do not desire to go into it further, if the Senator has understood from what I have said just the form in which the question comes before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity of examining carefully the House proposal, but, relying upon the statement of the Senator from Washington, I am heartily in accord with the motion which he has made. The Senate, after somewhat extended consideration of the bill introduced by myself during the last session, passed this measure, I believe, unanimously. I do not recall that there was a single dissenting vote, although I may be in error as to that.

It is stated by the Senator from Washington that the House amendment will require a reappropriation of funds already available to meet the claims covered by this measure. It seems to me that that is entirely unnecessary. The original act to which the pending measure is an amendment made an appropriation adequate in all probability to meet all of the claims that will ever be allowed if this proposed legislation becomes law, and it certainly seems to me to be unnecessary, if not absurd, to provide for the payment of the claims and at the same time take such action as will cover into the Treasury funds already available for their satisfaction, and so require a new appropriation. The motion made by the Senator from Washington, in my opinion, should be agreed to.

The House amendment, in that it authorizes the claimants to submit additional proof, will liberalize the provisions of the Senate bill; it will enable claimants to complete cases which might have been submitted improvidently and upon insufficient evidence. For that reason I should like to see the motion made by the Senator from Washington approved by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. WALSH of Montana conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is a nomination pending on which immediate action ought to be taken. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 45 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Grand Rapids, Mich., praying for the prompt enactment of the so-called Willis-Campbell antibeer bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Mayville, Bay Port, Silverwood, Roseville, and North Branch, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 1948, providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the directors of the Saginaw (Mich.) Manufacturers' Association, opposing any reduction in the tariff duty on Cuban sugar or any increase beyond the present 20 per cent preferential granted to such sugar, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Washtenaw County Pomona Grange and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Elsie, in the State of Michigan, favoring the limitation of armament so as to promote world peace, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McLEAN presented telegrams and communications in the nature of petitions from S. H. Barber, of Hartford; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Stafford Springs; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Middletown; the Wesley Methodist Church, of Warehouse Point; and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Unionville; all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the immediate enactment of the so-called Willis-Campbell antibeer bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Shelton Building & Loan Association, of Shelton, Conn., praying that the amendment providing for an exemption of $500 of income derived from investment in domestic building and loan associations be restored in the tax revision bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented 12 memorials of sundry citizens of Meriden, New Haven, Norwich, and Waterbury, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 2135, to enable the refunding of obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, etc., and urging that foreign Governments pay the principal as well as the interest on loans, so that ex-service men may receive a bonus, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Windsor; members of the First Congregational Church, Poquonock Congregational Church, Grace Episcopal Church, Trinity Methodist Church, and Union Church, of Windsor; and the men of the parish of the First Church of Christ of Glastonbury, all in the State of Connecticut, favoring the Conference on Limitation of Armament and the promotion of peace among the nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WILLIS presented resolutions adopted by Sandy Valley Grange, No. 1764, Patrons of Husbandry, of Tuscarawas County, Ohio, favoring the enactment of House bill 5775, for the relief of Liberty loan subscribers of the North Penn Bank, of Philadelphia, Pa.; Santa Rosa National Bank, of Santa Rosa, Calif.; and Mineral City Bank, of Mineral City, Ohio; Robbinsdale State Bank, of Robbinsdale, Minn.; and Farmers and Merchants State Bank, of Kenmare, N. Dak., which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Malta, Ohio, held November 13, 1921, favoring a substantial limitation of armament so as to promote world peace, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMERICAN RELIEF ADMINISTRATION IN RUSSIA.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2708) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer without charge certain surplus material of the War Department to the American relief administration in Russia, reported it with amendments.

REPRINT OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SHIELDS. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report without amendment the resolution (S. Res. 151) providing for a reprint of the Constitution of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 317) thereon. The report is favorable, but the resolution should be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate for report before action is taken upon it. I ask for that reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 2743) to amend an act approved June 20, 1910, entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States" (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 2744) to provide for the removal of the Confederate dead from Greenlawn Cemetery to Crown Hill National Cemetery; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LODGE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) transferring to the custody of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution certain relics now in the possession of the Department of State; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SALARIES OF CERTAIN ATTORNEYS AND MARSHALS.

Mr. BROUSSARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 425) fixing the salaries of certain United States attorneys and United States marshals, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION BILL.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to House bill 8331, to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, which I ask may be printed and lie upon the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I also ask that the proposed amendment be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new paragraph:

"That this act shall not go into effect unless and until the railroad companies named and referred to as respondents or defendants in the case before the Interstate Commerce Commission submitted September 3, 1921, and decided October 20, 1921, shall put into effect the reduction of freight rates on grain, grain products, and hay in carloads by the railroad corporations operating between points in the western and mountain Pacific groups as required by the findings and decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in that case."

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. SMITH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2263) to amend the Federal reserve act approved December 23, 1913, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. SMITH to the bill (S. 2263) to amend the Federal reserve act approved December 23, 1913, viz: On page 2, beginning with line 15, strike out down to and including line 13, on page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the second paragraph of section 10 of the Federal reserve act, approved December 23, 1913, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank. The appointive members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank, except that this restriction shall not apply to a member who has served the full term for which he was appointed. Of the five members thus appointed by the President at least two shall be persons experienced in banking or finance and one shall be a person whose business and occupation is farming. One shall be designated by the President to serve for 2, one for 4, one for 6, one for 8, and one for 10 years, and thereafter each member so appointed shall serve for a term of 10 years unless sooner removed for cause by the President. Of the five persons thus appointed, one shall be designated by the President as governor and one as vice governor of the Federal Reserve Board. The governor of the Federal Reserve Board, subject to its supervision, shall be the active executive officer. The Secretary of the Treasury may assign offices in the Department of the Treasury for the use of the Federal Reserve Board. Each member of the Federal Reserve Board shall within 15 days after notice of appointment make and subscribe to the oath of office."

Sec. 2. That this act shall not affect the appointment or term of a member of the Federal Reserve Board appointed for a term commencing prior to the date upon which this act becomes law, but the first vacancy existing after such date resulting from the death, resignation, removal, or the expiration of the term of office of such a member shall be filled by the appointment, in the manner provided by law, of a person whose business and occupation is farming.

MICHIGAN SENATORIAL ELECTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution, S. Res. 172, which was temporarily laid aside.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Senate resolution 172, declaring Truman H. Newberry to be a duly elected Senator from the State of Michigan.

Mr. POMERENE obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think we ought to have a quorum present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	Nelson	Smith
Brandegee	Harris	Norbeck	Smoot
Broussard	Heflin	Norris	Spencer
Bursum	Hitchcock	Oddie	Sterling
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Townsend
Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Trammell
Dial	Kenyon	Phipps	Underwood
du Pont	Keyes	Pittman	Wadsworth
Edge	King	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	Ladd	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	La Follette	Robinson	Weller
France	Lodge	Sheppard	Willis
Gerry	McKellar	Shields
Glass	McKinley	Shortridge
Gooding	McNary	Simmons

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on official business. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, except for the announcement made by the distinguished Vice President, whose word I always accept at par, I would be inclined to question whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. President, if Senators will recall, by the Michigan statutes to which I have referred, it is made an offense and is declared illegal either to give or loan money at a primary or other election, except for certain admitted purposes, and the limitation is made to the candidate that he is not permitted to expend to exceed $3,750 as a candidate for the Senate. There is no technical limitation placed upon a committee, but that must be accepted with this qualification, namely, that that shall be a committee of friends with which the principal has no connection. In other words, the principle of law, which must control in the election as in anything else, is this: He who does a thing through another does it himself. If this committee was Mr. Newberry's committee, if he suggested it, or was consulted about it, and approved its selection, as he did; if he kept in constant touch with the work it was doing, as he did; if he was supervising that work, as he was; if he was approving or disapproving of its activities, as he was; if I fail to see how he or any other man can accept the result of its work without being legally and actually responsible for the acts of that committee.

Mr. President, I discussed at length on yesterday the facts connected with the financing of this campaign committee by John S. Newberry, the brother, and by the other Newberry interests through their attorney in fact, Mr. Smith. I showed that Mr. Truman H. Newberry's money was being checked out of his account by his attorney in fact into the account of John S. Newberry, the brother, and again that this same Mr. Smith, the attorney in fact for John S. Newberry, was checking that money, which theretofore may have come from Truman H. Newberry or from any one of the other nine Newberry interests, into John S. Newberry's account, and from John S. Newberry's account it was checked over to the treasurer or other officer of the Newberry campaign committee. It may be that if I were out on the hustings I would go into that more in detail, but for the present I am not going to offend any further the intelligence of the Senators who do me the honor to listen to me.

I do want, however, to call attention to some matters in the record which will show beyond peradventure that this was Newberry's committee; that its activities were his activities; that in the midst of these activities they violated the Michigan laws; that they did things not permitted; that they expended large sums of money for purposes prohibited by the Michigan statute; and that Mr. Newberry's title to his seat in the Senate is, in my judgment, vitiated by these illegal things which were done by this committee of his.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator enters upon the discussion just indicated by the last paragraph of his remarks I should like to interrupt him to inquire what his interpretation is of section 45 of the Michigan statute, which in part reads in this way:

It shall be unlawful for any other person to do or perform for or on behalf of any such candidate, or to help or injure the candidacy of any candidate, any of the acts or things which it is by this act made unlawful for such candidate to do.

As I understood the Senator, the inference might be drawn from his observations that committees might be organized independently of a specific candidate for the purpose of aiding him, and while he would be limited to the expenditure of $3,750, and only for the purpose indicated in the Michigan statute, independent committees and organizations without number might spend money without limit, debauching the electorate of a county or a State, and they would not be amenable to the provisions of the statute and their conduct would not be reflected in the vitiation of the election of the candidate.

It seems to me, if that is the law, it will permit any person to avail himself of the voluntary services of cliques, combines, and representatives of great wealth, of corporations, and of vested interests that might be interested in securing the election of a given person, who might not participate in their activities or know, except by those grapevine methods by which knowledge of such activities is secured, of their large appropriations and of their efforts in his behalf, but he would be the beneficiary of the expenditure of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars to the corruption of the State. It seems to me the statute does not mean that; but that if such proceedings are had the candidate must either be deemed to have known of them or the conduct of those persons must be visited upon his head and he be denied his seat because of their corrupt use of money.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator for his suggestion.

Mr. OWEN. I make the point of no quorum, as there are only three Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber just now, and I think there ought to be one or two more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A Senator will rise when he desires to address the Chair. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma for that purpose?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, has any business transpired since the last quorum was called? I understand the absence of a quorum was suggested immediately at the close of the executive session, and no business has transpired since.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know whether it is material at all, but I notice there are three Senators on the Republican side of the Chamber and perhaps about three times that many on the Democratic side, so that there is actually the want of a quorum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That has no bearing upon the point of order which I have raised. I remind the occupant of the chair—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma desire to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. OWEN. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon that suggestion the Senator from New York makes the point of order that no business has transpired since the last point of no quorum was made. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time, but he has investigated the record and finds that nothing has since occurred except debate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just a moment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I beg the pardon of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And while the precedents are conflicting as to whether debate constitutes business, the Chair thinks that, under the weight of the precedents, he will be compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. HARRISON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska, who first rose.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Ohio. I realize that, while only a few Senators are in the Chamber—and I regret that situation as much as does anybody, for I should be glad if all Senators were here—I wish to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that nothing can be done to compel Senators to remain in their seats, and the continual making of the point of no quorum does not succeed in providing an audience for the Senator speaking, because as soon as the Senators answer to their names they again go out, and while the RECORD shows that there is a quorum present, everybody knows that there is not a quorum at the time the announcement is made. I should like to suggest that Senators do not continue to make the point, because those who do not want to hear the debate will not be here in any event; there have not been very many here as this debate has proceeded, and we can not compel Senators to remain here. I have an idea that the country will pay some attention to what the Senator from Ohio is saying, for it is worthy of attention; but no headway can be made by the continual making of points of no quorum, because it does not accomplish anything.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I do not care to insist upon the point of no quorum. I was not aware that it had just previously been made; but I really do not see much use in an advocate presenting his views to a jury which is not present.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand.

Mr. OWEN. I was going to suggest that under the circumstances we might adjourn until the jury was willing to come and hear the argument.

Mr. NORRIS. That would never occur. We never would reach a conclusion. There is not much difference between this debate and what takes place ordinarily.

Mr. OWEN. I think that might be tried; and I move that we adjourn, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not believe I want to yield for that purpose.

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HARRISON. I dislike very much to ask the Senator to yield to me, and I would not if this colloquy were not going on; but I have a very important bill that I desire to introduce, out of order.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment? Apropos of the point of order that has just been raised by the Senator from New York, will the Chair permit an observation, having ruled?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is very clear upon the ruling. Of course, the Senator has a right to appeal from the decision.

Mr. KING. Oh, no, Mr. President; the Senator from Utah does not desire to appeal. I want to state, if the Chair will pardon me, that in my opinion the precedents do support the action of the Chair; and yet I respectfully submit that if that rule shall be enforced it will work very serious injury to legislative work. As long as it is apparent that a quorum is in the Chamber, the suggestion of the absence of a quorum might be regarded as dilatory where no considerable business had been transacted in the meantime; but where it is obvious that a quorum is not here, that only a limited number of Senators are present, it seems to me that the rule ought to be so modified—and I think that the Chair has interpreted it in the light of the precedents—as that the suggestion of the absence of a quorum may be made at any time, because it is intended that the Senate shall transact business in an orderly way. The transaction of business in an orderly way contemplates that a quorum of the Senate shall be present, and when they are not present, technically business may not be transacted; and when it is apparent to the Chair that a quorum is not present, it seems to me the rule ought to be that the suggestion that a quorum is not present may be made at any time, regardless of the fact that no independent business may have been transacted in the meantime.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair deems it proper to state, in connection with the remarks just submitted by the Senator from Utah, that the rules of the Senate prescribe the method by which the presence of a quorum shall be ascertained. The present occupant of the Chair feels that he has no power to make or modify the rules of the Senate. His duty is to enforce the rules as he finds them. If his decision is wrong, the remedy of course is by appeal, which any Senator is at liberty to avail himself of, even at this time, if he feels that the ruling of the Chair is erroneous.

The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Senator to yield to me for the purpose of introducing a bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I yielded for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill to provide for the removal of the Confederate dead from Greenlawn Cemetery to Crown Hill National Cemetery.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to receiving the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This inquiry is not uttered with the slightest idea of being discourteous to the Senator from Ohio. Would the Chair hold that the yielding on the part of the Senator from Ohio for the introduction of a bill, which of course constitutes business on the part of the Senate, will terminate one of the opportunities which the Senator from Ohio has under the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A written rule of the Senate expressly forbids the interruption of a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing a bill, resolution, petition, and so forth; and the same rule enjoins upon the Presiding Officer the duty of enforcing it without formal point of order. Under the practice prevailing in the Senate, however, for a long time, the universal custom is for the Chair to submit requests for unanimous consent for the introduction of bills when a Senator having the floor yields for that purpose; and unless some Senator who is present when the request for unanimous consent is made objects to the interruption, or gives notice that he will make the point of order that the Senator is abandoning the floor when he yields for that purpose, under the practice prevailing in the Senate the Chair has never deprived a Senator having the floor of the privilege of resuming his address.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I have the Senator's permission to make just an observation?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I really do desire to assure the Senator that this statement is not made with any personal idea in my mind.

The other evening the Vice President, being in the Chair, ruled that if a Senator having the floor and speaking upon a question yielded the floor to another Senator to make a motion, even to the extent of merely suggesting the absence of a quorum, that yielding upon his part terminated the first address which he is allowed to make upon a bill, the rule being that a Senator shall address the Senate not more than twice. If the rule is going to be enforced against one Senator it should be enforced against all.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want an understanding upon that point.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Ohio will yield just for an observation—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. In view of the remark, which carried with it an implied threat by the distinguished Senator from New York, who is a member of the committee, that he perhaps would make that point of order, I desire to withdraw the bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, allow me to observe, in view of what has been said—and I should like the attention of the Senator from New York—that I am not in the habit of filibustering. I do not think anybody can accuse me of that. I am very earnest in some observations that I make, and my friends tell me I am earnest in manner. I do not mean to be rude at any time, and I want to observe the amenities of debate and the rules of the Senate as nearly as I can. It is the universal practice in the Senate to yield to Members when they intend to offer business of the character presented by the Senator from Mississippi. I shall assume, when interruptions of that kind are made, that they are made in the best of faith. I should regret exceedingly if Senators should attempt to take me off the floor. There will not be anything gained by that in the hastening of the deliberations of this body upon the matter which is now being presented. I mean to present it as fairly as I can, as fully as I can, as earnestly as I feel the facts justify, because I am satisfied that whatever the result may be here, and whichever way Senators may vote, there will be an abundance of opportunity for explanation of those votes; if not in the Chamber, hereafter.

Mr. President, if I may advert to the question which was propounded to me by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], when I spoke about the lack of limitation so far as expenditures by a committee were concerned, I purposely stated that proposition as strongly against myself as I could. My point is that if a committee is absolutely independent—and I mean just what I say by that; if it is absolutely independent, with no umbilical cord, so to speak, between the principal and his committee, if they go on sui sponte with their organization, and so forth—I can conceive that that might be a hardship if the principal were to be held responsible for those acts; but the Senator has presented his views with very great force, and he has presented them with reference to the facts in the case at the bar of the Senate, and I share his view when he bases his proposition upon the facts as they are contained in the record in this case.

Section 45, to which the Senator refers, prohibits absolutely the expenditure of money for doing primary work, soliciting votes, trying for pay to persuade men to vote one way or another; and the Legislature of the great State of Michigan said in that very section that the purpose of it was to stop the practice theretofore prevailing of hiring workers at the polls. Then the section to which the Senator from Utah refers, which is the following section, as I remember, expressly provides that no other man may do the things therein prohibited which the candidate himself may not do. Of course, we have to take into consideration that provision of the statute when we try to determine the legal effect of the things which were done in Michigan. It is to follow out that idea that I intended to take up and discuss, more in detail than I did on yesterday, the organization of this committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows, however, that in Great Britain there is a statute and a prevailing practice to the effect that if any expenditures are made by third persons in excess of the amount permitted by law, even without the knowledge of the candidate, the election is voided. The sins of others are visited upon the innocent head of the candidate.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope we shall have that law here some of these days; but, as I recall—and I wish the Senator would correct me if I am in error—that is due to a statute passed by the British Parliament, is it not?

Mr. KING. Yes; that is my recollection.

Mr. POMERENE. I think so. That is my recollection about it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to submit an inquiry before the Senator gets away from that proposition. As I understand the common law, a matter of that kind is a corrupt practice. I have followed the Senator in nearly all of his speech, though I may have been out a few moments. There has been a good deal said about Mr. Newberry knowing nothing about these matters.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; that is true.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has discussed that. Suppose he did not know anything about it. Suppose a committee goes out and practically buys an election for a man, and he knows nothing about it, perhaps being in Europe. Is not a seat thus won just as tainted with fraud as it would be under the English law?

Mr. POMERENE. There is no doubt about it at all. Under the statute to which I referred on yesterday there are 11 classes of expenditures which are permitted, and only those. They do not permit the hiring of workers at the polls. They permit the hiring of clerks. One expression used in the statute is "canvassers"; but they are not permitted to do many of the things to which I shall call attention as I proceed. In other words, that committee violated the law, and the law having been violated in those illegal acts, I am satisfied that it vitiated that vote.

Mr. KENYON. Even though the candidate knew nothing about it?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes. I will qualify that statement, and I will assume a case in order to illustrate what is in my mind. Let us assume that in a given precinct there had been illegal methods adopted. I think the vote of that precinct could be thrown out; but it would not necessarily vitiate the entire vote.

Mr. KENYON. The illegalities, the Senator feels, must go to the probability of the election of the candidate without the practice of the methods alleged to be illegal? The point I am trying to get at, and which I hope the Senator will discuss, is this: Suppose a man goes off to Europe, and a committee takes charge of his campaign, and goes out and does illegal acts which he knows absolutely nothing about. To what extent must those acts go before they would be considered as vitiating the election?

Mr. POMERENE. In my judgment, if the law had been violated and the violations had led to the securing of votes which were necessary to constitute the majority, and if the deduction of those illegal votes would result in the vote of the successful candidate being reduced to a minority vote, I think a Senator elected under those circumstances would have to pay the penalty of the illegal acts of his friends.

I recall now a case in the House in which a former distinguished Member of this body was the contestee, the distinguished former Senator Shafroth. The returns showed that he had a majority. He had not been guilty of any illegal acts, and none were committed, so far as he had knowledge; but in the course of the taking of the testimony it developed that there were illegal methods employed and that there were fraudulent votes cast, that there were violations of the law, and of such a character as to justify the House in throwing out the votes of those precincts, and when Senator Shafroth, then sitting as a Member of the House, discovered those facts he did the honorable thing and at the bar of the House tendered his resignation.

Mr. President, I am very anxious that Senators shall understand the organization of this committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I was a Member of the House of Representatives at the time of the occurrence of the incident to which the Senator has just referred, though I was not on the committee, but was somewhat familiar with what occurred. The investigation showed that the sitting Member, Mr. Shafroth, did not receive a majority of the votes cast. In the investigation a great many things developed and some illegal votes were found to have been cast and were thrown out, and when a fair canvass was made of the result it was found that Mr. Shafroth was not elected. He did a very honorable thing. When that was discovered and he was convinced of it himself he simply asked the House to vote the other man in, because he was convinced that he had not been elected.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I had spoken from memory and had not looked at the record of that case for a long time, and I am greatly obliged to the Senator from Nebraska for giving a fuller statement of the facts.

In the report which has been filed by the minority we give the references to the record or the bill of exceptions sustaining the statements of fact which we make in the report, and I want Senators to remember that Mr. J. G. Hayden testified that a Mr. Frederick Cody called on him in Washington early in 1918 and discussed the Newberry candidacy. He told Mr. Hayden that he came representing Newberry. He offered Hayden a large salary to take up the work of managing Newberry's campaign. There is no denial of that, so far as I now recall. This is doubly proven by the undisputed fact that Mr. Cody finally induced Mr. Hayden to go to New York. He did go, and there he met Mr. Newberry and had a talk with him about taking over the management of the campaign.

Mr. Newberry renewed the offer which Mr. Cody had made, and Mr. Hayden declined to take the job, personally advising Mr. Newberry that he was against running a barrel campaign. Mr. Newberry said to him that if he could not get the Senatorship without a large expenditure of money he did not want it. Cody was Mr. Newberry's representative in all his work of organizing the campaign, as is shown by the record; and the references to the record will be found in the report.

Mr. Allan Templeton, who later became the chairman of the committee, was the business associate of Mr. Newberry. At the time they were largely interested in a corporation, which corporation had contracts with the Government. Mr. Templeton says he went to New York frequently. Mr. Templeton stated:

In the winter or spring of 1917-18 Newberry said to me, "A number of my friends have asked me to run for the United States Senate."

That was the first Mr. Templeton had heard about this, though a business associate.

Newberry said, "If I should decide to run, I hope you will interest yourself in my candidacy." Templeton asked in what way he could assist. He said he would be willing to have a business man's committee in Detroit. He later became the general chairman of the committee. Every check which was drawn by John Newberry was drawn to the order of Templeton, except a few which were drawn to "Cash."

Paul King was selected as the executive chairman of the committee. Paul King was waited upon in the city of Detroit by Templeton and some others. They urged Mr. King to take the chairmanship. Without going into all of the details, Mr. King later on went to New York, and there had a conference with Mr. Newberry.

Now I shall proceed to point out the direct connection of Mr. Newberry with Mr. Templeton and the organization of this committee.

On March 13, A. A. Templeton, from Detroit, wired Newberry at the Hotel Gotham, New York, as follows:

Have spent two days in conference with Cody men from out in the State and city. Everyone thinks, including Frank Blair, that Paul King quite necessary. King will be in New York Saturday and Sunday this week; Mr. Blair next week. Report satisfactory progress.

Later on Mr. King went to New York, and he had the conversation with Newberry which I related on yesterday, about the amount of expenditures in the campaign of Senator Townsend, and later on as to what it would probably cost Mr. Newberry, because he was not acquainted in the State, and he placed the figure at possibly $50,000.

After this talk Mr. King goes back to his home city, and finally decides to become a member of the committee. He is invited to take this chairmanship. He goes to New York and consults with the principal before he does take it.

I shall not take the time to discuss all of the various subordinates in this committee, but Mr. Charles A. Floyd was afterwards selected by Mr. King as the secretary of the committee, and, without taking the time to refer to the record, you will find that Mr. King said that Mr. Newberry approved Floyd's selection for the place.

Under those circumstances, who was the moving spirit in the organization of that committee? Who was it who first called Mr. Templeton's attention to it? No one but Mr. Newberry, the candidate.

Mr. President, if we will examine further into the record, we will find that Mr. Newberry was not idle. He was busy with his campaign. This record shows that more than 50,000 letters were dictated and sent to Mr. Newberry by this committee for his signature and for his mailing. That he did. The purpose of it, of course, was to show that the letters were from Mr. Newberry personally, and if you will look into this report you will find that Mr. Newberry complained rather earnestly because of the carelessness of some of the stenographers in not writing the letters upon letterheads which would fit the envelopes.

Form letters were sent to Mr. Newberry for his approval. He made certain interlineations and suggestions, so that they would appear rather as personal letters, personally dictated by Mr. Newberry, and they were returned. Of course, he suggested in one of these letters that he did not want to offend Mr. King. I am not using the exact words, but it was something to that effect.

Mr. President, there was not a single step taken in the activities of this committee which was not submitted to Mr. Newberry, either before it was carried out or afterwards, so far as the record shows. At the same time, I should say, as I want to be entirely fair, that Mr. King said, "Yes; I kept him informed about everything, but they were my actions."

Mr. President, Mr. King went out to that State in which there are 83 counties. They had an organization in every county, such as had never existed before. He would go from one place to another and make daily reports to Mr. Newberry as to the men he had seen, as to the kind of letters that should be written to them. All of that was done, and if Senators will examine the record further they will find that he was so scientific in his methods that he sent a map or plat of the State of Michigan designating in one color the counties in which the vote was favorable to Mr. Newberry, in another color those where there was perhaps a lukewarmness, and in another color those where he anticipated there would be some opposition. Mr. Newberry in writing to this very efficient chairman, Mr. King, said to him, "I devour your reports."

The record shows that there were 500 newspapers and more in the State of Michigan. Nearly 500 of them carried advertisements of Newberry. Mr. King said in one of his letters to Mr. Newberry that 201 of these newspapers "are actively supporting your candidacy." The inference is that the advertising had something to do with it. The very witnesses that he consulted said to him, "Why, you are not known personally to a thousand people," and the report of the majority of the committee in that connection states:

The name Truman H. Newberry was practically unknown throughout the State, although he had been Assistant Secretary of the Navy and for a very short time the Secretary of the Navy of the United States.

A man who had held the exalted position of Secretary of the Navy and of Assistant Secretary of the Navy was scarcely known in the State.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. He was Secretary of the Navy for four or five months, from November to March, I believe. He was a candidate in Michigan for the Republican nomination to Congress against the present Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Denby, at one time.

Mr. POMERENE. I thank the Senator. Notwithstanding all of these political activities he was said to be scarcely known.

Mr. Newberry on March 7 wrote to Mr. King:

If not too much trouble I should be glad to have a letter from you as often as you find time and inclination to write. I hope you will be able to come down occasionally to go over matters in general or one thing in particular that needs immediate attention.

What does that mean? Why is Mr. Newberry so insistent upon having these frequent reports? Why is it that he wants these personal interviews? Why is it that he wants Mr. King to come down to New York and go to all of that expense? I have an intimate acquaintance with one Senator, at least, who could not afford to pay for very many of such trips from his own State to New York.

Throughout the campaign the managers at various times went to New York to meet Mr. Newberry and to revise their plans and adopt new plans. Mr. King said:

I consulted with Commander Newberry from time to time upon various matters connected with the campaign, but I did as my judgment dictated.

Under their plan of campaign the committee prepared thousands and thousands of personal letters. I have referred to that. No man appears to have performed any services in the campaign, even to the extent of signing the petition of Newberry for Newberry's nomination, without a personal letter from Mr. Newberry. They had these men active throughout the State getting signatures to the petitions, which were necessary under the primary laws before he could be registered as a candidate. Why, Mr. President, it offends the intelligence of the Senate, when we know these facts, even to claim that that was a voluntary committee, that Mr. Newberry had nothing to do with it.

During the time that Mr. King was on the stand he was asked this question:

What was the reason why you should talk with him and confer with him and report to him about everything except the financing?

Mr. KING. Because, as I say, the money was forthcoming from Detroit. There was never any question about it. There was simply a question, Senator, when anything came up to be done—the question in my mind was whether it was a good thing to do; and if it was a good thing to do, I did it. The question of expenses did not come into my mind at all. It was a question of whether it was a good thing to do or not, whether it would help the campaign along or not. If it were a good thing to do, I did it regardless of expense.

Now, just think of that.

If it were not a good thing to do, I did not do it.

Here we had, as we thought, a Federal statute and a State statute limiting expenditures, and yet the chairman of Mr. Newberry's committee comes before the committee and says, "If it were a good thing, in my judgment, I did it regardless of expense. I did not consult Mr. Newberry because the finances were taken care of in Detroit." You know the reason why, and so do I know the reason why, they did not talk any more about the finances than to say "It will cost you possibly $50,000." King was a lawyer. His law partner was his legal adviser. He paid him a fee of $500 to advise him. The fact was that they did not want to get Mr. Newberry on record too closely in his knowledge of the finances. That is the reason why.

Whose campaign was this? Why, Mr. President, in Michigan there is a distinguished son of that State, Gov. Warner, so prominent because of his splendid character and the services he has rendered to his people that three times he was elected governor. He had an ambition to become the candidate of the Republican Party for the United States Senate. There was a good deal of talk about it. King and Newberry did not want him to get into the race, and his candidacy was the subject of some correspondence between King and Newberry. Mr. Newberry on April 13, 1913, wrote to Mr. King, his manager, as follows:

I am glad Mr. Warner is scared out for the present, and as long as we keep up our publicity work at full pressure it will be harder and harder for any new man to get any kind of a start that will make it seem worth while for him to be a serious candidate.

Whose publicity? The committee's publicity? No. King's publicity? No. "Our publicity." To whom is he writing? He is writing to Mr. King. "If we keep up our campaign of publicity in 500 papers with unlimited funds at our command it will not be easy for a new man to get into the race." Why,

Mr. President, if all of the Senators in this Chamber were to be confronted by a campaign of this character in their respective States with unlimited funds against them, two-thirds of the Senators here could not win honestly and honorably a seat in this Chamber.

To show how this worked out, on May 23 he wrote again to Mr. King.

MY DEAR PAUL: I return herewith the draft letters with a few notations. Please be assured that these were not made with any intent to criticize, and only as a suggestion.

When you finally settle on the forms, please send me an index descriptive of the people to whom the various letters are intended to be sent, together with clean copies of the forms you finally decide to use.

If in your opinion I should, by the use of these letters, now declare myself to be a candidate under the primary law, would it not terminate our present plan of publicity?

Now let us analyze that last sentence.

If I should now declare myself to be a candidate under the primary law, would it not terminate our present plan of publicity?

Why, "our present plan of publicity" was to have large advertisements inserted in 500 papers, and he is afraid that if he now announces his candidacy it will terminate that plan. Did he have a vision of the Michigan primary law or of the Federal law which limited expenses? What else could he have had in mind? The record will show that at other times and places he said they were in to the finish and they would not get out of the fight.

There are other letters in the record to which I might refer, but I shall not take the time, which show the intimacy of this relationship. There was scarcely a thing done or movement made that was not reported to Mr. Newberry, and some of the things he himself suggested. He suggested how to handle the iron interests in northern Michigan and how he would get in touch with certain officials in New York. He was going to handle that. He did handle it, as the record will show. I shall not take the time of the Senate to go into that more fully.

But again, on May 18, Mr. King wrote to Mr. Newberry suggesting another conference, and what is it about? Why, the platform. He said:

I presume that we ought to get together again soon and settle some of the pending questions, notably that of the platform.

And yet this was an independent committee. It was so independent that Mr. Newberry could not even announce his principles without consulting the committee; and yet we are led to believe by the majority that he had nothing to do with his campaign; that it was conducted by a voluntary committee of friends. Again, on May 20, Mr. Newberry wrote to Mr. King:

Replying to your letter of May 18, I have to look over the proposed forms of letters, and if there are any minor changes that will make them seem more like the letters I would write myself, I will make them in pencil.

He was not satisfied with Mr. King's letters. Oh, Mr. Newberry was not a novice in politics; he knew that if he would write the letter, giving to it a personal touch, it would be more pleasing to the recipient.

I shall call attention to some things which were being done by this committee which Mr. Newberry did not approve; but before I go to that, let me remind Senators that under the Michigan primary law a Republican can be a candidate for nomination both at the Democratic and the Republican primaries, or a Democrat may be a candidate at both the Republican and Democratic primaries.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is true in many other States.

Mr. POMERENE. That is true in many other States, as I am advised.

There was some talk some time in May about the possibility of Mr. Ford being a candidate, though he did not decide to be a candidate until June 14. The Newberry campaign committee conceived that if there would be only one candidate for the nomination on the Democratic ticket, and Mr. Newberry would announce himself a candidate on the Republican ticket, likely more Democrats would go into the Republican primary, and that would endanger Mr. Newberry's chances. So a very smart, cunning, artful politician, by the name of William Mickel, went to one of the substantial Democrats, Mr. James Helme, and urged him to be a candidate at the Democratic primaries for the Democratic nomination for Senator. He so played upon his ambitions that Mr. Helme decided to be a candidate. Mr. Mickel proposed to pay the expenses of Mr. Helme if he would be a candidate, and Mr. Helme got money from the Newberry committee, which was turned over in the interest of the candidacy of Mr. Helme, the reason for it being that they wanted to keep the Democrats in the Democratic primary and thereby prevent the nomination of Mr. Ford in the Republican primary. Some $300 or $400—my recollection is that it was $361—were expended in this way, but be it said to Mr. Newberry's credit that when he learned of it he disapproved it; he did not want that done. However, that demonstrates conclusively that he was trying to dictate the policies of his committee, does it not? What other explanation can be made of it? Again on June 15—he had just heard that Ford had entered the lists—Mr. Newberry writes to Mr. King:

The unheard of developments in Mr. Ford's case really require pages of comment, and I am going to hope that after 10 days or more you will come down alone or with Allan [Templeton], when we can give some time to a thorough review of the situation as it exists then and plan for the future.

Yet it is claimed that he had nothing to do with this committee; that it was a voluntary committee. Mr. Ford made some little stir; he was the cloud on the horizon, and perhaps was going to dim the chances of Mr. Newberry; and so Mr. Newberry wants 10 days for reflection, and then he will have a conference "and plan for the future." In one of his letters—I do not have it before me now—I believe he says "let us sit tight in the boat."

Mr. President, can there be any doubt that this was Mr. Newberry's committee? Now, let me call attention to some other of these activities. If I could persuade Senators to read this record or to read the reports, I would stop now; but I have such a conception of the importance of the position I occupy as a member of the committee reporting the pending resolution that it will not be my fault if Senators do not have the opportunity to know the facts.

Let me remind Senators, so that they will understand the pertinency of the testimony which I am about to recite, that by the corrupt practices act a candidate is prohibited from giving money or hiring workers or having solicitors paid for the purpose of soliciting votes, and the legislature has said, "It is our intention to stop the practice of hiring workers at the polls or before the primaries."

Let me remind the Senators also that the corrupt practices act requires that the name of the man who receives the money shall be entered on the report. I am going to show that money, literally by the thousands of dollars, was paid to men who were engaged in political activities—organization, work, hiring workers, and so forth—and yet their names do not appear in the report filed. Senators may be somewhat mystified by some of the testimony of Mr. Floyd. It will be remembered he referred to certain large checks which were made payable to him, and they are charged to him on that account. There are many thousands of dollars involved in these checks, but I think perhaps there were only four or five checks all told, and they are entered on the account, let us say, possibly, as amounts paid to Mr. Floyd; but Mr. Floyd used these thousands of dollars to employ Jones and Smith and Barney and everybody else in every section of the State, and their names do not appear on the report. Mr. King says they were not content with the ordinary voter; they wanted to get substantial citizens; and so they had judges; they had lawyers; they had a State senator; they had other men on their pay roll, paying them from $200 to $300 and $400 a month. Yet they say they complied with the law. Let us see about that.

There was Raymond Glocheski, a Polish lawyer at Grand Rapids, who was hired to work all over the State. He received $600 in salary and $400 for traveling expenses.

His name does not appear in the report of expenditures which was filed. Paul King said in speaking of Glocheski:

Then I assigned other men whom I did not consider field men in the same sections, men like Mr. Glocheski, to work with certain nationalities of people or certain classes of people. Mr. Glocheski did work among the Polish people of the State. He visited the Polish settlements around the State, especially in Presque Isle County and Manistee County, and there are a good many Polish citizens in Kent County (Grand Rapids).

Q. Were they all under pay?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. King says they were all under pay.

Q. Did you have a man or men to work with the fraternal societies?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under pay?—A. Yes, sir. (R., 516.)

What is that but the ordinary political campaign work that used to prevail in many of the States.

Again Charles Tufts, of Scottsville, Mich., was hired by Paul King and Charles Floyd to work for Newberry. He received $1,600—$200 a month for his services and also in addition his expenses. Tufts was a State senator. He stated that he went to Detroit on summons of Paul King and then he proceeded to tell his story:

He told me he (Paul King) was anxious to see Mr. Newberry win out and requested that I work for him—

Note the words "work for him"— and I discussed with him plans for my work in behalf of Mr. Newberry, and suggested that I travel over a part of the State, going from county to county, and attempt to line up the various county officers; that at the conclusion of my conference with Mr. King, he told me to go ahead with the work and to send to headquarters for expenses as needed and when I had finished my entire work for Newberry to send in a bill for my expenses. That in accordance with plans made in my conversation with King, I worked the following counties: Mason, Newaygo, Iosco, Alpena, Cheboygan, Presque Isle, Grand Traverse, Manistee, Lake, and Montmorency. That I went to see the county officers of each of said counties, and if they were not lined up with anyone, tried to get them to work for Mr. Newberry, but made no financial agreement because I had no authority for making such agreements. That in Alpena County, A. A. Wentz traveled with me and assisted me in my work for Mr. Newberry; I paid his expenses, but later he told me he was paid so much a week for his services; Wentz and I went together about 10 days or 2 weeks. That E. O. McLean, of Ludington, Mich., a newspaper man, was employed by the Newberry organization to line up the marines—fishermen, life-savers, etc., and write a number of articles for Newberry for publication; that McLean and I traveled the coast towns together for the purpose of lining up the vote and talked Newberry to the men we met. * * * That my expenses in doing my work for Newberry were heavy at times, for when I would run into a place where things were right, I would buy meals, cigars, etc., for parties of men, and in accordance with my agreement with King I was not limited in my expense, and I spent freely. * * *

Now note this—

None of those expenses are permitted under the Michigan law; and yet this committee files this report and tells us with effrontery that it is a true report, and the original books and records are either burned or destroyed, or at least they are not forthcoming. I do not know how far statements of that kind are going to be accepted on faith by the Senate.

A man by the name of Rollo E. Prescott, a printer by occupation, received $750 salary and about $600 expense money, his work lying chiefly in his own county; but he also organized two or three adjoining counties. He testified that he called upon one B. F. Reed to come to Harrisville to talk over the Newberry proposition:

He wanted me to organize Alcona County for Newberry and requested that I get in touch with Paul King in Detroit. I went to Detroit and talked with King. King outlined the plans and requested me to take care of Alcona County. * * * King asked what I would take to do the work outlined and suggested $150 per month salary and an unlimited expense account. * * * He further agreed to leave the matter of organization entirely to me. * * * In accordance with the agreement, I began upon my work immediately and drew five months' salary at $150 a month in addition to expenses. * * * That in my work in behalf of Newberry I organized Alcona County. I saw George W. Burt, probate judge, and obtained his consent to act as chairman. I acted as secretary, and as part of my work I attempted, so far as possible, to get the supervisors to take charge of the work in each township—and told them that if they would put in a day's work now and then I would make it right with them. However, neither Burt nor the supervisors were paid any money by me, and their only activity was to circulate literature which I furnished them.

Now, think of that—

Mr. Prescott's name does not appear upon this record.

Mr. Edward O. McLean is a very interesting witness. King asked him, if he was not affiliated with any other candidate, if he could work for them in the Newberry campaign:

I told him that I could work. * * * Mr. King asked me what my time would be worth, and I told him $200 per month, and he agreed to pay that and all expenses.

He said he took up work among the marine voters, urging them to support Newberry, and that he worked at this until primary election, about three and a half months:

My total expense was between $500 and $1,200 and my salary amounted to $500, and that he quit work primary day. He said that Paul King wrote him early in June that thereafter he was to deal with Charles Floyd, and that he did so and was paid by Floyd. He said that he came to Grand Rapids to report every two or three weeks to Floyd.

I am not going to read the rest of this memorandum that I have, but it is the usual political work.

J. Scott Hunter, a furniture salesman, attended a smoker at the home of Milton Oakman, a political boss in Detroit. He went to Newberry headquarters and met Mr. B. Frank Emery. B. Frank Emery is the witness we wanted, but who hiked to the Canadian woods.

He asked me at that time to assist in the campaign, but there was no transaction between us. I returned to headquarters a few days afterwards by appointment. At that time he gave me $300 in currency. He requested me to work for Mr. Newberry's interest with the $300, and he gave me a lot of literature, buttons, etc., to distribute. I took the literature and buttons and I expended this $300. I spent it around advertising Mr. Newberry from one place to another, buying drinks and cigars. I spent the entire $300 that way. * * * After the $300 was gone I paid more visits to the headquarters. * * * Mr. Emery delivered a second $300 to me in cash. I did not give him a receipt. It was given to me for the same purpose. There was nothing mentioned in regards to it. I supposed it was meant for services. I spent it the same way as the other; that is, for liquor and cigars and treating through the city.

Zalie Clago, a deputy sheriff, was employed at $300 a month. Now note a paragraph from his testimony:

He said that when the matter first came up Mr. Oakman asked him if he would like to take a vacation for three or four months with pay and take charge of the Wayne County office of the Newberry campaign, and said that his duty, his first duty at least, was to look after the organization of the factory employees. That Milton Oakman had charge of all Wayne County, and meetings were held in the county clerk's office on some occasions. That all precinct leaders and ward men were in Oakman's office at times. * * * Among his first duties was the perfection of the organization in factories. He said he took out petitions and visited each factory himself. * * * He also had 20 cases of beer, which he paid for himself, and the meeting was held on April 22, 1918, the Newberry meeting.

There is nothing about that in this record.

William M. Connelly was a State senator. I am not going into all of this, but he said he was to receive $1,200 from Floyd. He said that he hired some men to distribute literature and he made speeches; at one time he hired a man and made a speech in Nunica. He said later he saw Charles Floyd, and Floyd told him to make up an expense account of something less than $200. You will find, as you go through this record, that some of these men who were active up there would advise those out in the field to make out their expense accounts for less than they really were.

Terry T. Corliss was an employee of the State auditor's office. He testified as follows:

Paul King asked me if I could do anything for Newberry in Tuscola, and I said I would be glad to do so. Afterwards I met him on telephone call in his Detroit office, and Mr. King wished me to go through the State, various parts of the State, and organize county committees and go ahead with the organization a good deal along the lines that I saw fit, and at that time I said I could not afford to do it for nothing, and he said, "That is all right; we will compensate you for your work." He said, "How much are you getting now?" I said, "Fifteen hundred a year." He said, "Well, that is all right; I will pay you $75 a week and your expenses to carry on this campaign." I did work for about 21 weeks at that salary, receiving about $2,275. * * *

Not many of us can afford to conduct a campaign like that.

Frank P. Bohn, a physician and banker, of Luce County, Mich., received $150. He testified that one payment was of $100, and one of $50. Now, note this, because it is on the subject of hired workers, who are prohibited by the statute:

I expended further $125 for workers distributing literature and getting the vote out. Also, had a list of voters in the townships made, which I used. I employed about 15 men to work primary day and paid them $5 apiece, 2 of them $10 who worked before primary day. * * * I told them to get the boys out to distribute literature, and do what they could for the interest of Mr. Newberry. * * * I had told Mr. McGregor that it would take from $100 to $150 to take care of the work. The men selected had worked for him (Bohn) in politics before.

There is your political worker.

That I did not know who they were supporting before I hired them.

Money talks in Michigan.

My purpose was to get them to support Newberry. I simply asked them if they were not tied up to support Newberry. It was my intention to get their support and vote for Newberry. I did not know who they were for for Senator.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Does not that testimony bear the construction that he bought those people for $5 apiece?

Mr. POMERENE. It is suspiciously near it.

Here is one William E. Rice. Mr. Newberry was in the Spanish-American War, and the Spanish-American War veterans organized bolo clubs throughout the country. William E. Rice testified that Charles Floyd came to him and asked him to become identified with the Newberry campaign. They had some talk, and made a contract. The contract was that he was to do certain work, and that he was to organize bolo clubs throughout the State of Michigan in connection with the Spanish-American War veterans' camps. He went to various cities where these camps were, and did organize the bolo clubs for Newberry. He received $50 a month and his expenses. His name does not appear in this record.

George C. Walsh testified:

The defendant, Guy Ingalls, during the primary of 1918, delivered to me $100, and requested me to do something in behalf of Mr. Newberry. I spent between $27 and $30 of the $100. I interviewed a number of men who worked for me, and I hired a man by the name of Peter Connors. I gave him $10 and asked him to distribute cards and buttons.

He kept the balance.

Mel Deo, of Lapeer County, a druggist, testified that Paul King asked him to take the chairmanship of the campaign for Lapeer County. He says:

Paul King asked us what the expenses would be. I told him just the expenses, and King gave me $100, which I divided with Carrigan. I spent it treating the fellows. I told them it was on Newberry, and this was at a picnic and other places of that kind.

Frank L. Covert, a circuit judge, said that he employed some men in each township. He says:

We have 25 townships and probably about 25 men; used a total of $250. We each retained $100 for our expenses. He said that $300 was left with him by Chilson, and I turned over $200 of it to Mr. Seeley. After that I understood about $200 more was given to Mr. Seeley. I just allowed myself the $100.

August Field was the manager of a hotel. He had some people at his hotel and served them with lunch and made a charge for it. I will not go into all of that; but he says:

I was canvassing the county to see people in the interests of Newberry. At the close of the primary campaign or the general election I had a talk with Floyd over the telephone. I says, "You know how much money you gave me, and I think I have spent it all; can't you make a report?" He asked me to make it. He said to put in about $120. As near as I recollect, I did make a report of $120 instead of $600; but I do not remember what items I listed in it. * * *

James Fisher says that James McGregor, another of these field men or men that were sent out, came to see him and gave him $250 and $100 for Mr. Jones, of Ontonagon County, and $100 for Mr. Crevezza, of Keweenaw County. He afterwards gave him $500.

Among other things this witness says that he gave $80 to a Finnish paper, $40 to a Polish paper; he paid a couple of Frenchmen for work; also to several men in and about Laurium amounts from $10 to $50.

Mr. Fisher further testified that after being subpoenaed he went to Detroit to see Paul King and Mr. McGregor.

He stated the reason he went to see those gentlemen was to find out the line of testimony which would be required before the grand jury and Mr. McGregor told him that he (McGregor) had made his returns for him at $250 and also returned the $200 he gave him for Crevezza and Jones. That when he was before the grand jury, to say nothing about any moneys with the exception of the $250, or said that in substance. Mr. Fisher also stated that he received $500 from Mr. McGregor as a gratuity.

Frank O. Gilbert stated that he was employed as a grand lecturer of the Masonic Lodge. He testified that he was asked by Mr. James McGregor if he would do what he could to help on the Newberry campaign in talking to men that he saw in his trips through the State, and he said that he would, and he was so employed by Mr. McGregor at that time at $50 a month.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. In all these various cases of the employment of workers the Senator has been reading, is there any question but that the action was a violation of section 45 of the Michigan primary act?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I would not say that all of the money which was thus expended was spent in violation of the law, but the hiring of the workers was a violation of the law.

Mr. KENYON. Where they go out and employ workers?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Will somebody please explain, if he can, why it is not a violation of the law? I have been waiting to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator will not hear any explanation that will satisfy him.

Mr. KENYON. I do not believe there can be a satisfactory explanation.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator would like to have an explanation, I would be glad to give it.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield for the explanation.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to hear it.

Mr. SPENCER. The only workers who were used in that campaign—the Senator calls them workers—were men employed in connection with meetings, and the spreading of literature, and the conducting of the interests of the campaign in the several localities, which every man on this floor is familiar with, which are not prohibited by the statute of Michigan, nor by the statutes of my State, nor by the statutes of any State, so far as I know, unless by the State of Ohio, as was mentioned by the Senator the other day. There was not a man hired to do a single unlawful thing. There were men in every county of Michigan to look after the interests of the candidacy of Mr. Newberry. It was a campaign that was well planned and well carried out, but in the doing of it there was not a single thing that was either illegal in law or improper in morals.

Mr. POMERENE. Is the Senator through?

Mr. SPENCER. Yes; I am through.

Mr. KENYON and Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. SPENCER. I understood the Senator's question to be as to whether workers had been hired to do anything that was illegal or immoral.

Mr. KENYON. I meant illegal under the statute. I say that the employment of men to go out and work, campaigning, electioneering, soliciting men to help a party who was engaged in the campaign was illegal under the Michigan statute, and this record is full of evidence of things of that kind.

Mr. SPENCER. Section 45 of the Michigan statute, to which the Senator is referring, has two divisions. In the first place, it contains a prohibition against the bribery or corruption of voters, and provides a punishment for a violation, and then, carrying out that main idea, it provides against the hiring of workers or others in the primary or the election not to work: in the interest of a candidate, but against the doing of the things which had been previously prohibited in the statute. As I said the other day, if, for example, I lived in the State of Michigan and I wanted on election day to go around among my friends, or in the office building in which I was located, and ask those whom I knew or with whom I came in contact as to whether they had voted, and if they had not, to urge them to vote, and to vote for the candidate I thought ought to be elected, the Senator would not for a moment insist that I had done anything illegal or improper under the law of Michigan, which he now has in his hand, would he?

Mr. KENYON. That would be perfectly proper.

Mr. SPENCER. To go a step further, if I, unable to go myself, if you like, should say to another, "I want you to-day to go through this office building, and I want you to see if the men in this building have generally voted, and I want you to distribute these cards and to ask them to be sure to go to the polls, and, if they see proper, to vote for the candidate whom I am supporting," does the Senator say that then I would be a criminal under the laws of the State of Michigan?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has very skillfully left out of his question the one thing which would make him a criminal. If the Senator did that for pay, he would be a criminal under the statute of Michigan.

Mr. SPENCER. I have already said that I hired the man to do it. Is the man whom I hired a criminal, and I not a criminal?

Mr. KENYON. Both of you would be criminals under the Michigan statute. I can not understand how as good a lawyer as the Senator from Missouri can claim anything else. This is the way the statute reads:

Or on account of agreeing to do or have done any campaign work, electioneering—

Which that would be—

Soliciting votes for such candidate on primary day or prior thereto.

How can the Senator claim that such acts would not be criminal under that statute?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the interpretation which the Senator from Iowa, a distinguished lawyer and a fair man, puts upon that has never been put upon it in the State of Michigan, and I submit that it is unreasonable and unfair. If the Senator were right, if that had ever been the interpretation which had ever been put upon it in the State of Michigan, where under the law any voter can make complaint of it, why was it that not a single voter, not a single official in the entire State of Michigan ever raised the question?

Mr. KENYON. I am amazed that they did not.

Mr. SPENCER. It was because that interpretation has never been put upon that statute in Michigan.

Mr. KENYON. That interpretation goes back—

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. KENYON. Let me answer that remark of the Senator from Missouri. I do not know about the statutes of Michigan, but that statute is merely a reiteration of the common law, which was enacted by the British Parliament in regard to corrupt practices as far back as 1846.

Mr. SPENCER. Is that the rule in Iowa?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; you can not go and hire a man for such a purpose.

Mr. SPENCER. Can you hire a man to distribute tickets?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes; you can do that; but you can not hire a man to go out and solicit votes.

Mr. SPENCER. What is the distribution of tickets but the solicitation of a vote?

Mr. KENYON. I do not think it is the solicitation of a vote.

Mr. SPENCER. What is it?

Mr. KENYON. The Michigan statute is clear. What does the Senator say about this word "electioneering"?

Mr. SPENCER. In the State of Michigan or in the State of Iowa is it illegal, in the Senator's judgment, for a man either to distribute cards or to ask his friends to vote for a candidate? Certainly that is electioneering.

Mr. KENYON. It is illegal under the statute of Michigan to pay men to go out and electioneer. I do not care about what the rule is in Missouri or in Iowa; I am talking about Michigan. What does the word "electioneering" mean?

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator reads the section through, he will find that it means electioneering for the purpose of securing a vote for or a vote against a candidate by means of bribery or corruption. That is the gist of that section.

Mr. KENYON. You must go to the man in the building and say, "Here is $10"—

Mr. SPENCER. That is a crime.

Mr. KENYON. That is the crime?

Mr. SPENCER. That is a crime. But if a man goes to a building and asks a man to go to the polls and vote, that is not a crime.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have a great affection for the Senator from Missouri, but if that is his view of the Michigan law, I do not wonder at the report which has been filed here. If he is correct, his report is correct; but I leave to any lawyer who will erase all partisanship in the matter to read that statute and draw any other conclusion than that the act of going out and soliciting people for votes, electioneering, is a crime, and I agree with the Senator, I am amazed that all these precious scoundrels who have taken money and gone around the State creating an atmosphere, working in Masonic lodges and working in railroad unions for pay, have not been prosecuted.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will permit me for a moment, does the Senator from Iowa realize the proposition he is advancing, that it is wrong in law, under the statute of Michigan, for a man to employ another to distribute information, or to solicit the presence at the polls of men, or to ask them to vote for a candidate, and to explain the reasons why he asks them? It is fundamental in our form of Government that that thing always has been done, and ought to be done, and always will be done. There is nothing wrong in law about it, and there is nothing improper in morals about it. It is only when you interject into it some improper method, corruption or bribery or promise, that there is anything wrong with it. I have a perfect right to hire a man in the State of Ohio to advocate the excellencies of the distinguished Senator from Ohio—

Mr. POMERENE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SPENCER. When he comes to run again; and the distinguished Senator from Ohio will neither call me a criminal nor call the man whom I hire a criminal if what he does is not a criminal or a wrongful act. I submit that common sense must be used in the interpretation of that statute. It means the electioneering or the canvassing or the asking of a man to vote by improper influence or method, as by the promise of money.

Mr. KENYON. Why does it not say so, then?

Mr. SPENCER. If it is read from beginning to the end, that is what it says, to my mind, and, I submit, to the mind of any other man. If it said anything to the contrary, do you not suppose there would have been proceedings in the State of Michigan? Do you not suppose that if what is contended by the Senator is correct, there would have been some convictions? Do you not suppose some man, in this intense, bitter campaign, would have instituted, by information, some kind of criminal proceeding? Yet out of 480,000 voters in the State of Michigan there was not one who complained, there was not a prosecuting officer who filed an information.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I just wanted to say that there was a prosecution of Mr. Newberry going on in the United States court under this very law, and very naturally the matter had cooled off while that prosecution was going on. If there had not been a violation of the national law also, no doubt proceedings would have been had in the State court, because it must be presumed that there are some honest men in the State of Michigan.

Mr. SPENCER. The prosecution in the United States court did not commence until weeks after the election was over.

Mr. McKELLAR. But everybody knew it was to come.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator knows that the time when the prosecution is had, if election wrongs occur, is the time when the matter is hot, immediately after the election, and if there had been any complaint in the State of Michigan it would have been immediately following the election; but there was never a suggestion of such a prosecution, and the Federal prosecution did not commence until weeks later. My impression is that there was not even a beginning of it until some time in the following year.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Idaho rose first, and I yield first to him.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Missouri has stated that it was not in violation of law nor in violation of morals to hire men to work at the polls; that it only became a crime, or immoral, when they did something in the way of corrupting a voter by bribing him, and so on. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that at common law the hiring of men to work at the polls, regardless of the question of actual bribing or purchasing votes, was a crime which invalidated the election. The common law went so far as to invalidate an election if drinks were distributed, or anything of that kind, at the polls, regardless of it being administered to a particular individual or a particular voter. If the candidate provided means in any way to draw the attention of the voters to the fact of his candidacy, it invalidated the election.

I do not understand how the Senator can argue that this is not a violation of the statute unless you corrupt a man. If you corrupt a voter, you have committed a crime, regardless of whether you got any money for it or not. If you corrupt a voter, your crime is complete, whether you were paid for corrupting him or not. My idea is that this statute is intended to incorporate the principle of the common law in the statutes of Michigan, to wit, to make it impossible for a man to hire men to work for him in the way of soliciting votes or at the polls for pay.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio let me make an explanation? He has been very good about yielding.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator from Idaho has concluded his statement, I shall be very glad to yield further.

Mr. BORAH. I have concluded.

Mr. SPENCER. The common law took effect as it existed in 1776 or thereabouts. I undertake to say to the Senator that he will have to go back to that time if he wants any foundation for his proposition. I undertake to say to the Senator there is not a State in the Union in the last 100 years of our history where there has been a prosecution for the thing which now the Senator says is improper, and what is that thing? That a man with a pure purpose and without any bribery or corruption is to be sent to jail because for his day's wage he goes around in a community soliciting men that they shall vote and not forget to go to the polls.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri overlooks the proposition that the common law contemplated the punishment of anyone who for hire solicited votes for another party. It was the idea of the common law that a man should cast his vote without the influence of anyone who had a material or sinister purpose behind him.

When I spoke of the common law I did not speak of the common law of the United States. I meant the common law of England. This statute simply embodies what was the well-known practice and principle of the common law for many years before we became a government.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Not only the common law but the law of the State of Missouri, to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator, so provided. In the case of Keating v. Hyde (23 Mo. Appeals, p. 555) this question is discussed and the distinction is drawn. In that case a contract intended to influence a primary, though not falling within the expressed prohibition of any statute, was held void because contrary to public policy.

Mr. SPENCER. That is, there was no law against it.

Mr. KENYON. The court said this, and I wish the Senator would listen to it:

There is a clear distinction between the purchase of services to be devoted only to an advertising of the fact that one is or desires to be a candidate—

That is what the Senator has been telling us, about going around the buildings—and the purchase of service to be employed in advocating his peculiar merits and eligibility, so as to influence the choice of the voter.

That is the distinction drawn by the court in the Senator's own State. Is that the highest court, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. SPENCER. No; it is not the highest court, but it is a court of eminent jurisdiction.

Mr. KENYON. Being a Missouri court, it must be a pretty good court.

Mr. SPENCER. It is a very good court.

Mr. KENYON. So Missouri is in line with the common law.

Mr. SPENCER. In that matter there is no crime, there is no wrong, there is no punishment.

Mr. KENYON. It is a corrupt practice.

Mr. POMERENE. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I will yield in just a moment. The Senator from Iowa has quoted from the Court of Appeals of the State of Missouri. Is he quoting that for the purpose of showing that the court is wrong and that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] is right, or the reverse?

Mr. KENYON. That is an embarrassing question. My regard for the Senator from Missouri and my appreciation of him as a lawyer is such that I shall have to side with him, of course, if the Senator from Ohio presses the question. But I believe the Senator from Missouri in time, when he studies the case in the court in his own State, will see the distinction that we are drawing between merely advertising the fact of a man being a candidate and the purchase of influence to have men secure votes.

Mr. SPENCER. It will be a great satisfaction to the Senator from Iowa, I know, when he reads that decision in full—he has now read only an excerpt from it, found in the brief of the counsel of Henry Ford—to learn that it does not differ from the position which I take.

Mr. KENYON. I have read it in full.

Mr. BORAH. I have twice read the decision in full. The decision simply announces the doctrine of the common law that a contract of hire to perform services with reference to securing votes or urging votes for a candidate is unmoral and therefore void.

Mr. KENYON. Is that the Missouri case?

Mr. BORAH. That is the Missouri case. It will bear reading clear through.

Mr. POMERENE. I now yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I had intended when I discuss the resolution before the Senate to go into the question of the Missouri decision in this matter. I wish to call the attention of the Senate now, however, since the discussion has been precipitated to a case later than the Keating against Hyde case, a case decided in 1920 by the same Court of Appeals of the State of Missouri. I am bound to assume that the Senator from Missouri is entirely ignorant of this decision of a court of his own State, because in view of his erudition as a lawyer and as a judge he could not possibly have known of this decision and taken the position he does take.

This was a contract not between the candidate and a party at all but between some outside parties, exactly the case he supposes, where the friend was unable or unwilling to go out himself and advocate the cause of his candidate, but employed some one else to go out and do it. It possesses some historic interest as well. I will read from the opinion as follows:

This is an action by plaintiff against defendant, the petition in two counts. In the first count it is averred that on or about February 1, 1912, a certain agreement was made or entered into by and between plaintiff and defendant to the following effect:

I am reading from Two hundred and fourth Missouri Appeals Reports, page 420, the case of Eads against Stifel, decided June 8, 1920:

Plaintiff was employed to devote his time and services to promoting the candidacy of Mr. William H. Taft for nomination as President of the United States (and of Mr. Otto F. Stifel for national committeeman for Missouri) in the various congressional districts of Missouri, and for said time and services was to receive $100 per week and the actual expenses incurred by him in carrying out the objects of his said employment.

Identically the same kind of employment in which attention has been called by the Senator from Ohio. The court further said:

Our court, in Keating v. Hyde (23 Mo. App. 555), held that a promise to pay for services rendered by another as a canvasser at a primary election to secure the promisor's nomination for an office was unlawful and void. In that case, at page 559, the court quotes section 1474, Revised Statutes, 1879, which is as follows:

"If any person shall, directly or indirectly, give or procure to be given, or engage to give any money, gift, or reward, or any office, place, or employment upon any engagement, contract, or agreement that the person to whom or to whose use or on whose behalf such gift or promise shall be made, shall, by himself or any other, procure or endeavor to procure the election of any person to any office at any election by the electors, or any public body, under the constitution or laws of this State, the person so offending shall on conviction be adjudged guilty of bribery, and punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding five years."

This is section 3722, Revised Statutes, 1889; section 2090, Revised Statutes, 1899; and section 4461, Revised Statutes, 1909.

Our court said, in Keating v. Hyde, supra, that this section had been in force since the revision of 1855, and that it is sufficient for the conclusion of our court, since it clearly indicates the policy of the State. The conclusion of our court in the Keating case was that the agreement was void as against public policy. That decision has been cited approvingly by law writers, as see notes to Exchange National Bank of Fitzgerald v. Henderson (139 Ga., 360, in 51 L. R. A., (N. S.), 551), and is amply supported by the decisions of courts of other States. These cases are so fully cited in the notes in 51 L. R. A., supra, and there commented upon that we do not think it necessary to reproduce them here. Among the cases sustaining this is Trist v. Child (21 Wall., 441), where the principle is recognized, and it was there held that a contract to take charge of a claim before Congress by personal solicitation by the agent and others supposed to have personal influence in any way with Members of Congress to procure the passage of a bill—lobbying for its passage—was void.

That is the law in the State of Missouri. It answers the question of the Senator from Missouri whether, if he hires some one to go out and advocate the election of his candidate, that man is guilty of crime.

Mr. SPENCER. Could I be punished if I did or was hired, or could he?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Both could be punished.

Mr. SPENCER. I happen to be familiar with that case. All that I said was that a contract to do that can not be enforced, and that payment under the contract can not be compelled by law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why can it not be done? Because it is against public policy.

Mr. SPENCER. But the Senator is now trying to invoke a punishment as great as the punishment which could be inflicted for any crime.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; we are not trying to convict this man of crime. I wish the Senator would bear in mind that the court held it was against public policy and void because it violated that statute, and that statute makes it a crime.

Mr. POMERENE. Is that the case of Eads against Stifel?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is.

Mr. POMERENE. I observe that the case arose in St. Louis, and I wondered whether the Senator from Missouri was sitting as the trial judge when that case came up.

Mr. SPENCER. No; I was not; but I happen to remember the case.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this diversion is very interesting and very instructive, but in view of the questions which the Senator from Missouri has asked and his position with regard to hiring workers, I am, at the expense of repetition, going to call the Senator's attention to that provision of section 45, which prohibits the hiring of men to solicit votes or do work of that kind. In the latter part of the section it is provided:

It being the intent of this clause to prohibit the prevailing practice of candidates hiring, with money and promises of positions, workers on primary day and prior thereto.

Then I wish to call the Senator's attention to this: Charles A. Floyd, the secretary of this committee, made his report to Paul King on July 27 as to conditions in 8 or 10 counties, the names of which I gave on yesterday, and he reported to him as follows:

In addition to the above and in general I have encouraged all the organizations to make as wide a distribution of literature as possible during the remaining days of the campaign.

And then follows this:

I have arranged with them also to provide for representation at each voting precinct the entire day at the primary so that throughout this whole district you can be sure that there will be at least one man and in some cases two or three giving their entire time and saying the final word.

If that does not constitute a worker at the primaries then I fail to understand the English language.

Mr. President, when this colloquy began I was about to advert to the testimony of Judge John M. Harris, for many years probate judge of Charlevoix County. He said:

Met Paul King at senatorial headquarters in Detroit, and he asked me to interest myself in the Newberry work, wishing me to organize the county committees in the immediate neighborhood in which I live, and I said I would. He offered me for that work $200 a month and my expenses, and the first thing I did was to organize the county work in my own county.

He mentions a number of men whom he engaged to act, and said:

He did not pay these men any money, but suggested their working and to have them go to Paul King and make the arrangements with him personally. He received $800 in salary and about $400 expense money. (R., 432.)

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. I have been trying to follow quite closely my colleague in his illuminating address. Can he explain how this testimony happened to be in the third person? For example, my colleague has read, "He did not pay these men any money." Who is "he"?

Mr. POMERENE. To make myself very definite I would have to refer to the original record, but as I understand it, it refers to Harris himself. That is as I understand it.

Mr. WILLIS. It is not quoted as Harris's own testimony.

Mr. POMERENE. I know, but that comes about, if the Senator will permit me—

Mr. WILLIS. I am trying to find out who is giving this testimony.

Mr. POMERENE. That is perfectly proper.

Mr. WILLIS. The same question has occurred to me a number of times. For instance, take the matter appearing on page 36, where the statement is in the third person.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator will find, if he examines the record, that it was agreed, for instance, that one man who was an attorney before the grand jury could read before the committee the testimony or notes which he had taken in the grand-jury room. I am not quite clear, but my present memory is that Judge Harris himself appeared, but in any event, if the Senator will look at the record, I think he will be able to determine that this is an abbreviated form of the testimony. I am not pretending to give the whole of it. Necessarily the Senator realizes that this is a tremendously long record.

Mr. WILLIS. I have read some of it, and I know it is so.

Mr. POMERENE. And this language has been abbreviated for the purpose of saving space and time.

Mr. WILLIS. What I am trying to develop is whether this is the direct testimony of the witness or a statement made by somebody else as to what that witness said.

Mr. POMERENE. It comes with all the sanctity of a sworn statement and is accepted as such. The details I am not quite able to give to the Senator without myself referring to the record. Judge Harris, among other things, said:

Q. Did you testify before the grand jury as follows: "Judge Harris said Mr. King told him that the financial situation during this campaign was considerably different than during the Townsend campaign, and that they had plenty of money to carry on the campaign"?—A. I said something like that.

Q. And that was true, was it not; he did tell you that?—A. I think so. (R., 431.)

Q. Did you not have some request to send in a statement of your expenditures?—A. I think I did.

Q. What did your report cover?—A. It covered the expenses in Charlevoix County.

Q. Something like $75 or $80?—A. Something like that.

Q. Your report did not cover the other $1,100, did it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You got $1,200 and you reported about how much?—A. I think it was between $70 and $80.

Q. What was the other $1,100?—A. I acted on a salary. I went around and I wrote letters covering the northern part of Michigan. (R., 427.)

Q. Well, you kept most of it as your salary of so many hundred dollars a month?—A. Yes. That was spent in this way—I traveled around some and I came into quite an orderly correspondence throughout the campaign in my office in connection with the campaign, and it was applied that way. Call it salary or whatever you want to.

Q. That is the way it was spent?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Wait a minute, was it spent; how much of that did you keep for services?—A. Well, you might say the way I figure it, I kept $800.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator tell me from what he is reading?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I am reading from the views of the minority which have been filed here.

Mr. SPENCER. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. POMERENE. What I am now reading the Senator will find on page 38.

Mr. SPENCER. Then, perhaps, I can locate it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to return to what is perhaps an unpleasant subject, but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] has stated that if I would read this case fully I might gather a different idea of it. It would be rather presumptuous, of course, for me to try to instruct the learned Senator from Missouri as to the laws of Missouri, and I do not like to try to do that, but, inasmuch as he has challenged me to follow this case through, I accept the challenge. The statute of Missouri, as set forth in the Keating case, is as follows:

SEC. 1474. If any person shall, directly or indirectly, give or procure to be given, or engage to give any money, gift, or reward, or any office, place, or employment upon any engagement, contract, or agreement, that the person to whom, or to whose use, or on whose behalf, such gift or promise shall be made, shall, by himself, or any other, procure—or endeavor to procure, the election of any person to any office, at any election by the electors, or any public body, under the constitution or laws of this State, the person so offending shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of bribery and punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding five years.

Now note—

"This law has been in force," the opinion says, "ever since the revision of 1855"; and, I take it, from the case cited by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], there has been no change in it. I am referring to this because it reaches the heart of the law in this case. The opinion continues:

To "endeavor to procure" the nomination of an individual is at least a step in the direction of endeavoring to procure his election.

That is an important point also in this controversy. We are told by some Senators that the election is perfectly legal, and consequently we can not go back to the primary, and some comfort is sought from the decision of the Supreme Court. The opinion continues:

It is, therefore, no less a matter of public concern that purity of suffrage shall prevail in the selection of the party candidate than in the ultimate choice of the officers. Since the law has taken special cognizance of primary elections for delegates to nominating conventions, its protest is yet more emphatic than before, if possible, against making the selection of a party's candidate a subject of bargain and sale. There is a clear distinction between the purchase of services to be devoted only to an advertising of the fact that one is, or desires to be, a candidate, and the purchase of service to be employed in advocating his peculiar merits and eligibility so as to influence the choice of the voter. No public policy forbids the making of compensation, under agreement or otherwise, for printing or distributing announcements—

As the Senator has suggested—or for the employment of any proper agency which may bring the fact of a person's candidacy more prominently before the public eye.

Mr. SPENCER. That was in my mind.

Mr. KENYON. That was in the Senator's mind and also in his voice.

The information thus disseminated is essential to the intelligent determination of the voter's choice. But—

And I want to get this also into the Senator's mind—

But it becomes a very different thing when money is paid or promised for efforts to control the voter's free agency in selecting the object of his suffrage. In the present case the promise or agreement shown in the testimony and remarked upon in the instructions belongs to the last-mentioned class.

Now I will ask my good friend from Missouri to listen.

Mr. SPENCER. I will.

Mr. KENYON. The opinion continues:

The defendant was to "work for" the plaintiff's nomination; not as an advertiser, but as an advocate. We think that the circuit court committed no error in holding that the agreement was void as against public policy.

I wanted to put that portion of the opinion in the record because it sustains the clear judicial judgment of the circuit court of Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has been most generous in yielding, and yet perhaps I ought, in answer to what the Senator from Iowa has said, make a brief statement, which I think I can put in a sentence or two. The case to which the Senator from Iowa refers, and with which I am not particularly familiar, because it is a very old case in point of years, and the case to which the Senator from Montana has referred, with which I am familiar and which was decided more recently, have both entirely to do with the carrying out of civil contracts. The statute which has been read and which is a part of the corrupt practices act of the State of Missouri, as the Senator has read it, has only to do with the purpose of corrupting a voter in his free choice. There is nothing in the law of Missouri as quoted, nor in either of the cases cited, that makes it a criminal act to solicit a vote and to present in connection with the solicitation the facts upon which the solicitation is based.

I submit that, in common fairness, where nothing is shown but that men presented to others the reasons why the candidate in whom they believed should be supported, those men have done nothing wrong. Of course, we ought to remember running all through this case—and I call it to the conscience and fairness of Senators—that none of the acts to which reference has been made touch Truman H. Newberry; they were acts of independent organizations in different counties about which he knew nothing.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That was true in the case to which I have called attention, namely, that of Henry L. Eads.

Mr. SPENCER. That had to do with a civil case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. SPENCER. There was no justification of a candidate in that case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. SPENCER. There was no attempt to deprive the candidate of his office.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. SPENCER. There was merely an attempt to enforce a civil contract; that is all there was in that case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Which the court held was in contravention of the criminal statute.

Mr. SPENCER. What I desire to say, and then I will sit down, for I do not desire to intrude upon the time of the Senator from Ohio, is that there has nothing been shown, nor can anything be shown, to connect Truman H. Newberry with these acts.

Coming into the Capitol at noon I said to friends of mine—and I doubt not that what is true with regard to myself might also be true with regard to the distinguished Senator from Ohio—that if every act of every man in any county in Missouri in my behalf, although I did not know his name and knew nothing of his acts, was brought to light, there would have been many things which I would have regretted and some which I would have deplored. What the Senator is trying to do is to punish a man for acts that he knew nothing about; and which if they were committed were committed by men with whom he had no connection and in whose employment he had no part.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri did not look so serious I would not think he was in earnest; I deny emphatically the statement that Newberry did not know about these acts. The things about which he did not know were either willfully kept from him or he tried to be willfully ignorant of what was going on, and, if I stood here with this kind of testimony against me, I would resign my seat in the Senate, and so ought he.

Mr. McKELLAR. And if the Senator were innocent he would have testified before the committee and before the grand jury which investigated the case.

Mr. POMERENE. I would have been the first man to rise in my seat and demand an investigation.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for just a moment?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator propose to read the testimony of Mr. Hugh Maddigan, which appears on page 40 of the views of the minority submitted by him?

Mr. POMERENE. I intended to do so in just a moment.

Mr. CARAWAY. I merely want to call attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that here was a man who said he was for Ford, but after Newberry agents talked to him for a considerable time he said, "Under those conditions I will be with you."

Mr. POMERENE. Inasmuch as the Senator has brought that up, I will read from page 40 of the views of the minority submitted by me:

HUGH A. MADDIGAN.

This witness was chief inspector of plant 35 of the Buick Motor Co., at Flint, Mich.:

"As chief inspector of this plant, there were a large number of men under my supervision. I knew Fred Henry (Newberry manager of campaign in Flint). He came to my home and asked me if I had lined up to work to elect a United States Senator. I told him I had not. * * * I told him I had not considered whom I would support, and he asked me what I thought of Newberry. Well, I told him I had not studied up much on the campaign yet, or the candidates. * * * I told him I thought Ford was a pretty fair man. He told me he was going to be manager of Genesee County for Newberry, and he asked me if I would support him. I told him I would consider it, so we talked there between two and three hours. Before he left I had decided that I would line up with Newberry."

Greenbacks "line up" some men.

"He said, of course, that he did not expect that we would devote our time for nothing. He asked me what I would expect if I would swing my support to Newberry. I told him I thought it was worth $150."

Mr. McKELLAR. A good price for a vote.

Mr. POMERENE (reading):

"* * * So then he told me he would expect I would devote all my spare time from that time on until after the primaries, and I told him if I had to do that I wouldn't do it for $150—I would have to get more than it. While he said he would not let that stop it, that if I went out and devoted my time I would get twice that amount; he didn't just use them words, but it was taken for granted that I was to get twice $150; that is the way I took it. He gave me $15 that evening. * * * He told me that there would be some petitions out and wanted to know how many signers I could get. I told him between 700 and 1,000 throughout the factories."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Who was the gentleman interviewing Maddigan?

Mr. POMERENE. Fred Henry.

Mr. KING. Manager for Genesee County.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; manager for Genesee County. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri what he thinks about the criminality of Henry's case.

Mr. SPENCER. I beg the pardon of the Senator; I was talking to another Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will not the Senator kindly read the testimony again for the enlightenment of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I will read a part of it.

Mr. SPENCER. I did not hear it.

Mr. POMERENE. Fred Henry, a Newberry manager, saw this man, and this was the conversation.

Mr. SPENCER. What was the name of the man?

Mr. POMERENE. Hugh Maddigan; on page 40.

He came to my home and asked me if I had lined up to work to elect a United States Senator. I told him I had not. * * * I told him I had not considered whom I would support, and he asked me what I thought of Newberry. Well, I told him I had not studied up much on the campaign yet, or the candidates. * * * I told him I thought Ford was a pretty fair man. He told me he was going to be manager of Genesee County for Newberry, and he asked me if I would support him.

Mr. SPENCER. May I interrupt the Senator again? Will the Senator give me that reference once more? He said "page 40."

Mr. POMERENE. Page 40; yes.

Mr. SPENCER. Of what?

Mr. POMERENE. Of the minority report.

Mr. SPENCER. Oh!

Mr. POMERENE (reading):

I told him I would consider it, so we talked there between two and three hours. Before he left I had decided that I would line up with Newberry. He said, of course, that he did not expect that we would devote our time for nothing. He asked me what I would expect if I would swing my support to Newberry. I told him I thought it was worth $150. So then he told me he would expect I would devote all my spare time from that time on until after the primaries, and I told him if I had to do that I wouldn't do it for $150—I would have to get more than it. While he said he would not let that stop it; that if I went out and devoted my time, I would get twice that amount; he didn't just use them words, but it was taken for granted that I was to get twice $150; that is the way I took it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Missouri what he would say as to the criminality of Henry's act under the Missouri statutes, which I now read:

If any person shall, directly or indirectly, give or procure to be given, or engage to give any money, gift, or reward, or any office, place, or employment upon any engagement, contract, or agreement, that the person to whom or to whose use, or on whose behalf, such gift or promise shall be made, shall, by himself or any other, procure or endeavor to procure the election of any person to any office at any election by the electors or any public body under the constitution or laws of this State, the person offending shall on conviction be adjudged guilty of bribery—

And so forth.

Mr. SPENCER. I am glad to answer the Senator's question. I will say to the Senator this, for what I now have in mind clearly illustrates what I said a moment ago.

No man who is here—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The question is, Is that—

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator let me finish?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. No man who is here either saw or heard Maddigan. There was no effort on the part of the contestant to bring him before the committee, where there might have been some opportunity to question him and to find out what he said. The statement that the Senator from Ohio has read is the testimony of some man in Michigan that was made before a grand jury, and, the secrecy being removed by his consent, was then repeated. There was no opportunity upon any side to question him about it nor to inquire into the facts. I do not like that testimony any more than the Senator from Montana does.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. Just a moment.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me correct the Senator.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator let me finish, please? Perhaps I will correct it myself before I get through.

I do not like that any more than the Senator from Montana does; but I say that to pick out an isolated instance in some little county or precinct in Michigan of a man who never appeared before this committee, who appeared only before the grand jury or the petit jury—I do not care which—and whose testimony is repeated in this record—to take and make of that an incident, under those circumstances, as against the sworn testimony of the men who did appear for cross-examination before the committee, is making a mountain out of a molehill and is evidencing merely a predetermination to arrive at a conclusion by the substitution of inferences and details for facts and witnesses that appear. I do not like what he said. If that happened; if the Senator from Montana, if you like, or the Senator from Ohio had had an opportunity to cross-examine him and to find out what he was saying and had got the truth of the thing, it would have been an incident in a campaign that I do not like any more than the Senator does.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I conclude with this sentence: This witness says that at some time some man by the name of Henry, of whom nobody ever heard, came to his home and told him these facts. Who Henry was, we do not know. He said he had something to do with the campaign of Newberry in that county, but it is a roundabout method of arriving at a fact which could not be accepted in a court of law as evidence, and no one knows it better than the Senator. It is not only hearsay, it is quadruple hearsay.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I want to express here my gratitude to my very good friend when he says that if there had been an opportunity for myself or himself to cross-examine this witness perhaps we could have elicited the truth. That is the substance of what he said, and then I thought of what the Good Book says:

Oh, that * * * mine adversary had written a book.

And then I remembered that the Senator refused to permit Mr. Newberry to come before this committee to be cross-examined. It might have elicited the truth.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator knows that that is not an accurate statement.

Mr. POMERENE. Then let us make it accurate.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator knows that all that the committee did was to say that it would not require his presence.

Mr. POMERENE. No; that they would not invite him to come.

Mr. SPENCER. Very well, that they would not invite him. There was not a word to sustain what the Senator has said—that they refused to permit him to appear, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, Mr. President, I want to correct that. I asked, and asked several times, that he be called before the committee, or invited to appear before the committee, and the majority of the committee refused to do it. There is no defense that can be made, either in this Chamber or elsewhere, of a refusal to invite the Senator, who knew more about these facts than anybody else, to appear before the committee. When he did not appear, it is a very strong circumstance tending to show that the claims of the contestant with regard to the illegality of this election were well founded, and that he did not dare to come before that committee and submit himself to cross-examination.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator, when he thinks of this—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator, when he comes to think afterwards, will not make such statements as he has now made. The Senator knows that there was no fear in the heart of Truman H. Newberry.

Mr. POMERENE. What was it, then?

Mr. SPENCER. I am telling the Senator. The Senator knows that the advice of his counsel and his friends was that upon a case which had absolutely failed in its proof, which had not been established in any of its essential particulars, which had been denied under oath by him, for him again to repeat his denial was unnecessary and unwise. The Senator is a lawyer.

Mr. POMERENE. I am, sir.

Mr. SPENCER. And he knows that when a plaintiff who makes allegations fails to sustain them the defendant never introduces any testimony in the case. There is what the Senator and I both know as a demurrer to the evidence, which ends the case.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. May I say one thing more?

Mr. POMERENE. Let me say a word now. When the Senator, sitting as one of the trial judges, denied me the right to call a witness there who I felt could give pertinent testimony, I know, sir, that the Senator from Missouri as a trial judge sitting in his court in Missouri never would have done that with an associate judge.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator be good enough to name one witness whose presence he required and who was not subpoenaed?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I will name a number of them.

Mr. SPENCER. Name them. The Senator has spoken of Emery, the man with the fivefold fractured skull. We know about him.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, well, the Senator is "still harping on my daughter."

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator name another one?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I will. I asked to have the officers of the bank subpoenaed with their books, to show the Newberry accounts, after it was claimed by the witnesses who did come that they could not find the Newberry books relating to Mr. Newberry's title to his seat in this body. They being gone, the only way in which we could get that evidence would be to call the bank officials, with their books, showing the state of the accounts of the various Newberry interests, and to bring before us the deposit slips and such other evidence as there might have been. That was refused. Again, Senator Wolcott, as I recall now, asked to have the officers of a New York bank called to bring their books with respect to the testimony of one Green, who was one of the big contributors to this fund; and that the Senator and the majority members of the committee refused to do. I asked that any witness be called that might be thought desirable by any member of the committee, and that was denied.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will bear me out that he has not mentioned the name of a single witness whom he desired to have called—

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. Please let me finish the sentence.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. SPENCER. That he has not given the name of a single witness that he desired to have called.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. It is true that upon both occasions, where some of the minority wanted to open up a discussion which the committee felt had already been entirely exhausted, that when some of the minority requested that the banks bring their books and papers from Detroit to Washington in regard to a matter about which the majority of the committee did not believe there was any contradiction, and concerning which the testimony was all one way, the committee said, "We do not care to go into that matter."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. Just let me answer that, and then I will be through with the Senator's question. The Senator knows, with regard to the witness from New York, whose name, I think, was Brooks and not Green, that when the witness testified as to the checks he had given, he sent the checks to the committee, and they were on file with the committee. In view of that fact, and there not being a word of evidence to the contrary, the committee came to the conclusion that it would be both unfair and unnecessary to require that bank to bring down all its confidential dealings with that witness, and produce its books and papers in Washington; and they refused to go into it. Those are the two cases the Senator has mentioned.

Mr. WALSH of Montana rose.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator wait just a moment?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will remember that the record shows, at the very close, when those checks were ordered to be produced, it was stated, in answer to Senator Wolcott, that if the production of the checks was not fully satisfactory, if there was any question he desired further to look into, the committee would subpoena any witnesses he wanted called.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I did not name any bankers who might be called, but we did refer, in general terms, to the officers of the banks where the Newberrys kept their several accounts. The Senator knows that. The Senator did not ask for any names. The Senator had determined that there should be no other evidence; and when I say the Senator from Missouri had determined that, I mean he and the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from New Jersey. That is what had been determined upon, and it is perfectly frivolous for the Senator now to make the objection that we did not mention names. The Senator gave us no opportunity to get those names.

Mr. SPENCER rose.

Mr. POMERENE. Just a moment. We were confronted by this situation: John Newberry had been subpoenaed to bring the books and the records. He is a man of large business affairs, as is Truman Newberry, and I daresay that in all the history of that great business, when they had litigation, never once before did it happen that the books and papers which were pertinent to the issues in that litigation were missing. John Newberry, when he came before us, said he had gone down to the barn to get those books, and had made a search; he did not have the books—

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken. It was not John Newberry; it was Frederick P. Smith.

Mr. POMERENE. It was John Newberry.

Mr. SPENCER. No; the Senator is mistaken. He made the same mistake the other day. It was Frederick P. Smith.

Mr. POMERENE. I thank the Senator; I sometimes make mistakes. It was Frederick P. Smith, Mr. Newberry's confidential man. Mr. Frederick P. Smith said he went down to the barn, he made a search, the doors were opened, and he brought some of the campaign literature here, and that is all. He was asked whether he had taken those books down to the barn. He said no; that it was done by his cashier. He was asked whether he inquired of the cashier as to the whereabouts of those books. He said he had not. Let me suggest that if John Newberry had a thought that his brother's title to this seat in the Senate was valid or unimpeachable he would have realized that those books would have helped to show it, and John Newberry would have exerted himself day and night to find that cashier in order that he might trace those books; but, like everyone else who is engaged in a criminal conspiracy, they are not going to help to uncover the tracks which lead to their guilt. That is the situation.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has been a prosecuting officer with great power; but I am sure the Senator does not mean to say that there was any direct or indirect attempt on the part of the contestee or any of his friends to destroy or conceal or not to produce any evidence that was available.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senator had brought Senator Newberry before that committee, so that we could have cross-examined him in order to elicit the truth, to use the language of the Senator from Missouri, I could then better answer the Senator's question.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will be able to answer it in his own heart—

Mr. POMERENE. I will, sir.

Mr. SPENCER (continuing). When he remembers that the witness he now says he thinks ought to have been before the committee under the admitted facts from both sides was not in the State of Michigan and did not know one solitary thing about one of the matters of which the Senator is now speaking.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not the Senator know that you can communicate between New York and Detroit by telephone or by telegraph, or by mail?

Mr. SPENCER. But you could not find books, and you could not hunt cashiers.

Mr. POMERENE. No; but the Senator, who had a trusted employee, an attorney in fact, who had absolute control of his bank account and his brother's and his mother's estate and his father's estate and his wife's and his brother's wife's, and their sons' estates, I think could control that situation.

Mr. SPENCER rose.

Mr. POMERENE. Just a moment. If the title to the seat of the Senator from Missouri were questioned here, every shred of evidence that he could produce would be forthcoming.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator knows that the trusted employee to whom he was referring was subpoenaed; was before our committee; was examined at as great length as the Senator or any others desired as to the facts.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; he was there, and by his interpolation the Senator has reminded me of a fact to which I wanted to advert. I asked that this man Smith should be recalled in order that I might have an opportunity to cross-examine him. I do not by what I say now, and did not by what I said then intend to reflect upon the very great ability shown by Senator Wolcott, but there was certain information in my mind, and certain phases of that testimony, about which I wanted to interrogate him, and again the majority of the committee would not permit it. Mr. President, it may be that the majority will be able to keep this man in his seat, but there will be a hearing hereafter before a popular tribunal, which will rightly decide it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in order to show what this witness Smith did say about the books, I would like to read at this point what seems to be material:

Senator WOLCOTT. The subject matter was being investigated, and yet you allowed these evidences, written evidences, of the entire business of this whole transaction to get from under your sight. That is correct, is it not? (R., 774.)

Mr. SMITH. We only have a limited space there in our offices. Every so often we have to clean them out with the enormous amount of business that comes through that office every year.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; but this was only a period of about two or three months of financing. How did you keep your books, in loose leaves or bound books?

Mr. SMITH. In bound books.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you ever inquire of this cashier what he did with the books and checks?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did you ever make any investigation about their whereabouts after they came back from Grand Rapids?

Mr. SMITH. No; I did not.

Senator WOLCOTT. They were not destroyed, were they, to your knowledge?

Mr. SMITH. Not to my knowledge.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Were they all before the grand jury?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know whether he got them from the office or whether he got them up there.

Senator WATSON. You were not subpoenaed?

Mr. SMITH. No; I was not subpoenaed.

Mr. President, if these checks and these books, documents having the most direct influence upon this proceeding, were not premeditatedly destroyed or lost, designedly lost or destroyed, why did not somebody come and give a better explanation of their loss than that given by this agent of the contestee? Why did not the contestee himself come before the committee and make a statement about it?

I have looked up the record of contests for a number of years back. Some years ago the seat of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was contested, and one of the first witnesses who took the stand in his own behalf was the senior Senator from Utah himself. Later on, when Mr. Lorimer's title to his seat was contested, he took the stand in his own behalf; and about the same time, when Mr. Stephenson's title to his seat was contested, he took the stand in his own behalf.

So far as I have been able to find out, the sole and only contestee whose seat has been contested in this body who has ever stood mute when he was charged with all manner of crimes and misdemeanors, was the contestee in this case, Mr. Newberry. Gentlemen talk about it being understood that there was not enough evidence to bring him to the witness stand, when he had actually been convicted before a Republican jury and a Republican court in the State of Michigan. Is it possible that under those circumstances there was not enough evidence before the committee to warrant the calling of the contestee, if he had been innocent? No power on earth would have ever kept him from demanding the right to come before that committee and make a clean breast of the whole situation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, we have gone far afield from the question I addressed to the Senator from Missouri, which was as to what he thought about the criminality of the acts recited in the testimony read by the Senator from Ohio. The Senator from Missouri did not answer that question, but he went on to tell that that witness testified before the grand jury, that his testimony before the grand jury was read in the trial at Grand Rapids, and that no opportunity was afforded to anyone representing Mr. Newberry to cross-examine him. The Senator is quite in error in that. Mr. Maddigan testified in the trial at Grand Rapids. He was subjected to cross-examination by Mr. Littleton, one of the ablest cross-examiners of the American bar. There is a stipulation in this case that the bill of exceptions in the Grand Rapids case, from which the Senator from Ohio read the testimony of Maddigan, shall be considered as though the witnesses were actually present and testified.

The Senator will find the record at page 331 of the bill of exceptions and the cross-examination by Mr. Littleton at the bottom of page 333.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator correct me if I am in error? Was not Maddigan one of the defendants in that case?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; and he entered a plea of nolo contendere, and was therefore called to the witness stand and testified. I do not care to press the question which I addressed to the Senator from Missouri. Of course, it is perfectly obvious that he does not desire to answer the question; but I call the attention of the Senator to this language in the report:

The amount of money spent at the primary was large, too large; but there was no concealment whatever in regard to it, and it was spent entirely for legal and proper purposes.

Either the Senator from Missouri believes that the expenditure of this money which was paid to Maddigan was for an entirely legal and proper purpose, or else he will rise in his place in the Senate and amend his report.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. That is very good of the Senator from Ohio. The Senator misunderstood me if he thought for a moment that I did not want to answer. I want to answer, and to answer him frankly and fully.

The testimony of the witness we have only a synopsis of. Here is what he said under cross-examination as to what he did:

I distributed literature throughout the street, and on primary day I passed literature and Newberry cards to different men I met. I mean I distributed literature throughout the city of Flint, not making a street canvass, but as I met my different friends. I gave on an average two hours a day to the work of the campaign, including the evenings.

That was his statement under cross-examination. That statement, to my mind, presents nothing either illegal under the laws of Michigan or improper in morals.

As the testimony came out on the direct examination it looked as if he had been paid to influence voters, and I agree with the Senator from Montana that if that was the fact it was to be condemned, it was wrong; but I call the Senator's attention again to the fact that this man Maddigan never even came in contact with Newberry or anybody in Detroit. All that he did was with regard to somebody by the name of Henry, whose connection with the matter we are not familiar with, except that Maddigan says he understands he was a Newberry supporter.

I now publicly wish to express to the Senator from Ohio my regret, if there was any new point which he desired to bring out from the witness, Frederick P. Smith, that that witness was not recalled.

In the first place, I know that Frederick P. Smith's testimony occupied pages 753 to 775. He was examined by Senator Wolcott and by Mr. Lucking in extenso. Every phase of the question was gone into.

I remember when the Senator from Ohio came back from an enforced absence that had called him away from Washington, he expressed the desire to have Smith recalled. The Senator will correct me if I am wrong, but I do not understand that he said anything more than that he wanted to interrogate the witness Smith about some things. The committee felt and I felt that that case which we had had already before us more than a year and had practically closed ought not to be reopened for the return of Smith.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator and I are colleagues in this Chamber, and, I think, friends.

Mr. SPENCER. We certainly are on this side.

Mr. POMERENE. I am sure I am one of the Senator's best personal friends, but if my question was so indefinite why could not the Senator, as the chairman of that committee, have asked me to make it more definite?

Mr. SPENCER. I could have done so, and if I had thought of it I would have done it. Does it not occur to the Senator from Ohio that the definiteness ought to have originated on his side?

Mr. POMERENE. Why, no; it does not. When I name certain witnesses, as I did in that instance, and name a certain kind of proof that I want and that is obtainable, if the primary evidence is destroyed, then in the form of the secondary evidence to be obtained from the bank's books I would like to know the Senator who as a lawyer would tell me that that was not pertinent and not material testimony.

Mr. SPENCER. There is much in what the Senator has said.

Mr. POMERENE. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will only remember that the case had been closed—

Mr. POMERENE. No; it had not been closed.

Mr. SPENCER. The case had been closed by the committee and this witness had gone back from Washington to Detroit. He had been examined at length.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. Let me add one other sentence, and I shall be through.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator said that if the contestee should be seated in this way there would be something more heard of it hereafter. I do not know whether the Senator referred to the hereafter in this world or the next, but if he referred to this world, I merely call to his attention the fact that there were some of these associates who, together with Truman H. Newberry, were indicted in Grand Rapids and were tried and convicted, who in the following campaign were candidates upon the ticket in Michigan and went before the people of Michigan in the light of what had happened, and every one of them was returned by an enormous majority when the people had a chance to express their opinion indirectly upon these proceedings.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not like to and would not allude to the fact save for what the Senator has said, but that case was tried before a Republican judge and before a jury of which either 10 or 11 members were Republicans.

Mr. McKELLAR. Eleven.

Mr. POMERENE. I am advised that there were 11 Republican jurors. There was a conviction. There is no question about that. I remember, too, that some of the defendants went on the stand and testified in behalf of Newberry, but Newberry never went on the stand to testify in their behalf, and though he claims to be a sitting Member here by a plurality of less than 4,000 now—

Mr. McKELLAR. A little over 4,000.

Mr. POMERENE. A little over 4,000, I am told, and the title to his seat is being tried again, he does not appear before that committee or before the Senate. My good friend has referred to the fact that his counsel had advised him not to appear. Now, just think of the situation. I wish to read a paragraph from page 807 of the record. Mr. Murfin said:

With that I have nothing further to offer—

Referring to some testimony—

Senator WOLCOTT. You are not going to call Senator Newberry himself?

Mr. MURFIN. I am not. That is a matter we have discussed at length, and frequently, and have changed our minds frequently; but that is the conclusion I now have.

Again, on page 932, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] calls my attention to the following:

Senator WOLCOTT. Suppose this committee should determine that it desired to have Senator Newberry as a witness. Are counsel prepared to come back here any day the committee may fix?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I shall come, of course.

Senator WOLCOTT. I want the question of Senator Newberry's appearing as a witness left open for decision by the full subcommittee. My own view is that if nobody else makes that application or motion before the subcommittee, I will do it myself. So let us understand that that is not closed.

But the Senator from Missouri said it was closed, and because Newberry's attorneys said, "We have finally decided not to put him on the stand," two United States Senators sitting there as a committee to hear this testimony and report their findings to the full committee and then to the Senate, were turned down; no respect was paid to their request.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Before the Senator leaves the question of being denied the opportunity to cross-examine the witness, the Senator from Missouri now claims that the Senator from Ohio did not name the witnesses. Was there any such objection made at the time by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, none whatever. I wish to make this statement; that it had been determined by the majority of the committee beforehand, as I believe, that these men should not be subpoenaed.

Now, Mr. President, here is another witness, John E. Kern. I read his testimony not because the money was wrongly used finally, but because it shows the extravagance of the methods used by this committee. This witness was in the real estate business in Midland County. He saw Mr. King in Detroit.

We discussed the campaign there in Midland County and the conditions politically. * * * Finances, we discussed. * * * While Mr. King and I were talking there and in the presence of King, a sealed envelope was put on the table right beside me, to take all right. I put it in my pocket. I didn't open it there. I opened the envelope on the train on my trip home and found $400 in it. This was between the 15th and 20th of August. I was probably called secretary of the Newberry organization in Midland County. * * * When I went on these trips with Mr. Corliss I introduced him to men over the county. That was my purpose in going out. (B. E., 123.)

It appeared that this gentleman, of his own motion, returned to the committee all the money except his actual expenses. There is the one man who was heard in this trial who returned the money.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was there anything the matter with him?

Mr. POMERENE. Well, I do not know. I am not going to read many more of these, but there are two or three more which I feel I must read because they are illuminating. One of the men was Allan K. Moore, printer, in Grand Rapids. He said:

I told Mr. King I understood he wanted me to go into the upper peninsula and do some work up there. He said he did and gave me a list of names which we talked over, that I should call on up there, and I should see John G. Mangum, at Battle Creek, and have him suggest men to see in the different counties up there. I think Mr. King mentioned Mr. M. M. Duncan, general manager of the Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co.; Mr. Moriarity, of Crystal Falls; Capt. Richards, of Crystal Falls; Bob Douglass at Ironwood, and a banker at Munising. There was no further conversation, except he wanted me to see these men there and see how they stood for Mr. Newberry and report back. I think I was to make daily reports. * * * I worked in Marquette, calling on the people that I knew for several days, finding out whether they favored Newberry or not. During that time I was just calling on men that I knew and advertising Mr. Newberry's candidacy by conversation and literature. * * * After this I went to Detroit, where, I think, I saw Mr. King in the Newberry headquarters. I do not recall anything special that was said at that time about my work by Mr. King, except that I had done good work up there in the northern peninsula. * * * He also told me that the reason I was taken out of the upper peninsula was because the defendant Rogers Andrews objected to my work there. * * * I think he told me at that time that Andrews had charge of the work in the upper peninsula. Witness was then told to report to Mr. Floyd at Grand Rapids, and he proceeded: "As near as I can remember, but Floyd said that he had work to keep me busy all summer; thought I would like it better than chasing around in the upper peninsula. That he made arrangements through Dr. William Smith, of Muskegon, and George R. Murray, president of the Railway Men's Relief Association, whereby Mr. Murray would give me letters of introduction to different railroad men who were members of this organization for me to call on. * * * I got in touch with George Murray. He published a monthly magazine in connection with the association, which is mailed to all the members. Mr. Murray gave me a letter to the officers of this association in various cities. * * * Mr. Floyd told me he wanted me to go to these men and get them to circulate petitions for Mr. Newberry, and he says, 'You can not expect that they are going to do this work for nothing,' and he gave me in person, I think, at that time, $300 in cash to pay these men for the work they did.

Witness then describes calling on the different persons.

"I called with Mr. Jack Murray one or two days at the different street car barns and different railroad yards and met different men." Witness then describes large number of men he had called upon, giving each one of them money, $20, $40, $25, $75, and one $250, etc. (B. E., r. 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102.)

"From there I went to Manistee and saw Joseph Linder, who was secretary of the relief association. I think I paid him $20. * * * I made two trips to Flint, where I called on Mr. Myers, who has charge of the Pere Marquette freight office. I think I paid Mr. Myers $80 altogether, and I think I paid A. D. Cole, yardmaster of the Grand Trunk. I paid Roy Larrabee, a man who worked for the Interurban, $10. At Battle Creek I met a man by the name of Mellon, engineer on the Grand Trunk. The first time I went down there I paid him $140. I gave him $52 once or twice after that. I think twice. I also went to Jackson, where there was a man by the name of Lloyd, secretary of the association, to whom I think I paid $40."

Most of these names do not appear in this correct record.

Each time I paid these sums I made a report to Mr. Charles Floyd, from whom in each instance except one I got the money I paid out to these railroad people. I think my work continued 20 weeks at the same salary I have heretofore mentioned ($75 per week). (Record, p. 98.) * * * From the time I was assigned to this railroad work by Mr. Floyd up to the end of my employment I did no other line of work except that during the last week of the campaign I went back to Marquette at the request of Mr. Mangum. * * * During the time that I worked for the Newberry committee I received $1,500 salary and $1,219 expense money. The total that I received was approximately $2,719. It might have been $3,600 or $3,700. * * *

And so forth.

Mr. President, let me call attention now to Mr. George R. Murray, who was president of the Railway Men's Relief Association and published its monthly magazine. He was in a position of influence. He went around with Allan K. Moore. He said in part:

They asked me if there was anything I could do to help get the railway men lined up for Newberry, and I assured them I would give them my support. It was kind of a hurried trip, and they shook hands and bade me good-by. Before leaving they said anything I could do to help along the line they would take care of me. * * * I got no money from Floyd besides the $300. Four hundred dollars was paid to the magazine which was published; that went into the association funds. * * *. In the month of July a display advertisement was published in the magazine, and in August a personal letter from me to the railroad men. * * *. I think our bill for the one display was $150. In August we published an article about Mr. Newberry's campaign, not an advertisement, just an article which I wrote. Twenty thousand extra copies were ordered through the Grand Rapids office. (B. E., pp. 195, 196.)

I desire now to refer to Myron J. Sherwood, who was a lawyer at Marquette, and who handled about $1,500, according to his testimony. King asked him to support Newberry and to take charge of the management of the campaign in the upper peninsula of Michigan. He said in part:

"I employed men to work at the polls on election day." That there were five precincts in the city. He had put men in each of the four precincts, but none in the other. He said, "I paid these men $7 per day." He also had a man out over the city reporting the sentiment and paid him $50 per month. (R., 883, 884.)

Mr. President, in that connection I desire to state that Newberry was not supposed to have any knowledge of the manner in which this campaign was being conducted, but every once in a while the footprints are seen. King, who was making daily reports and who signed his name "Paul" on August 15, 1918—I read from the bill of exceptions on page 888—in reporting to "My dear Commander," says:

I am inclosing herewith the proof of an advertisement which will appear next week showing the indorsement of leading farmers and men interested in agricultural matters throughout the State. This should help.

Our only weakness is with the labor vote, and my reports indicate that we are getting stronger there. The Flint Labor News, which has been strongly Osborn—

That was Gov. Osborn, who was a candidate—is weakening, and I am sending a man there to-day with a page advertisement for insertion just before the primaries.

For what?

Mr. OWEN. From whom was that letter?

Mr. POMERENE. That was from Paul H. King, the chairman of the committee, to Commander Newberry. Here is a labor paper that had been for Gov. Osborn, and King says, "it is weakening, and I am sending a man there to-day with a page advertisement for insertion just before the primaries."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I remember reading in the record what the Senator from Ohio has just read when I was examining the record. I was unable, however, in any further examination of the record to find out what effect the placing of this page advertisement in the Labor News had upon the paper. I should like to ask the Senator if there is anything in the record to show whether there was any difference in the attitude of that paper "before taking and after"?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am having that matter investigated, but I am not able now to answer the Senator's question. There is, however, a list of newspapers which obtained advertising.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that.

Mr. POMERENE. Whether that paper appears in the list or not I do not know.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not desire to ascertain whether or not the paper appears in the list; of course, it does not appear, I presume. What I am trying to ascertain, as a matter of curiosity, somewhat, is what effect the placing of the advertisement had upon the editorial policy of the paper.

Mr. POMERENE. I so realize. The Senator's query is very pertinent.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry which I think will be more pertinent. Did not Mr.

Newberry make oath that he knew nothing about these expenditures?

Mr. POMERENE. He certainly did.

Mr. OWEN. How does the Senator explain that?

Mr. POMERENE. We are required under the ruling of the majority of the subcommittee and a majority of the full Committee on Privileges and Elections to be content with his denial under oath.

Mr. OWEN. Did he come before the committee and make denial under oath?

Mr. POMERENE. Never.

Mr. OWEN. Why not?

Mr. POMERENE. We might have gotten the truth. The chairman of the committee said a little while ago that with the opportunity to cross-examine another witness we might have elicited some information. Of course he as a lawyer knew that, but he did not want to enable us to elicit information from Mr. Newberry, and Mr. Newberry was not willing to have us elicit information from him.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator refers to a general denial he does not mean that Mr. Newberry appeared before the committee and made a general denial?

Mr. POMERENE. No.

Mr. NORRIS. He has reference to the affidavit which Mr. Newberry filed with the Secretary of the Senate under the law?

Mr. POMERENE. It is that to which I refer, and I thank the Senator for making it clear.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, there are very few Senators present, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield for that purpose, if I may.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Harrison	Nicholson	Spencer
Capper	Heflin	Norris	Stanley
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Oddie	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Swanson
Dial	Kendrick	Page	Townsend
Edge	Kenyon	Pittman	Trammell
Ernst	Keyes	Polindexter	Wadsworth
Fernald	King	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	Ladd	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Glass	McKellar	Robinson	Watson, Ga.
Hale	McNary	Sheppard	Watson, Ind.
Harris	Nelson	Smith	Willis

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BURSUM, Mr. FRANCE, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. SMOOT answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senators who are interested will find the so-called Blair report of receipts and expenditures in the bill of exceptions, beginning on page 252. Mr. Blair was the very distinguished gentleman, a very good citizen, who lent himself to this committee as its treasurer. The bank account, I believe, was kept in his bank. Mr. Blair signs and swears to this report. The evidence will show that Mr. Blair knew nothing about the correctness of this report. Some little explanation was made to him by, perhaps, King and some others, and he signed it. I want to read just a paragraph bearing upon the character of this report:

I told Mr. Hopkins to be sure to have in every newspaper bill, every bill in connection with the publicity department, before the time for the filing of the report. I do not recall whether or not prior to the time Mr. Blair signed it and it was filed I had a conference or a talk with Mr. Blair about the report. I told Mr. Blair, it seems to me, at the time that he came over to sign the report that we had made every effort to get every bill, and so far as I knew all of the bills were in, and that I had been so advised by Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Emery. It was after I told that to Mr. Blair that he signed the report. So far as I knew, Mr. Blair had nothing to do with the preparation and making up of that report; I did. I first got in on the preparation of the report about 10 o'clock on the morning of September 6. Mr. Emery—

That is the witness who went to Canada—

Mr. Emery had been working on it before that, and the various members of the office force had been working on it. Mr. Emery was at his home on the morning of September 6, as I remember. Various members of the office staff, I think the most of them, assisted me on that day in the preparation and finishing up of this report. The report, or the documents in connection with it to make up the report, were in a very chaotic condition. Mr. Emery had been working for several days to get the report ready and had repeatedly assured me that it would be ready, and, in fact, as I was advised by one of the respondents, when I got to the office that morning, he had worked all night the night of the 5th on the report and had fainted away from exhaustion at 4 o'clock and had been taken home in a taxicab. The Blair report was, in my judgment, as nearly correct as could be made from the information we had.

If you will examine the report, you will find that there was an attempt to classify the expenditures in such a way as to conceal expenditures which were made and which were not permitted to be made under the Michigan law; and I do not wonder that Emery fainted before he got through it. I would, too, if I were doing business of that kind.

Mr. President, there is a good deal of Mr. King's testimony that might be very interesting to read. You will find that it was necessary to have Mr. Emery here, because, if you will examine the record, you will find that this man Floyd, when he is interrogated about these accounts, refers to original records and papers.

"Where are they?"

"I do not know. I saw some of them about the office."

"Who would know about them?"

"Mr. Emery."

Mr. Turner, another publicity man who was active about the headquarters, testified that he did not know where these records were.

"Where are they?"

"They were in the charge of Mr. Emery."

He himself testified that he supposed that Emery was keeping books, and so forth. I am not attempting to quote him literally, but that is the substance of it. Every time you attempt to trace one of these witnesses down to a specific piece of original evidence, it is Emery that knows it. If Emery is an honest man, his conscience must hurt him as much as his head hurt him after he was bumped by a Ford machine.

Mr. President, I am going to take the time of the Senate to read a part of my cross-examination of Mr. King. I think you will agree with me that by his testimony he has shed a great light upon conditions as they prevailed in this committee.

I asked the question:

Mr. King, it appears—and if I do not correctly state your attitude, you may take any exception to it or make any explanation that you deem proper—it appears thus far in the testimony before this committee that you had a number of conferences with Mr. Newberry with regard to his candidacy and his campaign; that in one of these conversations you talked with him about the amount it would cost, and thereupon, in substance, you said to him that it cost the friends of Senator Townsend $20,000, but that you thought his campaign would cost $50,000 or thereabouts.

After that you had a number of conversations with him and you wrote to him giving him reports of what was being done. You have referred here to a so-called field report which you made, and you have read, at my request, one of these reports from one of the counties. I take it that those field reports gave him a general bird's-eye view of every part of this campaign except the financing. Will you explain why it was that you explained all of these other matters and did not explain to him the financing?

Mr. KING. Why, it is very easy of explanation. The funds were being provided at Detroit. The campaign was being financed. Questions of policy, as I have stated, were discussed, as to what was a good thing to do and what was not a good thing to do. I have no recollection of ever discussing with Senator Newberry the financing of his campaign or any part of it.

Senator POMERENE. Let us see. Does that satisfactorily explain it to your mind? You have referred to the general policy, and I think he had his campaign in very able hands.

Mr. KING. Thank you. (R., 633.)

Senator POMERENE. Why should you say now that the financing was taken care of in Michigan by his friends and give that as a reason for not counseling him on that subject, when the general policy of his campaign was being taken care of by his friends?

Mr. KING. The general policy was being taken care of by his friends; that is true.

Senator POMERENE. And I dare say, from what I have observed, that the general plan of his campaign and what was done outside of the finances by you was as well done as was the financing by his other friends. What was the reason why you should talk with him and confer with him and report to him about everything except the financing?

Mr. KING. Because, as I say, the money was forthcoming from Detroit. There was never any question about it. There was simply a question, Senator, when anything came up to be done—the question in my mind was whether it was a good thing to do, and if it was a good thing to do, I did it. The question of expenses did not come into my mind at all. It was a question of whether it was a good thing to do or not, whether it would help the campaign along or not. If it were a good thing to do, I did it regardless of the expense. If it were not a good thing to do, I did not do it.

I wish Senators could have had the opportunity to see Mr. King. He was a very bright, keen, shrewd gentleman, and when he said that the question of the finances never occurred to his mind, I accepted it with some mental reservation.

Senator POMERENE. You knew where most of this money was coming from, did you not?

Mr. KING. I knew that Mr. John S. Newberry was supplying a considerable part of it, because I saw the checks.

Senator POMERENE. In view of your State statute and the Federal statute, did you regard it as a pretty important thing to look after the finances of this campaign as well as after the other features of it?

Mr. KING. I did. I thought we were.

Senator POMERENE. Yes. Was it because you had in mind the State statute or the Federal statute, or both statutes, limiting the amount of money that could be expended, that you did not want Senator Newberry to have knowledge of it?

Mr. KING. No; I would not say that.

Senator POMERENE. Is not that the reason?

Mr. KING. I do not think it was, Senator.

Senator POMERENE. As he had to file an account, can you explain why he was not concerned about this financing?

Mr. KING. To tell the honest truth, the matter of the account that he had to file never came into my mind at all until the blanks came to our office from the office of the Secretary of the Senate, I think it was, and I think I mailed them down to him. That was the first time that the matter of his accounting ever occurred to me at all.

Just think of a shrewd, clever lawyer, who had managed senatorial campaigns before, who is supposed to be familiar with the election laws of his own State, as well as of the Federal Government, not thinking of that!

Senator POMERENE. You had an attorney, one of your own office men, who was advising with you in regard to the law?

Mr. KING. As to details of the law; yes. I do not think he advised as to the financial features of it.

Senator POMERENE. Now, let me go to another matter.

Senator EDGE. May I ask just one question right there, Senator?

Senator POMERENE. Yes.

Senator EDGE. Was it not discussed rather generally in the press?

Mr. KING. When the attacks were made by these three papers I have mentioned—that was in August some time just before the (R., 634) primary, which was on the 27th—that was the only time that the question of expenditures had risen at all. Mr. De Foe raised the question, and Mr. Vandenberg.

Senator POMERENE. You did discuss with him the amount of advertising and the necessity for their general scheme or plan along that line?

Mr. KING. I think I told him about my plan for publicity; yes.

Senator POMERENE. And your general scheme of sending out field agents and organizing each county?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And you made these reports?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Let me go to another matter.

Your primary day was August 27?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And your report was filed on what date?

Mr. KING. September 7, I think, or 6—within 10 days after the primary. It had to be.

Senator POMERENE. Did you give instructions to destroy or burn the letters and other files that you had in the office?

Mr. KING. As I stated the other day, the form letter correspondence, I told the office staff that they could throw out.

Senator POMERENE. When did you do that?

Mr. KING. That was just before the State central committee moved in. It must have been—I left on my vacation trip on the night of the 7th of September, 1918. It must have been the first week in September that we were closing up.

Senator POMERENE. Before or after your report was filed?

Mr. KING. The report was filed the night of the 7th. I left on the midnight train that night on my trip.

Senator POMERENE. Did you give any other instructions with regard to the books of account or your contracts, advertising or other contracts?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Did you know of their being destroyed? Did you know they were to be destroyed?

Mr. KING. I did not.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know they have been destroyed?

Mr. KING. It has been so testified.

Senator POMERENE. When did you first learn that some question was being raised about the character of the campaign that was being conducted in behalf of Mr. Newberry?

Mr. KING. I can not recall just the date when these three papers opened up on us.

Senator POMERENE. Name those three papers.

Mr. KING. The Charlotte Republican, the Escanaba Journal, and the Grand Rapids Herald. But I regarded those attacks as being purely political and inspired for political purposes. Senator Smith's paper, the Grand Rapids Herald, I thought was attacking us because of Mr. Vandenberg's possible aspirations for Senator, and the fact that Senator Smith had contemplated reentering the race at the last moment and had found that Senator Newberry had, through their own investigations—they sent out inquiries to the county clerks and judges of probate and members of the legislature, and the replies (R., 635) which they printed in their own columns showed that the sentiment was so overwhelmingly for Commander Newberry that Senator Smith decided not to allow his petition to be filed, right at the last minute, I think, right up to midnight of the final day.

Senator EDGE. What was the final day for filing petitions?

Mr. KING. Thirty days, I think, before the primary.

Mr. MURFIN. July 26.

Mr. KING. Up to 4 o'clock on that day; that was the final hour. They were in the possession of the secretary of state, and they were withdrawn by him when he discovered, through the investigation of his own paper, that sentiment was so overwhelmingly for Commander Newberry; and I thought it was his personal pique, perhaps, incident to the situation, that induced those attacks by the Grand Rapids Herald.

Senator POMERENE. You knew, prior to August 27, the day of the primary, that there were serious charges being made about the character of the Newberry campaign?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And those were made in part by Democrats and in part by Republicans?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. No Democrats, I think, your honor, that I remember.

Senator POMERENE. Just let me go on.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Pardon me.

Senator POMERENE. You remember that there was a letter written by your lieutenant governor on August 22, 1918?

Mr. KING. I remember the letter very well; yes.

Senator POMERENE. In which he made certain serious charges?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And you remember the character of them. I do not care to go into it, because I distinguish between evidence and charges. Also about that time—

Mr. KING. He was not even produced at the Grand Rapids trial by the Government.

Senator POMERENE. That is all right. That was printed immediately, was it not, after it was written?

Mr. KING. Yes; I think he put it in the paper before he mailed the letter to Commander Newberry.

Senator POMERENE. In any event, it was printed four or five days before the primary?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. And then, also, Representative Wiley wrote a pretty scorching letter bearing on this same subject, on August 22, 1918?

Mr. KING. As representing Gov. Osborn, who was also a candidate; yes.

Senator POMERENE. That may all be, but he did make serious charges, did he not?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Without going into the details, they took up the question of the extravagance of the campaign as to money?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir. (R., 636.)

Senator POMERENE. This being so, did not the fact that these serious charges were made by representative men in the Republican Party admonish you that some question might be raised afterwards with regard to Senator Newberry's title to his seat if he were elected? Did not that occur to you?

Mr. KING. It looked to me just like a hot political fight, Senator. The subsequent developments that ensued, I am frank to say, never entered my mind at all.

Oh, he was an innocent abroad!

Senator POMERENE. You are evidently right that it was a hot political fight.

Mr. KING. Yes; and the press will also show that I answered these attacks by stating the reasons why it was necessary to conduct the publicity campaign that we had conducted. Mr. Ford was the best advertised man in Michigan or in the country; that he was backed by the Democratic organization from the White House down, the Democratic national committee, the Democratic State central committee; he was backed by his own forces, which were in large numbers scattered throughout the State, and by his sales agencies. He was backed by the people who furnished supplies and materials, wealthy manufacturers who furnished these supplies and materials to his plants. I thought it was necessary to conduct a campaign of this kind of publicity and to organize to meet just exactly that kind of opposition, and I had no apologies to offer for it.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. You mean, backed for what?

Mr. KING. Backing Henry Ford for United States Senator.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Was this in the primary?

Mr. KING. In the primary.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. They were back of him as a Republican candidate in a Republican primary?

Mr. KING. Absolutely. The plan was to put him on both tickets, and the suggestion came from the White House that he was Mr. Wilson's candidate.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know that?

Mr. KING. Mr. Ford himself stated that he ran at the suggestion of the President; that he was drafted.

Senator POMERENE. Let me see if I understand you. From what you have said thus far do I understand that you were giving your reasons for the campaign you were conducting, or do I understand that you were making answer to these charges and are giving the substance of your answers?

Mr. KING. That is what I am trying to do.

Senator POMERENE. Then let me go a step further.

Of course, it is to be presumed that in your office you did have an account of receipts and disbursements.

Mr. KING. There was such an account, I suppose.

Senator POMERENE. You have no doubt about it, have you?

Mr. KING. No. In the beginning of the campaign—

Senator POMERENE. Do you know where that account is?

Mr. KING. I do not, Senator.

Senator POMERENE. Have you made any inquiry about it?

Mr. KING. No; I do not know that I have.

He was one of the men under indictment, who was later tried, and who has never inquired about these books which reported the big, legal, honorable expenditures in this campaign.

Senator POMERENE. As you were unfortunately one of the defendants in this case, after your indictment, when you had become involved in what was a serious charge, did it not occur to you that it would be necessary to have all this evidence? (R., 637.)

Mr. KING. Why, I had not thought of it in that way; no.

Now, just think of a lawyer under indictment and trial and sentenced to the penitentiary, and it never occurring to him to have these books of accounts.

Senator POMERENE. Does it not occur to you that that is a reasonable conclusion to which any man might come?

Mr. KING. I regarded the whole trial and everything as part and parcel of the political fight.

Senator POMERENE. But be that as it may, it was tried, nevertheless. Whether rightly or wrongly, it got into the courts; and would you not be interested, then, in making your defense so you could produce these records?

Mr. KING. I have not found it necessary to make such defense in Michigan.

Senator POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. KING. My reputation stands up there with anyone else's thus far.

As a political manipulator, yes.

Senator POMERENE. I am not disputing that. If I am tiring you, I will stop.

Mr. KING. No; I am glad to answer these questions.

Senator POMERENE. There are just a few questions that I want to ask you.

In view of the fact that these serious charges were being made just prior to the primary, as well as immediately after the primary, did it not occur to you that it would be wise to have all of your original records?

Mr. KING. I supposed they were in possession of the proper custodian. I had had nothing to do with keeping them.

He supposed that, but never inquired anything about it. Will anyone believe that story?

Senator POMERENE. As to your correspondence, if you had correspondence with different people that represented you outside—and I am assuming now, for the sake of the question, that all of your correspondence was perfectly legitimate—would it not have been a good thing for you to have had all of that correspondence in the office if any controversy should arise after the primary?

Mr. KING. It would have been necessary to have arranged for storage space. It never occurred to me it was necessary at all.

Senator POMERENE. That may all be. Did it not occur to you, or to some of your associates, that it would be a very important thing, in view of the hot campaign that you had, that you should have your original books of entry, both as to receipts, expenditures, and as to contracts for advertising and other supplies and services? Did not that occur to you?

Mr. KING. I supposed, as I say, they were in the hands of the proper officers.

Senator POMERENE. But assuming, for the sake of the argument, that every item of receipt was legitimate and every item of expenditure was a legitimate expenditure, would it not have served you and Mr. Newberry and all the other defendants in good part to have had all of these original books of entry?

Mr. KING. I presume it would.

Senator POMERENE. Is it customary in your State that a campaign committee shall destroy the books showing their financial operations after the campaign is over?

Mr. KING. I can not testify as to what is customary. The only other senatorial campaign—

I hope Senators will note this:

The only other senatorial campaign that I managed, the Townsend senatorial campaign, we kept books of correspondence for a long, long time, and I had the idea that I could refer to them for political information (R., 638) later; but they soon became obsolete and were in the way. We moved them from place to place, and finally dumped them all out. So when we came to this point I said to myself, "There is certainly no object in preserving all this mass of correspondence," and I said to the office staff, "We will not keep it."

Senator POMERENE. Senator Townsend had a pretty energetic campaign up there, did he not?

Mr. KING. He did.

Senator POMERENE. And no question was ever raised about the character of his campaign?

Mr. KING. No, sir. And this campaign, Senator, was, in principle, exactly like Senator Townsend's campaign, because where I had one field man then, part of the time, I had six or eight in this campaign. Where I inserted an occasional advertisement in a paper in that campaign, I had a definite plan of publicity with 13 insertions in all the papers, and where I had one poor little stenographer in the office who worked herself nearly to death, I had 50, if you please, in this campaign. It was simply an amplification of exactly the same procedure that I had followed in the Townsend campaign. In principle there is no difference at all.

Senator POMERENE. Let us pursue that a little bit further. There was no question raised about the legitimacy of Senator Townsend's campaign, either before or after his primary?

Mr. KING. No, sir; although a very substantial sum of money was spent in that campaign.

Senator POMERENE. I understand that, and you have been very frank about that. But here was a campaign in which no charges were made with reference to a violation of the law or any extravagance, and yet you kept all your correspondence and files for a number of years thereafter. But when it comes to this Newberry campaign, with these very aggravated charges, whether right or wrong—I am not passing on that—when these very aggravated charges were being made against the character of the campaign, charging extravagance and even charging fraud and violation of the law, does it not strike you as a little strange that all of this correspondence should be destroyed at that time and the books of entry not available?

Mr. KING. The correspondence which was destroyed was purely former letter correspondence. This correspondence is in the record here and fully covers the questions at issue. That was preserved. There was no idea of destroying anything that might be used in future proceedings, because the idea of all these proceedings had never occurred to me, I am frank to say.

But the coincidence that all these books evidently are destroyed!

Senator EDGE. What book entry was saved beyond that report?

Mr. KING. I do not know, Senator Edge. I had nothing to do with that part of it, as I have stated, and I do not know what books were saved. So far as I know, I do not know that they are destroyed. I do not know that they are now.

Senator POMERENE. Did you have an understanding with John S. Newberry that he was to finance this campaign?

Mr. KING. No, sir; I did not know him at that time at all.

Senator POMERENE. How did you get your information that it was going to be financed by some of these gentlemen?

Mr. KING. I think from Mr. Templeton. (R., 639.)

Senator POMERENE. What did he say to you on the subject?

Mr. KING. I can not recall, except that the expenses would be paid; and later, when I needed money, I asked him for money, and he very promptly procured money for me. This was in the form of a check or checks signed by Mr. John S. Newberry.

Senator POMERENE. Did he tell you who was to finance it?

Mr. KING. I do not know that he did.

Senator POMERENE. You knew who these substantial contributors were from day to day?

Mr. KING. Yes; I think I knew about it. For instance, Col. Hecker, who is a very well known and prominent man in Detroit—he came into my office and left a check on my desk for a thousand dollars, which I turned over to Mr. Blair. So that indirectly, one way and another, I think I knew about it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, was not this one of the men whom Senator Newberry especially requested should conduct his campaign?

Mr. POMERENE. It was, and his business associate, too. Think of that situation of Mr. King taking great pride in the fact that he preserved the records in the Townsend campaign for nearly two years, when no question was ever raised either before or since about the validity of the primary, but when it comes to another primary where there is a question raised the books are all gone.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Ohio if it is anywhere disclosed in the record—I do not recall—just exactly what books this so-called committee did keep? I do not now speak of receipts and canceled checks and check stubs, but I speak of books of account in which a record of the financial transactions was kept.

Mr. POMERENE. That was one of the very unsatisfactory things about this hearing. One of the witnesses referred to what he thought were ledgers in the bookkeeping department.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I recall that there is testimony to the effect that they had an auditing department.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; that was referred to as an auditing department.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So it would appear that the thing was well organized to preserve the book accounts of transactions.

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly; and yet with all of this assistance about the headquarters we can not get a trace of any of those books. One man suggested that certain documents or records were left there and the State Republican campaign committee took charge, but the chairman of that committee is dead; and Emery, the one man who is supposed to have all the information and who is referred to repeatedly by a number of these witnesses, we found was in the woods under the circumstances indicated in the previous part of this discussion, but later on, when it became known that the committee had closed its hearings, Emery was in Detroit.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio if he believes that now or at any time Emery has been in a condition when he could go before a committee and testify as a man might testify under ordinary circumstances?

Mr. POMERENE. I will be just as frank as the Senator might expect me to be. I have no positive knowledge on the subject except that I have been reliably informed at different times that he came back to Detroit and that he went about his business and on the streets.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But the Senator knows from the record and from the statements of the attorney for Mr. Ford that he went to Canada, not in the woods, but he went there after counsel had determined that he could not testify; he went to a relative's home, not intending to stay there; he did not stay there and did not go there for his home, but has been in Detroit, his home, ever since.

Mr. POMERENE. Why, Mr. President, that is simply going over what we went over yesterday. It is true that when the process server served the subpoena upon him he went to Mr. Lucking and said that that man was not able to come to Washington. If my memory serves me rightly, Emery's attorney, or some one representing him, made a similar statement to Mr. Lucking, and Mr. Lucking then stated, in substance, that if he was not able to come, of course he would cancel the service. It was after that that he went away, but bear in mind that that was 30 days or more before the final conclusion of this testimony. While it may be true that at that particular time he was not in condition to come, it nowhere appears that at the time we were seeking to get him—I mean the last time—he was not in a condition to come, and there has been nothing shown here to the contrary, so far as I now know.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio if there was anything to disclose that Emery would have been unable to testify if the subcommittee had gone to Detroit to examine him?

Mr. POMERENE. That was one of the thoughts that we had in mind. I can not give the various stages of the matter now, but we wanted to get some competent physician to go and examine him, and, if possible, to take his testimony on written interrogatory. We took the testimony of the witness Joy by interrogatory, all of which had been agreed upon. No such opportunity was given as to this man Emery.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And none was asked.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, well—

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just a moment—

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; just one moment. I will answer that statement. I do not propose to be put in that attitude when we presented these different resolutions after the testimony had been closed by the majority of the committee. We asked for other witnesses and such witnesses as each member of the committee might call for. That was denied.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did the Senator have in mind Mr. Emery?

Mr. POMERENE. I had, sir. I had in mind Mr. Smith. I had in mind Mr. Newberry. I had in mind the bank officials up there. I had in mind some of these bank officials in New York.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator from Ohio know of any reason why the majority should not have wanted Mr. Emery as much as the minority? I am surprised that the majority did not ask for him.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me to answer the statement of the Senator from Virginia, we certainly did want his testimony. Will the Senator let me read just a sentence or two from the record?

The fact of the matter is that this man Emery was mentally as well as physically incompetent as a witness. Three witnesses testified before us, in addition to his doctor's certificate, as to his mental condition. Mr. Lucking, the counsel for Ford himself, excused Emery and then afterwards said that he was misinformed, and the record shows this from the counsel of Mr. Emery himself. We wanted them to have Dr. Sladen—he was Ford's doctor; that is, he was a doctor in Ford's hospital—examine Emery, and we telegraphed up there and Dr. Sladen examined Emery and confirmed the fact that he was mentally and physically incapacitated.

Mr. POMERENE. What is the date of that?

Mr. SPENCER. I am reading from page 730 of the record. The date of the telegram back from Dr. Sladen is June 11, 1921. Dr. Sladen telegraphed back that he could not examine Emery because Emery had gone to Canada, and something was made of that. Emery's counsel put this statement in the record:

Upon positive assurance made to me by Mr. Lucking at a conference held at his suggestion—

Mr. SWANSON. What date is that?

Mr. SPENCER. June 13, 1921, when we were trying to get Emery.

At a conference held at his suggestion, and with a full understanding on his part of Mr. Emery's serious condition, and the recall of subpoena and Mr. Emery's notification thereof, Mr. Emery left Detroit for a few days' stay at my home in Canada in order to prepare for a serious operation in the near future. Dr. Sladen's inference as quoted in press is untrue.

That inference was that he had skipped to Canada.

Mrs. Emery simply refused responsibility, and referred him to me—

That is, Dr. Sladen—

for any arrangements to be made. I have never heard from him. Mr. A. Lucking—

That, I think, is the young man—has in his files in the case of Emery v. Ford—

For, by a curious circumstance, Emery was hurt by a Ford machine and is now suing Mr. Ford for a large sum of money for damages—

Mr. A. Lucking has in his files in the case of Emery v. Ford a complete diagnosis of Mr. Emery's very serious condition, and as his attorney in the case mentioned, I can not consent to have his interest jeopardized. The statements that were forwarded to the Senate committee from his own physicians seem to be ample to excuse his attendance.

The Senator from Ohio is right, that that was perhaps 20 or 30 days before the next request was made, but, Senators, that man, according to the testimony of every witness, was mentally as well as physically incapacitated. A man with his skull fractured in five places does not recover in 30 days, if he ever recovers; and the committee felt that it would possibly have resulted in nothing less than his death to have required that man to have subjected himself to an examination in the face of those conditions.

Mr. POMERENE. I submit that the committee had no evidence upon which to base any such contention as that.

Mr. SPENCER. The committee took the doctor's statement that to compel him to undergo an examination would bring upon him a collapse that might prove fatal. Those are the words of the physician.

Mr. POMERENE. It has not proved fatal; and he is still up there and attending to business.

Mr. SPENCER. He has not been examined, but he is not attending to business.

Mr. POMERENE. How does the Senator know that he is not capable of giving testimony now?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Ohio can not point his finger to a single line of testimony to show that he is attending to business. He was able to walk, and he did go to his office, but the testimony shows that whenever one talked with him all he could speak about was his injury; that his mind seemed to be gone on other matters. He is mentally incompetent as well as physically incompetent. Why make so much over a fact like that?

Mr. POMERENE. If it were a fact, I would not raise any question about it.

Mr. SWANSON. At what time was the evidence closed?

Mr. SPENCER. The evidence, I think, was closed on or about June 15, within a very few days after that.

Mr. SWANSON. He has not been since examined?

Mr. SPENCER. Not since June 13.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before we leave this point I desire to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if Mr. Emery was the only man about the office—I understand that at one time there were at least 200 people employed there—if Mr. Emery was the only man about the office who could tell as to the actual books that were kept and what became of those books and just exactly why books of account, which were intended to be a permanent record of the financial transactions, should be destroyed?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that is one of the things about which I sought to get some reliable information; but the whole record points to Mr. Emery as the one man who would know. I have read Mr. King's testimony here, or a large part of it, on that very point.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. Turner, who was the assistant secretary, says he does not know anything about it.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. Blair knew most about it in the absence of Mr. Emery, but I agree with the Senator that Mr. Emery knew more than did any other man about the details of the management.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator think he could tell why he destroyed the account books?

Mr. SPENCER. From the testimony before the committee concerning him, I do not think he could have answered anything coherently or intelligently, and I think it would have been at the very risk of his life to have subjected him to an examination.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I mean if he were competent, would he be able to tell us why he destroyed the account books?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think there is the slightest evidence that any account books ever were destroyed. The only testimony of any destruction is that of the ordinary circular letters and other documents that were thrown out at night, as was stated, to be destroyed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Where are those account books?

Mr. SPENCER. The only account books that were ever kept were of the items as they came in. Contributions were deposited and as items were paid out the bills were filed; and every check which paid the bill—and every bill was paid by a check—was before our committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is, there were no account books?

Mr. SPENCER. There were no account books in the sense of bound books, but there was an absolute account of every dollar that was received and every dollar that was paid out. That is what an account is, and the Senator knows it as well as I do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am not talking about the bound kind of accounts; I am talking about accounts, whether they were loose-leaf books or bound books.

Mr. SPENCER. I have told the Senator that the accounts were on loose sheets; that they were kept until at the end of the campaign, and that the checks which had paid the debts were entered upon a check register, which was before our committee and which was the original book of account and represented the expenditures of the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What was the original book of account?

Mr. SPENCER. I have told the Senator, but I will tell him again. The original book of account was a book about 2 feet long and a foot and a half wide, and had upon it each check by its number, its payee, and its purpose. Every expenditure of the campaign was paid in that way, except the pay roll, and that was in another similar book.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. When was that check register made?

Mr. SPENCER. That check register was made just upon the eve of making the report, at the very end—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. SPENCER. And every item that went into it had been carefully kept and filed until it was entered in the original book.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly. I am talking about a book in which from day to day, as the transactions took place, they were entered.

Mr. SPENCER. That also was done, but not in a book. The Senator is straining at a gnat. Here is what was done: When a man came in with a bill against the campaign committee—

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Missouri is swallowing a camel.

Mr. SPENCER. That is swallowed. As I was saying, when a man came in with a bill for any amount, when any expenditure was made or amount paid out, the receipt was kept. If the expenditure was not on account of a bill, a memorandum of the amount and the circumstances was filed—I mean put upon a filing book or anything else that they had—and a check was drawn for it. Those constituted the original memoranda, as any man who is familiar with bookkeeping knows; and at the end of the campaign everyone of those items that had been carefully kept was tabulated in the check register. That was the original book of account, and that was before the committee in its entirety.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know very much about bookkeeping, but I make a vast distinction between an invoice file and a book of accounts. Perhaps the Senator from Missouri does not do so, but I do.

Mr. SPENCER. There were no such books of accounts as a great corporation or a business house would have kept. I frankly admit that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to add that the witness who knows all about it says that there were books of account kept, actual bound books.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no witness who says that there were bound books of account, and the Senator can not put his finger on such testimony. There is one witness who speaks of little books that he saw around there, but just what they contained he did not know. The testimony of the witnesses is that the original book of account was the check register and the pay-roll register to which I have already referred.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Ohio has been on the floor speaking for about four hours and a half. It has been intimated that there is going to be an executive session.

Mr. CURTIS. I inquire if the Senator from Ohio is through for to-night?

Mr. POMERENE. I think I would rather that a recess be taken at this time.

Mr. CURTIS. It is desired to have a short executive session, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, November 19, 1921, at 10 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate November 18 (legislative day of November 16), 1921.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Noah Crooks, of Unionville, Mo., to be collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Missouri, in place of George F. Crutchley, resigned.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

Robert R. Levy, of Illinois, to be United States marshal northern district of Illinois, vice John J. Bradley, resigned, effective January 1, 1922.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Jewell Bratton to be postmaster at Jemison, Ala. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

CALIFORNIA.

Kenneth F. Reynolds to be postmaster at Irvington, Calif. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

William P. Coffman to be postmaster at Burbank, Calif., in place of Charles R. Thompson, resigned.

FLORIDA.

Goldie B. Helm to be postmaster at Oneco, Fla., in place of G. B. Dillaplane, name changed by marriage.

IDAHO.

Charles B. Mirgon to be postmaster at Cascade, Idaho, in place of S. A. Jones, resigned.

ILLINOIS.

Mary E. Lister to be postmaster at Percy, Ill. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

William E. Kitch to be postmaster at Niantic, Ill. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Jefferson Louk to be postmaster at Prairie City, Ill. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Edna G. Mallette to be postmaster at Reynolds, Ill. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Henry E. Petersen to be postmaster at Ashkum, Ill., in place of C. A. Heffern. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

George Howard to be postmaster at Brimfield, Ill., in place of Fred Arber. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Arthur L. Burdette to be postmaster at Danvers, Ill., in place of A. H. Nafziger. Incumbent's commission expired April 24, 1921.

Henry C. Arkebauer to be postmaster at Mount Olive, Ill., in place of L. D. Fuess. Incumbent's commission expired September 7, 1920.

William D. Abbaduska to be postmaster at Odell, Ill., in place of P. H. Langan. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1921.

INDIANA.

Jesse A. McCluer to be postmaster at Marshall, Ind. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Forrest Oilar to be postmaster at Chalmers, Ind., in place of Earl Chamberlain. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

IOWA.

Freddie Baldwin to be postmaster at Chester, Iowa. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Miller C. Rhoads to be postmaster at Clarksville, Iowa, in place of Albert Neal. Incumbent's commission expired July 27, 1920.

John P. McNeill to be postmaster at Melcher, Iowa, in place of C. O. Goode. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Keith L. McClurkin to be postmaster at Morning Sun, Iowa, in place of Bert McKinley. Incumbent's commission expired June 29, 1920.

KANSAS.

Josie Curtis to be postmaster at Englewood, Kans., in place of Josie Curtis. Incumbent's commission expired May 7, 1921.

KENTUCKY.

Louis E. Rue to be postmaster at Danville, Ky., in place of W. L. Wood, resigned.

LOUISIANA.

James H. Leech to be postmaster at Mer Rouge, La., in place of J. H. Leech. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1921.

MAINE.

Charles W. Farrington to be postmaster at Mexico, Me. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Wallace M. Ripley to be postmaster at Wilbraham, Mass. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

MICHIGAN.

Fred R. Allen to be postmaster at Leslie, Mich., in place of D. D. Ranney, resigned.

William M. Snell to be postmaster at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., in place of James McKenna. Incumbent's commission expired January 18, 1920.

MISSOURI.

Charles E. Leach to be postmaster at Deepwater, Mo., in place of J. H. Dunning. Incumbent's commission expired August 26, 1920.

Selma Brashear to be postmaster at Parnell, Mo., in place of Goldie Wilson. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1921.

MONTANA.

Richard Murray to be postmaster at Klein, Mont. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Hazel F. McKinnon to be postmaster at Bearcreek, Mont., in place of U. H. Nottingham. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Malcolm W. Clarke to be postmaster at Browning, Mont., in place of Peter Des Rosier. Incumbent's commission expired January 30, 1921.

John R. Farris to be postmaster at Conrad, Mont., in place of J. A. Goodrich. Incumbent's commission expired August 3, 1920.

Roy Ross to be postmaster at Moore, Mont., in place of A. B. Hensley, resigned.

Garfield Hankins to be postmaster at Musselshell, Mont., in place of W. L. Bruce, removed.

Robert M. Fry to be postmaster at Park City, Mont., in place of R. M. Fry. Incumbent's commission expired April 16, 1921.

John A. Brown to be postmaster at Ryegate, Mont., in place of C. H. Allan. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Noble O. Anderson to be postmaster at Savage, Mont., in place of M. U. Maine. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

William A. Francis to be postmaster at Virginia City, Mont., in place of W. A. Francis. Incumbent's commission expired June 27, 1920.

Harry J. Waters to be postmaster at Rapelje, Mont. Office became presidential January 1, 1920.

NEBRASKA.

Amos W. Shafer to be postmaster at Polk, Nebr., in place of H. M. McGaffin. Incumbent's commission expired June 27, 1920.

Edgar A. Wight, jr., to be postmaster at Wolbach, Nebr., in place of V. E. Plank. Incumbent's commission expired September 7, 1920.

Esther Schwerdtfeger to be postmaster at Cambridge, Nebr., in place of G. C. Chadderdon, resigned.

Peter S. Petersen to be postmaster at Dannebrog, Nebr., in place of A. P. Thomsen. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Ervin W. Hodsdon to be postmaster at Mountainview, N. H. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Alfred S. Cloues to be postmaster at Warner, N. H., in place of C. P. Johnson. Incumbent's commission expired January 5, 1920.

NEW JERSEY.

Bertha A. Grabosky to be postmaster at Palisade, N. J., in place of G. F. Stabel, resigned.

NEW MEXICO.

Joseph H. Gentry to be postmaster at Fort Stanton, N. Mex. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Florence S. Shafer to be postmaster at Mills, N. Mex. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

NEW YORK.

Ivan L. Connor to be postmaster at Natural Bridge, N. Y. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

William D. Streeter to be postmaster at Richland, N. Y. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Edward J. McCourt to be postmaster at Arlington, N. Y., in place of J. W. Rose. Incumbent's commission expired January 28, 1920.

George W. Hulbert to be postmaster at Downsville, N. Y., in place of A. G. Neff, resigned.

Sylvester P. Shea to be postmaster at Freeport, N. Y., in place of T. B. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired May 6, 1920.

Sheldon G. Stratton to be postmaster at Sacket Harbor, N. Y., in place of C. M. Stearne. Incumbent's commission expired July 12, 1920.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Harry M. Pippin to be postmaster at Halliday, N. Dak. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Myron T. Davis to be postmaster at Lisbon, N. Dak., in place of C. S. Ego, resigned.

Dorothea L. Haugen to be postmaster at Maddock, N. Dak., in place of Perry Roath, resigned.

Albert J. Olson to be postmaster at Medina, N. Dak., in place of Peter Karpen, resigned.

D. G. McIntosh to be postmaster at St. Thomas, N. Dak., in place of A. C. Grant, resigned.

Abraham T. Anderson to be postmaster at Turtle Lake, N. Dak., in place of A. T. Anderson. Incumbent's commission expired January 7, 1920.

OHIO.

Robert S. Nichols to be postmaster at Jackson Center, Ohio. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

John M. Poplin to be postmaster at Bergholz, Ohio, in place of H. A. Carson, resigned.

John E. Scamahorn to be postmaster at Brilliant, Ohio, in place of W. H. Miller, declined.

Lida R. Williamson to be postmaster at Seaman, Ohio, in place of L. F. Williamson, deceased.

Hugh C. Bell to be postmaster at Utica, Ohio, in place of C. C. Hughs, resigned.

OKLAHOMA.

Roy E. Cline to be postmaster at Osage, Okla. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Gaylord S. Clute to be postmaster at Barnsdall (late Bigheart), Okla., in place of M. D. Swift, resigned.

Walter S. Miller to be postmaster at Copan, Okla., in place of M. J. Courtney. Incumbent's commission expired January 19, 1921.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Karl Mette to be postmaster at Woolrich, Pa. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Russell H. Brown, to be postmaster at Yukon, Pa., Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

John J. Mather to be postmaster at Benton, Pa., in place of Percy Brewington. Incumbent's commission expired June 29, 1920.

William L. Hendricks to be postmaster at Bolivar, Pa., in place of Thomas McHall. Incumbent's commission expired August 26, 1920.

Samuel H. Hughes to be postmaster at Camp Hill, Pa., in place of U. G. Hawbecker, declined.

Earl W. Hopkins to be postmaster at Leetsdale, Pa., in place of H. A. Brown. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1920.

Demas L. Post to be postmaster at Marianna, Pa., in place of D. M. Shidler, declined.

James C. Bovard to be postmaster at Marion Center, Pa., in place of J. C. McCormick. Incumbent's commission expired January 2, 1921.

Jacob R. Snyder to be postmaster at Mount Holly Springs, Pa., in place of I. C. Gleim. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1920.

Robert E. Gammell to be postmaster at Tremont, Pa., in place of M. J. Fleming, deceased.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

William R. Rozier to be postmaster at Bethune, S. C. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Paul E. Bryson to be postmaster at Woodruff, S. C., in place of B. K. Arnold. Incumbent's commission expired August 1, 1917.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Oscar N. Hunt to be postmaster at Quim, S. Dak. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Clarence Mork to be postmaster at Pierpont, S. Dak., in place of J. H. Parrott. Incumbent's commission expired January 15, 1921.

Elmer J. O'Connell to be postmaster at Ramona, S. Dak., in place of Nora O'Donnell. Incumbent's commission expired July 25, 1920.

Mary A. Pike to be postmaster at Tyndall, S. Dak., in place of M. A. Pike. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1921.

TENNESSEE.

Charles L. Bitner to be postmaster at Chuckey, Tenn. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

John D. M. Marshall to be postmaster at Lookout Mountain, Tenn. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

James C. Key to be postmaster at Riceville, Tenn. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Arthur Taylor to be postmaster at Lenoir City, Tenn., in place of W. N. Lacy. Incumbent's commission expired April 16, 1921.

Paul E. Walker to be postmaster at Ridgely, Tenn., in place of T. L. Fowlkes. Incumbent's commission expired January 2, 1921.

Mettie M. Collins to be postmaster at Rutledge, Tenn., in place of C. E. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired January 2, 1921.

James H. Christian to be postmaster at Smithville, Tenn., in place of J. B. Moore. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

TEXAS.

Enoch G. Fletcher to be postmaster at Grand Saline, Tex., in place of G. D. Staton. Incumbent's commission expired July 15, 1920.

UTAH.

Henry C. Ward to be postmaster at Myton, Utah, in place of William Zowe. Incumbent's commission expired January 5, 1920.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Ulysses S. Jarrett to be postmaster at St. Albans, W. Va., in place of G. F. McComas, resigned.

WISCONSIN.

George J. Chesak to be postmaster at Athens, Wis., in place of F. A. Lonsdorf, resigned.

Illma Dugal to be postmaster at Cadott, Wis., in place of P. P. Dugal, deceased.

Asa B. Cronk to be postmaster at Clear Lake, Wis., in place of F. A. Partlow, removed.

John E. Huff to be postmaster at Florence, Wis., in place of Herbert Winkler. Incumbent's commission expired July 10, 1920.

Harry E. Eustice to be postmaster at Livingston, Wis., in place of R. A. Tenney. Incumbent's commission expired July 10, 1920.

Mary G. Helke to be postmaster at Nekoosa, Wis., in place of L. G. Schaar, removed.

Guy M. Boughton to be postmaster at St. Croix Falls, Wis., in place of M. W. Blanding. Incumbent's commission expired June 2, 1920.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate November 18 (legislative day of November 16), 1921.

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY.

John W. Riddle to be ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Argentina.

CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES TO GERMANY.

Ellis Loring Dresel to be chargé d'affaires to Germany.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Alexander L. McCaskill to be collector of customs, customs collection district No. 15, with headquarters at Wilmington, N. C.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Josiah T. Rose to be collector of internal revenue, district of Georgia.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

James A. Stallworth, Crichton.

ARIZONA.

John Murray, Snowflake.

CALIFORNIA.

Arthur L. Doran, Barstow.

Christian J. Aggergaard, Big Creek.

James R. Weatherly, Camarillo.

Abraham Clevenger, Caruthers.

Leonard E. Whitener, Coalinga.

William J. Mowry, Colma.

Winfield S. Smith, Del Rey.

William C. Brill, Elk Grove.

Marguerite J. Decions, Fort Bidwell.

Edward Smith, Grimes.

Louisa A. Cobden, Groveland.

Carl F. Becker, Samoa.

Daisy L. Plant, Spreckels.

Dollie L. Carr, Templeton.

COLORADO.

Reno H. Auld, Otis.

IDAHO.

Milton L. March, Huston.

Milton H. Brinton, Victor.

Grace Eubanks, Winchester.

ILLINOIS.

Guy R. Correll, Hutsonville.

INDIANA.

Mary J. Haines, Amboy.

Alfred S. Hess, Gary.

IOWA.

Milton W. Knapp, Aurora.

Earl Miller, Cantril.

Michael D. Kelly, Harpers Ferry.

Chester B. De Veny, New Hartford.

Andrew Maland, Slater.

Eric L. Ericson, Story City.

John A. Bigger, Wapello.

KANSAS.

James Rae, Franklin.

Elizabeth Cooper, Utica.

MICHIGAN.

Gordon D. Dafoc, Owendale.

MISSISSIPPI.

Rosa W. Burton, Alligator.

Sarah A. Tyner, Bay Springs.

Fletcher H. Womack, Crenshaw.

Frances G. Wimberly, Jonestown.

Anslem P. Russell, Magee.

John C. Bowen, Senatobia.

Rosa Del Buono, Stonewall.

NEW JERSEY.

Elmer B. Ramsey, High Bridge.

NEW MEXICO.

Philip Jagels, Bernalillo.

Laura J. Smith, Koehler.

Fred D. Hunting, Los Lunas.

Philip N. Sanchez, Mora.

NEW YORK.

Robert W. Gallagher, Buffalo.

Thomas W. Crane, Locust Valley.

F. L. Babcock, Massena Springs.

George H. Fischer, Mayville.

Horton Davry, Mechanicville (late Mechanicsville).

J. Wilfred Shaw, Newfane.

Frederick G. Newell, Niagara Falls.

NORTH DAKOTA.

John Brusven, Barton.

Dana E. Cone, Beulah.

Emma B. Dean, Crary.

Ida G. H. Morrow, Drake.

August M. Bruschwein, Driscoll.

Noyes H. Whitcomb, Flasher.

Olaf N. Hegge, Hatton.

Samuel N. Rinde, Lankin.

Martin A. Wahlberg, Oberon.

Eldor G. Sogehorn, Stanton.

Jessie M. Lewis, Werner.

OHIO.

Paul R. Hart, Bradford.

Ora A. Ridiker, Brunswick.

Myron C. Cox, Fremont.

Thomas O. Armstrong, Middle Point.

William A. Cooper, Piketon.

OKLAHOMA.

Ethelbert H. Moats, Calumet.

Herman J. Fleming, Canton.

Fred C. Knapp, Depew.

John T. Williams, Perkins.

Frank S. Roodhouse, Shawnee.

PENNSYLVANIA.

James F. Wills, Belleville.

John G. Scott, Burgettstown.

Lincoln W. Pentecost, Clarks Summit.

Ralph Simons, Cornwells Heights.

Albert J. Matson, Delta.

Charles D. Kelley, Eldred.

Frederick V. Pletcher, Howard.

James H. Beamer, Manor.

Esther F. Rivers, Ogontz School.

George M. Jameson, Petrolia.

Samuel L. Miller, Schwenkville.

William A. Sickel, Snow Shoe.

Roger A. McCall, Trafford.

Oscar Maul, Turbotville.

Carl B. Troy, West Brownsville.

Mary A. Jefferis, Wynnewood.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Bessie F. Cannon, Clifton.
John L. Bunch, McColl.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Chester T. Chester, Arlington.
Guy R. Neher, Dell Rapids.
Henry F. Cook, Northville.
Ida V. Uhlig, Whitewood.

TEXAS.

Manley J. Holmes, Baird.
G. Carroll W. Wayland, Buda.
Charles S. Brown, Dayton.
Frank Farrington, Diboll.
Walter S. Yates, Forney.
Pearl B. Zinn, Fostoria.
William C. Young, Garrison.
Matilda Akesson, Hale Center.
Charlie B. Starke, Holland.
Lucy Breen, Mineola.
Will C. Easterling, Ozona.
John O. Holmes, Panhandle.
Willard A. Maxey, Parks.
Walter Wood, Springtown.
Thomas J. Darling, Temple.
Kit C. Stinebaugh, Walnut Springs.

WASHINGTON.

Ira A. Moore, Greenacres.
Edwin O. Dressel, Mataline Falls.
Cyrus F. Morrow, Walla Walla.

WEST VIRGINIA.

William B. Wilson, Panther.
Kenna W. Snedegar, Renick.

WISCONSIN.

Edward W. Guth, Adell.
Henry F. Roehrig, Arpin.
Carl F. Swerman, Bangor.
Margaret L. Staley, Birnamwood.
Arthur V. Carpenter, Crandon.
Alexander M. Powers, Delafield.
Lila O. Burton, Eagle.
Arthur M. Howe, Elk Mound.
George F. Sherburne, Fremont.
Paul L. Fugina, Fountain City.
Charles H. Prouty, Genoa Junction.
Marion L. Kutchin, Green Lake.
George A. Slaikeu, Luck.
Frank E. Christensen, Necedah.
Hannah Goodyear, Niagara.
Alfred E. Redfield, Stevens Point.
William J. Winters, Tripoli.
Charles W. Eagan, Wautoma.
Thomas E. Noyes, Winter.
Alice K. Hoyer, Woodruff.

WITHDRAWAL.

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate November 18 (legislative day of November 16), 1921.

POSTMASTER.

Abbie Tonjes to be postmaster at Palisade, in the State of New Jersey.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, November 18, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, be merciful unto us for Thy name's sake. Hear us as we make in the spirit of humiliation our appealing protest against our unfinished natures and the incompleteness of our little lives. O enlarge our natures and yet subject their tendencies; preserve our hearts and yet destroy their selfishness; control our wills and yet sustain their courage. But not by might nor by power, but by the spirit of Him who is our Elder Brother. O may we be tempted from evil by being drawn to goodness. Give us the spirit of fellowship with those whose food is the bread of tears. May we be thoughtful of the wants and the needs of others, and let us be burdened with the deeds and the destinies of our country. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. McSWAIN was granted leave of absence for 10 days, on account of illness in his family.

QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Gahn	McSwain	Rossdale
Bell	Garrett, Tex.	Madden	Rucker
Bland, Ind.	Goodykoontz	Mann	Sabath
Brand	Gorman	Mansfield	Schall
Briggs	Gould	Merritt	Sears
Buchanan	Graham, Pa.	Mills	Shelton
Carter	Griest	Montague	Siegel
Chandler, Okla.	Harrison	Morin	Snell
Connell	Hays	Mott	Snyder
Cooper, Ohio	Herrick	Mudd	Stoll
Copley	Hukriede	Nolan	Sullivan
Davis, Minn.	Husted	O'Brien	Taylor, Colo.
Dempsey	Jeffers, Nebr.	O'Connor	Ten Eyck
Draue	Johnson, Ky.	Ogden	Tilson
Driver	Johnson, S. Dak.	Oliver	Tinkham
Echols	Kahn	Perlman	Tyson
Elston	Kelley, Mich.	Peters	Upshaw
Fish	Kitchin	Rainey, Ala.	Vare
Fitzgerald	Knight	Rainey, Ill.	Ward, N. Y.
Flood	Kreider	Rhodes	Wason
Focht	Lyon	Riordan	Wright
Free	McArthur	Ronch
Freeman	McCormick	Rogers

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 342 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1039) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes it in order for the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of what is known as the maternity bill.

This bill has been before Congress now through two Congresses. In its original form it was very different from the bill which is now before the House. As originally introduced it was objectionable to me and to many Members of the House of Representatives. As it has been changed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and is now before us, many, if not most, of these objections have been removed.

I want to congratulate the members of the committee for the splendid work that they have done with respect to this bill.

Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POW] desire to use some time?

Mr. POW. I wish the gentleman would yield me about 10 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. POW. Mr. Speaker, this measure is not privileged under the general rules of the House. Therefore the only way to bring it before the House is by a rule.

This matter has been much discussed throughout the country, and there is certainly a demand for its passage sufficient to justify the Committee on Rules in giving the House an opportunity to vote on it. That would seem sufficient justification for giving the measure a privileged status. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to prevent or delay the consideration of the bill which this rule proposes to make in order. I do not understand, however, just why the rule is presented at this time. Some four or five days ago the Committee on Rules adopted resolutions making in order two bills—this bill, the maternity bill, and the reclassification bill. Both of these had been reported at that time and were upon the calendar of the House. For some reason the powers that be on the majority side determined to bring up the reclassification bill first. It was brought before the House, it was debated in general debate, and it was taken up under the 5-minute rule. All the debate, as I remember it in the general debate and under the 5-minute rule, had been devoted exclusively to the reclassification bill. It was being discussed with the greatest interest by Members, all recognizing it as an extremely important measure.

Now, here, suddenly, I do not know for what reason, it is proposed to sidetrack that measure—whether that means an indefinite postponement I, of course, am not aware—and take up this measure. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the gentlemen of the majority side resemble in their course of the conduct of the business of the House, and of the country, Kipling's monkey people whom he designated as "Banderlog" in the Jungle Book, in that they jump from tree to tree, throwing down trash, chattering and chattering all the time, but never completing any task to which they set themselves, abandoning the end in sight even before a real beginning has been made. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAYTON. When, if at all, will a motion be in order to offer a substitute to this rule for the House to return to the consideration and completion of the classification bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that that motion will be in order if the gentleman from Kansas would yield to the gentleman from Delaware for that purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee seems to be in an inquiring state of mind this morning. I did not expect to speak on this rule, but I rise to gratify the craving of the gentleman from Tennessee for information. For a long time, as is well known, Members of the House have desired to have advance information, so far as it was possible to give it, with regard to the program of legislation. In an endeavor to meet that very proper desire we have been endeavoring to give the House in advance a tentative statement of the probable program.

Last week, after consultation with many Members of the House, and particularly with the members of committees interested, the chairman of the Committee on Rules and members of that committee, it was decided that on Tuesday of this week we should take up for consideration the classification bill with the expectation that that bill might be disposed of, and that on yesterday we would take up for consideration what is known as the maternity bill.

The classification bill was first taken up because at the time that tentative program was agreed upon the maternity bill, while agreed upon by the committee, had not been reported to the House. The other bill had and was on the calendar. It was proper, therefore, to give it the right of way.

We have not proceeded with the classification bill as rapidly as we had anticipated. There was some question in the minds of the Members whether or no, under these circumstances, and in view of the fact that it was necessary to utilize the time yesterday for a highly important measure, we should endeavor to keep the promise tentatively made in regard to the maternity bill or continue the consideration of the classification bill. I will say very frankly that my own thought has been that a part of the troubles we have had with the classification bill was due to a somewhat covert opposition to the maternity bill. I was of the opinion that we might clear the way for the classification bill a little if we considered the maternity bill first. Further, in so doing we are keeping faith with many good people who are tremendously interested in the maternity bill, some of whom have come to Washington from a long distance to be here during the consideration of the bill.

Under these circumstances it seems entirely proper to take this bill up to-day. That was the desire of the chairman of the Committee on Rules, and in that I fully agree and acquiesce. I assure the gentleman from Tennessee and gentlemen on both sides that after the consideration of this bill we shall return in due time to the consideration of the classification bill. We shall pass this bill to-morrow. The classification bill may be delayed, but in due time we hope to pass them both and within a reasonable time place them on the statute books. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to use any more time?

Mr. POULSON. No.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then, Mr. Speaker, all the information sought by the gentleman from Tennessee has been given by the gentleman from Wyoming, and all gentlemen being satisfied—

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. On October 31 the law expired which would take from under the 10 per cent restriction clause loans made to any one borrower by a national bank that were secured by Liberty bonds where the borrower was originally the subscriber of those bonds. Before October 31 the Senate passed a bill extending the time for another year, and the House committee recommended it and adopted a motion asking for a rule for its consideration and it is on the calendar. Can the gentleman give any idea when we shall be permitted to pass that bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This is the first time I have had any information that such a bill had been reported.

Mr. WINGO. And this is the first information the gentleman has had of that?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This is the first information that I have had that any such condition existed.

Mr. WINGO. I regret to hear that. I had hoped that the condition would appeal to the responsible leaders of the Republican Party, sufficiently to have them give relief by prompt passage of the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I can see the great bearing that the question has on the bill now pending, however.

Mr. WINGO. I merely wanted to know when we would probably come to the consideration of that measure. The gentleman said that we were going to take up the reclassification bill after the conclusion of this. We are wasting time on the basket bill, and as a member of the Committee on Banking I am being written to by people who want to know if the banks will be compelled to cut down these loans, because the time expired on October 31. What shall I tell these country bankers?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I suggest that the gentleman tell them that the Committee on Banking and Currency has not asked for the consideration of their bill up to this time. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. That criticism does not apply to me. The Republicans control both the committee and the House.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LAYTON) there were—ayes 188, noes 24.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1039) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States. Pending the consideration of that motion I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate may be controlled equally by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], a member of the committee on the Democratic side of the House, and by the chairman of the committee on this side of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1039, and pending that asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate on the bill be controlled one-half by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW]. Is there objection?

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask whether the gentleman from Massachusetts is in favor of this bill or is opposed to it?

Mr. WINSLOW. I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, in that contingency, and following the rules of the House and the fair play of parliamentary procedure, I ask that the time in opposition to the bill shall be placed in the hands of an avowed opponent of the measure. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest to the gentleman from Delaware and to any others who are opposed to this bill that the gentleman from Massachusetts and I are both willing to yield to anyone who is opposed to the bill such time as they desire.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not accede to that unless I am turned down by the Chair. This is an important measure; the whole country from one end to the other is interested in it, because there is a principle underlying it which strikes at the foundation of constitutional government.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. LAYTON. Is it not the regular order all the time to have fair play?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York objects. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1039.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1039, with Mr. HUSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that in the reading of the bill that part which is stricken out, which is a Senate bill, be omitted.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand it, the gentleman asks for the reading of the House amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the House amendment be read in lieu of the Senate bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry. As the Chair will observe, the bill is a Senate bill, all of which has been stricken out and an amendment by way of a substitute proposed by the committee. My inquiry is this, When the amendment page is reached under the 5-minute rule, will the Senate bill then be read section by section for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the opinion of the Chair that it would be.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the committee amendment by way of a substitute be treated as one amendment, or will it be read section by section for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Unless by unanimous consent it is otherwise ordered, the amendment will be treated as one amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, that has never been the rule heretofore in the consideration of a House substitute, where the House substitute consists of different sections of the bill. They have been read section by section. I think the Chair is establishing a new precedent entirely.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin is mistaken about establishing a precedent. The rule governs and the rule would require that the amendment be read altogether. It is usually the custom to couple with the unanimous-consent request which has just been made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, a further request that the amendment be read section by section, subject to amendment, in the same way as though it were an original bill. I hope that that will be done.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the view of the Chair that it must be treated as one amendment unless the committee or the House orders otherwise by unanimous consent.

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the House amendment be considered by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that we have not yet reached the reading stage.

Mr. Sisson. But I suppose I can prefer a unanimous-consent request at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair please state what the situation is at the present time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has preferred a unanimous-consent request that the House amendment be read in lieu of the Senate bill. Is there objection?

Mr. Sisson. Reserving the right to object, has the gentleman any objection to the amendment being treated by sections?

Mr. WINSLOW. None whatever.

Mr. Sisson. Then why not couple with his request for unanimous consent a request that the House amendment be considered by sections.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts and ask for the reading of the Senate bill and the House amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums specified in section 2 of this act, to be paid to the several States for the purpose of cooperating with them in promoting the care of maternity and infancy as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 2. That for the purpose of aiding in paying the expenses of said cooperative work in providing the services and facilities specified in this act, and the necessary printing and distribution of information in connection with the same, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $480,000 for each year, $10,000 of which shall be paid annually to each State, in the manner hereinafter provided: Provided, That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, an additional sum of $1,000,000, and annually thereafter a sum not to exceed $1,000,000: Provided further, That the additional appropriations herein authorized shall be apportioned among the States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population of the United States, not including outlying possessions, according to the last preceding United States census: And provided further, That no payment out of the additional appropriation herein authorized shall be made in any year to any State until an equal sum has been appropriated for that year by the legislature of such State for the maintenance of the services and facilities provided for in this act.

So much of the amount appropriated apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available for expenditures in that State until the close of the succeeding fiscal year. Any amount apportioned under the provisions of this act unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under the terms of this section shall be reapportioned, within 60 days thereafter, to all the States in the same manner and on the same basis, and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State agencies described in section 4 in the same way as if it were being apportioned under this act for the first time.

Sec. 3. The Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor shall be charged with the carrying out of the provisions of this act, as herein provided, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall be the executive officer. The Chief of the Children's Bureau as executive officer, is hereby directed to form an advisory committee to consult with the Chief of the Children's Bureau and to advise concerning any problems which may arise in connection with the carrying out of the provisions of this act, such advisory committee to consist of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education. The Children's Bureau shall have charge of all matters concerning the administration of this act, as herein provided, and shall have power to cooperate with the State agencies authorized to carry out the provisions of this act. It shall be the duty of the Children's Bureau to make or cause to be made such studies, investigations, and reports as will promote the efficient administration of this act.

Sec. 4. That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations authorized in section 2 of this act any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, accept the provisions of this act and designate or authorize the creation of a State agency with which the Children's Bureau shall have all necessary powers to cooperate as herein provided in the administration of the provisions of this act: Provided, That in any State having a child-welfare or child-hygiene division in its State agency of health the State agency of health shall administer the provisions of this act through such divisions. The Children's Bureau shall recommend to the State agencies cooperating under this act the appointment of advisory committees, both State and local, to assist in carrying out the purposes of this act; the members of such advisory committee shall be selected by the State agencies, and at least half of such members shall be women, all of the members of which advisory committee shall serve without compensation. If in any State the legislature of which has not made provision for acceptance of this act or which does not meet in 1922, the governor of that State, so far as he is authorized to do so, may, under the provisions of law, accept the provisions of this act and designate or create a State agency to act in cooperation with the Children's Bureau, the said Children's Bureau shall then recognize such State agency for the purposes of this act until the legislature of such State meets in due course and has been in session 60 days.

Sec. 5. That so much, not to exceed 3 per cent, of the additional appropriations authorized for any fiscal year under section 2 of this act, as the Children's Bureau may estimate to be necessary for administering the provisions of this act, as herein provided, shall be deducted for that purpose, to be available until expended. Within 60 days after the close of each fiscal year the said Children's Bureau shall determine what part, if any, of the sums theretofore deducted for administering the provisions of this act will not be needed for that purpose, and apportion such part, if any, for the fiscal year then current in the same manner and on the same basis, and certify it to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the several State agencies described in section 4, in the same way as other amounts authorized by this act to be apportioned among the several States for such current fiscal year.

Sec. 6. That out of the amounts authorized under section 5 of this act the Children's Bureau is authorized to employ, to be taken from the eligible lists of the Civil Service Commission, such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere, to purchase such supplies, material, equipment, office fixtures, and apparatus, and to incur such travel and other expense as it may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

Sec. 7. That within 60 days after the approval of this act the Children's Bureau shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury and to each State agency described in section 4 the sum which the Children's Bureau has estimated to be deducted for administering the provisions of this act, and the sum which it has apportioned to each State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and on or before January 20 next preceding the commencement of each succeeding fiscal year, it shall make similar certifications for such fiscal year.

Sec. 8. That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its agency described in section 4, submit to the Children's Bureau for its approval detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act. These plans shall provide solely for the administration of the act in the State; and provision for instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public health nurses, consultation centers, and other suitable methods: Provided, That no plans or laws of the States under this act shall provide for any official or agent or representative entering any home or taking charge of any child over the objection of the parents, or either of them, or the person standing in loco parentis, nor shall any employees of the Children's Bureau by virtue of this act have any right to enter any home or take charge of any child over the objection of the parents, or either of them, or the person standing in loco parentis. If these plans and laws shall be in conformity with the provision of this act and reasonably appropriate and adequate to carry out its purposes, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State agency by the Chief of the Children's Bureau.

Sec. 9. That in order to provide instruction to the residents of the various States on the hygiene of infancy and maternity, the State agency described in section 4 is authorized to arrange with any educational institution approved for these purposes by the United States Commissioner of Education for the provision of extension courses by qualified lecturers: Provided, That not more than 25 per cent of the sums granted by the United States to a State under this act may be used for this purpose.

Sec. 10. That the facilities provided by any State agencies cooperating under the provisions of this act shall be available for all residents of the State.

Sec. 11. That the Children's Bureau shall every three months ascertain the amounts expended by the several State agencies described in section 4 in the preceding quarter year. On or before the 1st day of January and quarterly thereafter the Children's Bureau shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount to which each State is entitled under the provisions of this act. Upon such certification the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the State treasurer as custodian the amounts so certified.

Sec. 12. That each State agency cooperating under this act shall make such reports concerning its operation and expenditures as shall be prescribed by the Children's Bureau. The Children's Bureau may withhold the allotment of moneys to any State whenever it shall be determined that such moneys are not being expended for the purposes and under the conditions of this act.

If any allotment is withheld from any State, the State agency of such State may appeal to the President of the United States, and if the President shall not direct such sum to be paid it shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Sec. 13. No portion of any moneys apportioned under this act for the benefit of the States shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, erection, preservation, or repair of any building or buildings or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any buildings or lands.

Sec. 14. That the Children's Bureau shall perform the duties assigned to it by this act under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of Labor, and he shall include in his annual report to Congress a full account of the administration of this act and expenditures of the moneys herein authorized.

Committee amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause, page 1, line 3, down to and including line 26, on page 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums specified in section 2 of this act, to be paid to the several States for the purpose of cooperating with them in promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 2. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the current fiscal year $480,000, to be equally apportioned among the several States, and for each subsequent year, for the period of five years, $240,000, to be equally apportioned among the several States in the manner hereinafter provided: Provided, That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, an additional sum of $1,000,000, and annually thereafter, for the period of five years, an additional sum not to exceed $1,000,000: Provided further, That the additional appropriations herein authorized shall be apportioned $5,000 to each State and the balance among the States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population of the United States, not including outlying possessions, according to the last preceding United States census: And provided further, That no payment out of the additional appropriation herein authorized shall be made in any year to any State until an equal sum has been appropriated for that year by the legislature of such State for the maintenance of the services and facilities provided for in this act.

So much of the amount apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unpaid to such State at the close thereof shall be available for expenditures in that State until the close of the succeeding fiscal year.

Sec. 3. There is hereby created a Board of Maternity and Infant Hygiene, which shall consist of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education, and which is hereafter designated in this act as the board. The board shall elect its own chairman and perform the duties provided for in this act.

The Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor shall be charged with the administration of this act, except as herein otherwise provided, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall be the executive officer. It shall be the duty of the Children's Bureau to make or cause to be made such studies, investigations, and reports as will promote the efficient administration of this act.

Sec. 4. In order to secure the benefits of the appropriations authorized in section 2 of this act, any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, accept the provisions of this act and designate or authorize the creation of a State agency with which the Children's Bureau shall have all necessary powers to cooperate as herein provided in the administration of the provisions of this act: Provided, That in any State having a child welfare or child hygiene division in its State agency of health, the said State agency of health shall administer the provisions of this act through such divisions. If the legislature of any State has not made provision for accepting the provisions of this act the governor of such State may in so far as he is authorized to do so by the laws of such State accept the provisions of this act and designate or create a State agency to cooperate with the Children's Bureau until the adjournment of the first regular session of the legislature in such State following the passage of this act.

Sec. 5. So much, not to exceed 5 per cent, of the additional appropriations authorized for any fiscal year under section 2 of this act, as the Children's Bureau may estimate to be necessary for administering the provisions of this act, as herein provided, shall be deducted for that purpose, to be available until expended.

Sec. 6. Out of the amounts authorized under section 5 of this act the Children's Bureau is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to be taken from the eligible lists of the Civil Service Commission, and to purchase such supplies, material, equipment, office fixtures, and apparatus, and to incur such travel and other expense as it may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act.

Sec. 7. Within 60 days after any appropriation authorized by this act has been made, the Children's Bureau shall make the apportionment herein provided for and shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount estimated by the bureau to be necessary for administering the provisions of this act, and shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the treasurers of the various States the amount which has been apportioned to each State for the fiscal year for which such appropriation has been made.

Sec. 8. Any State desiring to receive the benefits of this act shall, by its agency described in section 4, submit to the Children's Bureau detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act within such State, which plans shall be subject to the approval of the board: Provided, That the plans of the States under this act shall provide that no official, or agent, or representative in carrying out the provisions of this act shall enter any home or take charge of any child over the objection of the parents, or either of them, or the person standing in loco parentis or having custody of such child. If these plans shall be in conformity with the provisions of this act and reasonably appropriate and adequate to carry out its purposes they shall be approved by the board and due notice of such approval shall be sent to the State agency by the chief of the Children's Bureau.

Sec. 9. No official, agent, or representative of the Children's Bureau shall by virtue of this act have any right to enter any home over the objection of the owner thereof, or to take charge of any child over the objection of the parents, or either of them, or of the person standing in loco parentis or having custody of such child. Nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the power of a parent or guardian or person standing in loco parentis to determine what treatment or correction shall be provided for a child or the agency or agencies to be employed for such purpose.

Sec. 10. Within 60 days after any appropriation authorized by the act has been made, and as often thereafter while such appropriation remains unexpended as changed conditions may warrant, the Children's Bureau shall ascertain the amounts that have been appropriated by the legislatures of the several States accepting the provisions of this act and shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount to which each State is entitled under the provisions of this act. Such certificate shall state (1) that the State has, through its legislative authority, accepted the provisions of this act and designated or authorized the creation of an agency to cooperate with the Children's Bureau, or that the State has otherwise accepted this act, as provided in section 4 hereof; (2) the fact that the proper agency of the State has submitted to the Children's Bureau detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act, and that such plans have been approved by the board; (3) the amount, if any, that has been appropriated by the legislature of the State for the maintenance of the services and facilities of this act, as provided in section 2 hereof; and (4) the amount to which the State is entitled under the provisions of this act. Such certificate, when in conformity with the provisions hereof, shall, until revoked as provided in section 12 hereof, be sufficient authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to make payment to the State in accordance therewith.

Sec. 11. Each State agency cooperating with the Children's Bureau under this act shall make such reports concerning its operations and expenditures as shall be prescribed or requested by the bureau. The Children's Bureau may, with the approval of the board, and shall, upon request of a majority of the board, withhold any further certificate provided for in section 10 hereof whenever it shall be determined as to any State that the agency thereof has not properly expended the money paid to it or the moneys herein required to be appropriated by such State for the purposes and in accordance with the provisions of this act. Such certificate may be withheld until such time or upon such conditions as the Children's Bureau, with the approval of the board, may determine; when so withheld the State agency may appeal to the President of the United States who may either affirm or reverse the action of the bureau with such directions as he shall consider proper: Provided, That before any such certificate shall be withheld from any State, the chairman of the board shall give notice in writing to the authority designated to represent the State, stating specifically wherein said State has failed to comply with the provisions of this act.

Sec. 12. No portion of any moneys apportioned under this act for the benefit of the States shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, erection, preservation, or repair of any building or buildings or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any buildings or lands, nor shall any such moneys or moneys required to be appropriated by any State for the purposes and in accordance with the provisions of this act be used for the payment of any maternity or infancy pension, stipend, or gratuity.

Sec. 13. The Children's Bureau shall perform the duties assigned to it by this act under the supervision of the Secretary of Labor, and he shall include in his annual report to Congress a full account of the administration of this act and expenditures of the moneys herein authorized.

Sec. 14. This act shall be construed as intending to secure to the various States control of the administration of this act within their respective States, subject only to the provisions and purposes of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "For the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy, and for other purposes."

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. WINSLOW. Do I understand I am recognized for one hour?

The CHAIRMAN. For one hour.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the chairman submit to a parliamentary inquiry? Will it be held to be the ruling of the Chair that persons gaining recognition are recognized for an hour?

The CHAIRMAN. It would certainly apply to the chairman of the committee and gentlemen securing recognition in their own right.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, a bill commonly called a maternity bill was introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] in the early part of this session. As stated in the report of the committee, the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee had long hearings on the Towner bill. Many views were expressed, representing very many opinions as to the purpose, the advisability, and many other considerations which might be drawn out of the text of the bill. In due time and as soon as the committee could properly give attention to the consideration of the bill and the hearings the subject was taken up and for three weeks, about, in executive session we considered this maternity subject as represented by the bill S. 1039. At no time during the discussion of the bill in the committee in executive session did the committee express its views as to whether or not it approved of this kind of legislation. That may seem to you to suggest cowardice on the part of the committee, but such is not the case. The members of the committee know, and probably most of the Members of the House who have been here know, and all the country ought to know, that this has been an exceedingly annoying, perplexing, and discouraging subject. [Laughter.] It appears from the consideration of the matter that those who were the active proponents of it had an idea in their mind, but had given mighty little thought to the method by which that idea could be put into execution. The log rolling, which had been greater than in all the log rivers of this country in the spring season, was directed toward the purpose of a maternity bill whether or no. In my judgment, and I speak for myself in this instance and not as chairman, all through the consideration of this bill those who have opposed and those who have favored the bill have given but mighty little study to what might be legislated in order to bring the best possible results in the line of a maternity bill.

When the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce took up seriously—so seriously it would make you weep if you had lived with us—the consideration of this project, we did not have in mind any proponent or any opponent nor any other thing except to make the best bill out of what we had with the idea of passing our conclusions on to the House to finally determine. [Applause.] Whether or not they want this subject legislated on at all and to see if they choose to approve of our recommendation. We have now made the recommendations and you have the bill. [Laughter.] It is fair to make some explanation, and in speaking of this bill I intend to be fair to everybody in interest, the House, the committee, the opponents, and the proponents. This bill, my friends, comes down to a consideration finally of two general propositions and no more, each one with ramifications. The first one, and the one probably which has raised the most intelligent discussion, has been the question of the advisability of having the Federal Government pick up again or begin, as you choose to put it, the practice of a plan of having the Federal Government contribute to the States in order that the States may carry out their work within their own limits. So the proposition—

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, this bill is so vitally important that I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. Mr. Chairman, well, I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his point of order.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I lay before the gentlemen of this House the first consideration, and that is whether or not we desire to go on as affecting this bill or any other bill with the idea of giving to the State by the Federal Government money to assist State undertakings. Then there comes a second consideration in connection with the financial proposition. If we do believe that we should give to States we ought to think very carefully in the consideration of this bill as to whether or not the money provided here is too much or too little.

The next proposition is whether or not we think the character of our proposition of maternity and infancy by the State or by the Government is so pressing, so imperative, and so needed as to warrant any legislation, and if any legislation, this legislation as it stands or as it may be amended. I take occasion to state that it is my purpose at the proper time to make a motion that the amendment of the committee be taken up as an original bill and be considered section by section. Now, my friends, if the purpose of the bill is meritorious, the question is suggested as to whether or not the Federal Government should take a hand in it, and if so, to what extent should we mix into the operations of the departments of the various States, either in respect of directing their efforts or in the contribution of money. When the bill originally came up two years ago, more or less, and again running through the Senate bill, which, you see, is stricken out in connection with our own proposition, the field was wide open, and it was possible, and we all know what the possibility of a wide open door means in the conduct of a department, for the Children's Bureau to dominate absolutely the method to be pursued by the States.

It was as pretty a little bunch of a concentrated department authority as was ever brought before us, not excepting the Veterans' Bureau, where the director has it all. Under the provisions of that bill as it came to us the Children's Bureau could go into the homes of people, could send out emissaries to discuss any question, psychological or otherwise, it chose to put forth. It was a wide-open door, maybe leading into the homes of this country and doing almost anything in the way of education, according as you interpret the term "education." To put it fairly, the original bill was in such form that it was possible for the Children's Bureau and the Chief of the Children's Bureau, without the control of anybody, to tell every State in this Nation how it had to carry on its health department as affecting maternity and infancy.

The committee saw right away, I believe unanimously, that that must be an error; that nobody probably intended that such a condition should exist. But the possibility was there. So we proceeded in the development of a bill based on a different fundamental theory, and that theory was this: That we would have in our bill, so far as we could provide it in a bill, an arrangement by virtue of which the States individually, through their properly accredited or appointed organizations as described in the bill, should set up its own plan of educating and handling and developing this maternity and infancy proposition. No. 1, the State to initiate its own plan, so that if the State of Oklahoma, on the one hand, or the State of Maine, on the other, and so on, had different viewpoints as to the necessities of their localities in respect to setting up the method of administering such a law, they would be free, without original or predetermined hampering, to represent to the Federal Government what each State thought it ought to have.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Gladly.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman what the evidence was which was developed before the committee as to the number of States that now have children's bureaus or maternity organizations such as he has been discussing?

Mr. WINSLOW. I can not give it to you with accuracy. But it is surely a fact that boards of health exist in many States, and in a few, and only a few, children's bureaus do exist which have been carrying on this work, and particularly did we have testimony to the effect that a number of States are carrying it on now, using the established health organization of the Government, the Public Health Service, as their advisors, and from them they are taking the cue in respect of operating their State departments.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes, indeed. I am here to give information.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What was the testimony disclosed as to whether the methods they are pursuing in the different States are satisfactory or otherwise?

Mr. WINSLOW. To be perfectly frank, calling upon the best of my recollection—and, mind you, it is a recollection—very few States said anything about it one way or another.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that the committee approached the consideration of this measure with a fixed theory in mind that the States should set up their organization, and, if I understood the gentleman correctly, he meant for us to infer from that that the States would be free to set up whatever plan they chose and still receive the appropriations. Is that correct?

Mr. WINSLOW. No; that is not quite correct. I can understand how you may have misunderstood me. It is due to the fact that I have not gone on with the further statement to connect up the subject I have been talking about, but I will answer you as far as I can and reserve the right to explain later. The bill does not provide for having a State set up an organization to operate, but rather that if they do not set them up they do not get any money from the United States. What the bill provides is that when an organization exists in a State it has a right to prepare its plans and submit its plans to what we call a board, of which I intend to speak if I have the time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And before the State does receive anything under this bill those plans must be approved by the board, as I understand?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes; unless the State authority appeals from an adverse decision of the board to the President of the United States, who has power to be the final adjudicator of the award.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, it must be approved by some authority outside of the State itself?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

In the original proposition, previous to the writing of our amendment, the set-up must be approved by one person, the head of the Children's Bureau. The bill preceding ours provided for the establishment of an advisory board, but there was no obligation whatsoever on the Children's Bureau to follow the suggestions of any advisory board. We have so constructed it as to make a board consisting of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the Commissioner of Education, and a majority of that board will pass on the propositions that are submitted by the States. The power of approval or disapproval is not left in the hands of any single person.

Mr. LINTHICUM. If the gentleman will permit, my mind is not quite clear as to that section 3. The first paragraph sets up the board of which the gentleman speaks, to be known as a board of maternity and infant hygiene, and it says that it shall elect its chairman and perform the duties provided in this act. The next paragraph says the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor shall be charged with the administration of this act. Will the gentleman give us a little light on that paragraph?

Mr. WINSLOW. The Children's Bureau will provide its office facilities for carrying out the provisions of this act, subject to the determination of the board as to some definite particulars. First, the approval or disapproval of the plans submitted by the several States; secondly, the consideration of allotting money to the States, either whole or part of the amounts to which they are entitled. Beyond that the Children's Bureau under this act has the right to make studies, investigations, and report upon such matters as will facilitate the administration of this act, and nothing else. Whatever the bureau does outside of the provisions of this act will be due to some authority vested in it by other legislation.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Certainly.

Mr. CLOUSE. I can very well understand from the reading of this bill that it authorizes an appropriation of $6,200,000 within the next five years, but I would like to know from the gentleman, who is chairman of the committee, whether or not he thinks that the duties imposed upon the Children's Bureau—to wit, to make or cause to be made such studies, investigations, and reports as will promote the efficient administration of this act—would justify the expenditure of $6,200,000 in the next five years?

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman allow me to postpone the answer to that for a moment for an obviously good reason?

Mr. CLOUSE. Yes. I merely wanted to know what the gentleman thought of it.

Mr. WINSLOW. Gentlemen of the House, as I have so much matter to cover—and I know there is not a soul in this room who would undertake to put a foot out to trip me up in my undertaking to do it—and as I wish to be as thorough as possible in giving all the information I can, I desire, if it is in order by unanimous consent, to be given an extension of time without reducing what I now have to my credit, so that I may be questioned and have time to make answer.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended one hour with that to which he is entitled at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin prefers the unanimous-consent request, that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] be extended one hour.

Mr. STAFFORD. In addition to what he is now entitled to.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; in addition to what he is now entitled to.

Mr. CANNON. Why not make it unlimited until the conclusion?

Mr. WINSLOW. I shall need about 15 minutes, Mr. Chairman, if not interrupted. Whatever time I use after that will be in answer to questions.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. When I am accorded the privilege of so doing; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINDRED. In order that the gentleman may go on uninterruptedly—

Mr. WINSLOW. Unless the Members desire to question me now I would prefer to proceed.

Mr. CLOUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. CLOUSE. The question I wished to propound was this: Without indicating my position upon the merits of the bill but in order that I may know how intelligently to cast my vote, I was just wondering if the gentleman could tell us if there are any duties devolving upon the Children's Bureau or the agencies through which it may operate through the various States other than to make studies, investigations, and reports, and if that is all their duties, does the gentleman think it would justify an expenditure of $6,200,000 in the next five years?

Mr. WINSLOW. I think the gentleman is a little bit mixed up about that. All that the Children's Bureau in the five-year period will get their hands on will be $250,000.

Mr. CLOUSE. But the contributions on the part of the States, coupled with the donations by the Government, will aggregate $6,200,000, will it not?

Mr. WINSLOW. To be expended by the States?

Mr. CLOUSE. Under the supervision of the Children's Bureau.

Mr. WINSLOW. No.

Mr. CLOUSE. But at last the Children's Bureau must approve the State plan; otherwise the Federal Government does not furnish any money, does it?

Mr. WINSLOW. Supposedly not. But the question of awarding or spending money harks back to the first proposition I submitted to the House with respect to one of the features of the bill.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman has stated very correctly that it was his impression that a comparatively few States have appeared before the committee to discuss this vitally important matter.

Mr. WINSLOW. As State organizations.

Mr. KINDRED. And the gentleman has referred to what might be called the adequacy of the State board's efforts in the direction of maternity and child welfare. Is it not a fact, which the gentleman, I believe, said he had no complete recollection about, that many of the States which did not appear before your committee have very extensive and adequate activities by their boards of health with respect to even holding clinics and lectures and other teachings in order to foster maternity and children's hygiene?

Mr. WINSLOW. In order to answer the gentleman and be able to proceed, I will say that generally speaking that is quite correct.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Do the provisions of this bill contemplate that any general State or Government authority shall take the manual custody or control of the child or mother?

Mr. WINSLOW. You mean without objection?

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Yes; with or without objection, as shown by the provisions of this bill in sections 8 and 9.

Mr. WINSLOW. It is manifest that no committee could undertake to set up specific rules and regulations under which the board representing the Government and the Children's Bureau should act, but judging from what the States are now doing, I would assume that under this bill and the power given to the States by virtue of this bill the right of States under their own statutes would be preserved as they are, but their powers would not be increased by virtue of this act.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Now, under the provisions of section 8 I will read this:

SEC. 8. Any State desiring to receive the benefits of this act shall, by its agency described in section 4, submit to the Children's Bureau detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act within such

State, which plans shall be subject to the approval of the board: Provided, That the plans of the States under this act shall provide that no official, or agent, or representative in carrying out the provisions of this act shall enter any home or take charge of any child over the objection of the parents, or either of them, or the person standing in loco parentis or having custody of such child. If these plans shall be in conformity with the provisions of this act and reasonably appropriate and adequate to carry out its purposes they shall be approved by the board and due notice of such approval shall be sent to the State agency by the Chief of the Children's Bureau.

Now, what I want to get at is this: Suppose a parent agrees that the State authorities or the Federal authorities connecting with the State authorities may take over the control and custody of the child. Are the provisions of this law to be understood so as to authorize the Government to take charge of the child and rear it and care for it?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is quite different.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Now, where is the law under the provisions of this section that prohibits that?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will refer the gentleman to section 12. The last words there might cover that in a general way to the gentleman's satisfaction.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. What words in that?

Mr. WINSLOW. It provides that no maternity or infancy pension, stipend, or gratuity shall be paid under this act.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Suppose the child is temporarily sick, or the mother is temporarily sick, and the nurse looking after it thinks conditions are not sufficient for its health and accommodation, have you the right under the bill to take the custody of the child?

Mr. WINSLOW. I think the opinion of the committee was that the rights of the State would prevail, and the State agency would use the authority vested in it by its own State laws and take such care of the child, and so forth, as needed.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Suppose one State should decide that it would not do it, and the Federal board under the provisions of the bill thought that it ought to be done and therefore would not approve of the plan adopted and carried out by the State until it came within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. Then there would be a conflict of judgment.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. And which one would govern?

Mr. WINSLOW. Finally the Federal Government would govern, either through the board or the President.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. The gentleman thinks the Federal authorities might require the custody of the child.

Mr. WINSLOW. The Government would not occupy such a field. It is only to approve the State's plans. We discussed this question in the committee, and the general opinion was that if the matter came down to that point the State would have the authority to take care of such cases according to its own laws and regardless of its agreement with the Government as to its workings under this act.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Did you make any provisions for that in the bill?

Mr. WINSLOW. No; we do not undertake to provide what the State can do outside of the bill, or to make any standards or regulations.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the latter part of section 8 answer that? The latter part of section 8 provides:

Provided, That the plans of the States under this act shall provide that no official, or agent, or representative, in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall enter any home or take charge of any child over the objection of the parents, or either of them, or the person standing in loco parentis or having custody of such child.

Mr. WINSLOW. That is as far as this act goes.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. MILLER. Suppose the State, through its own agencies, provides that the State authorities shall have the right to enter a home and take a deformed child and send it to an institution for orthopedic treatment or something like that. How does the chairman harmonize section 8, where it says:

Provided, That the plans of the States under this act shall provide that no official, or agent, or representative, in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall enter any home or take charge of any child over the objection of the parents, or either of them, or the person standing in loco parentis or having custody of such child.

Suppose the State did not give that right, can the State share in a distribution of this fund?

Mr. WINSLOW. I do not know why not.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman believe that the provisions of this bill prohibit such action as that?

Mr. WINSLOW. The gentleman says "for orthopedic treatment." This is a bill in relation to maternity, and so forth. If an orthopedic case should come in that class it would come under the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think I can answer the gentleman from Washington by calling attention to the proviso on page 12, which reads:

Provided, That the plans of the State under this act shall provide that no official or agent or representative carrying out the provisions of this act shall enter any home or take charge of any child over the objections of the parents, or either of them, or the persons standing in loco parentis or having custody of such child.

Mr. MILLER. If the child welfare organization of the State does permit such a thing, the State can not share in the distribution of this fund.

Mr. WINSLOW. No; I do not understand it that way.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That applies to the provision that they shall not have the right to enter and carry out the provisions of this act. If there is a State law which authorizes the officer to enter a home under the provisions of the State law for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the State law, this provision does not deny to that State the right to share in the funds.

Mr. WINSLOW. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. This bill partakes of the nature of the public roads bill in that the Government is attempting to aid the State in carrying out a certain line of work. In the public roads bill, it is necessary for the State to comply with certain general provisions required by the Federal Government. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be some specific provisions requiring all the States to comply with the general provisions?

Mr. WINSLOW. The committee I think felt that the board would establish what might be needed as to these conditions, better than a committee of Congress, and we were willing to trust to their intelligence and honesty as to obligations to be required on the part of all the States.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Section 12, in the latter part of line 15, it provides—nor shall any such moneys or moneys required to be appropriated by any State for the purposes and in accordance with the provisions of this act be used for the payment of any maternity or infancy pension, stipend, or gratuity.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Gratuity means a gift without a claim, a donation. Would not that absolutely prohibit any financial assistance in the matter of maternity under the provisions of the bill? It is plainly a gratuity.

Mr. WINSLOW. I would not think so.

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. One other question. If that is the case, then what are the duties of the representatives who are created under this bill? What is their service in maternity or in infancy? What do they do?

Mr. WINSLOW. Does the gentleman mean the State agent or the Federal agent?

Mr. MILLSPAUGH. Either or both. What do they do in the home? What is their purpose in the home? To deliver tracts?

Mr. WINSLOW. I think the gentleman's question is susceptible of a direct reply, but it would take more time than I want to give to it at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is the payment of this money cumulative? That is, if they do not use all of it one year can they use it in the succeeding year?

Mr. WINSLOW. They can for one year.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is there any limit in the amount to be used in any one case?

Mr. WINSLOW. No.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They can use it all on one case if necessary?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes; if one can imagine such a thing.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will be permitted to continue his very clear and lucid statement in respect to the purpose of this bill. I am interested to know what the purpose of the bill is and how it is supposed to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. There are in this bill appropriations for the fiscal year 1922, $240,000, to be distributed among the States, $5,000 to each State. There is also provision made for additional appropriation of $1,000,000, to be divided among the States.

I have in my hand here an explanatory sheet of section 2 of Senate bill 1039, showing how that million dollars will be divided among the States, but the total of the apportionment is only $710,000. Where is the discrepancy?

Mr. WINSLOW. I think the gentleman has misconceived the situation inadvertently. I proposed to go over that sheet shortly, but I may as well take it up now. The suggestion has been made that we consider that part of the report on that part of the bill which refers to the appropriation and allotment of money. The bill provides, so far as the financial aspects of it are to be considered, for two forms of payments to the several States. One form is that by virtue of which the payments will be made outright, and the State shall not be required to match the amounts. The other form is that which covers the payment of certain sums on the conditions set forth in the act, provided the States match those appropriations dollar for dollar. We have prepared tables, to be found on page 4 of the report, and a supplementary sheet, which should be in the hands of everyone who is interested, showing what those sums are, how they will be distributed, and the amount which will go to each State in the Union, assuming that it complies with the act and is entitled to the allotment. In the case of unmatched payments you will find that in the year ending June 30, 1922, according to the bill, there is an authorization of the payment of $480,000 to all the States, $10,000 to each State. For the five years following June 30, 1922, the amount of $240,000 only, or $5,000 to each State, not to be matched. That is a little honorarium passed on to the States to help set up the machinery, grease the wheels, and in a general way get the business in motion, and it serves perhaps as an evidence of the good will of the Government, as a matter of encouragement to take hold of the subject, when perhaps without that little incentive they would not undertake to come under the act and take up the work.

Passing on to the million-dollar-per-year appropriation, we find that by the provisions of the bill there may be appropriated for a year or any part of a year previous to June 30, 1922, $1,000,000 on a plan laid out for distribution. You then can pass on to the five-year period. During the five-year period, which is a definite period indicated by the committee as long enough for a trial of this cause, the States, if they came under the provisions of the act and became entitled to the allotments, would get $5,000 a year each, without matching. Thereafter annually they would get certain definite sums—if matched—worked out on a basis of population, and also each State in the Union would be given annually out of the million dollars a flat $5,000—if matched.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that for each year, beginning with the fiscal year from July 1, 1922, there is but $1,000,000 authorized to be appropriated by the Government, or $1,240,000?

Mr. WINSLOW. Beginning with the fiscal year which commences July 1, 1922, and thereon annually for five years, the yearly apportionment would be $5,000 to each State, not to be matched.

Mr. DUNBAR. I do not understand that.

Mr. WINSLOW. Then afterwards annually, out of the $710,000 which would remain, when 5 per cent of the million dollars has been allowed to the bureau for its expenses and $5,000 given to each State as a flat allowance, to be matched, each State would get its share—to be matched—of this $710,000.

Mr. DUNBAR. What is the total amount of the national appropriation, $1,000,000 or $1,240,000 beginning with the fiscal year 1922?

Mr. WINSLOW. July 1?

Mr. DUNBAR. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. What is the appropriation for the five years, or the annual appropriation?

Mr. DUNBAR. The annual appropriation, beginning with the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. WINSLOW. There will be given outright to the States $1,200,000 total for five years.

Mr. DUNBAR. That is annually for five years?

Mr. WINSLOW. No; for five years.

Mr. DUNBAR. I want the total amount annually for each of the five years.

Mr. WINSLOW. There will be $240,000 given outright annually, and then there will be $240,000 given to be matched, $5,000 to a State, and then there will be $710,000 (to be matched) divided among the States on the basis of population, which will make altogether $1,240,000, including $50,000 to the Children's Bureau.

Mr. DUNBAR. That answers my question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is not the answer that the total amount appropriated for each year beginning with the 1st of next

July is $1,240,000, figuring the $240,000 which would be given to the States outright, and then the $1,000,000 to be divided?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is not correct for one year. The gentleman is confused.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not for this present year, but beginning with the first year of the five.

Mr. WINSLOW. $240,000 is a gratuity, so to speak.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and then the additional appropriation is $1,000,000.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes; but $50,000 comes out for the Children's Bureau.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand, but that makes up the total gross appropriation for that year.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the States will not get all that.

Mr. WINSLOW. Not necessarily; but it is not to exceed that amount.

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. VESTAL. I want to see if I am correct on this proposition. I understand the first year the total appropriation will be $1,480,000. That is for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is the maximum sum.

Mr. VESTAL. And the $480,000 is to be given to the States outright; is that correct?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is the maximum amount to be given outright.

Mr. VESTAL. The next year the appropriation will be $1,240,000, and so on for five years?

Mr. WINSLOW. Not necessarily—

Mr. VESTAL. But that is the maximum?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is the maximum.

Mr. VESTAL. And $240,000 of the $1,240,000 will be given to the States outright, and also an additional $5,000 for each State out of the million? Is that correct?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is correct if the $5,000 is matched by each State.

Mr. VESTAL. And the 5 per cent on the million, or $50,000, will go to the Children's Bureau?

Mr. WINSLOW. Right.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask the chairman if the total appropriation authorized by this bill is not $7,680,000? That is, for the first year $480,000 for the States, $1,000,000 for distribution for each of the five years afterwards, $240,000, which makes a total of $1,200,000, and then a million each year, making in all a total appropriation under the bill of $7,680,000.

Mr. WINSLOW. Not to exceed that.

Mr. HILL. But the bill does authorize that expenditure?

Mr. WINSLOW. Subject to the conditions of the bill.

Mr. HILL. Subject to the conditions of the bill.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. DUNBAR. If this act shall become a law, say, January 1, 1922, then there would be appropriated to be expended, or rather an authorization for an appropriation, between January 1, 1922, and July 1, 1922, of $1,480,000. Is that correct?

Mr. WINSLOW. It is possible; yes, sir.

Mr. VESTAL. Will the gentleman yield for one further question? After the first year the $240,000 or $5,000 for each State that is paid to the State does not have to be matched?

Mr. WINSLOW. No—

Mr. VESTAL. Now, the other $5,000 out of the million, must that be matched by the States?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. VOLK. May I ask, in the event the State does not choose to come under this plan, to whom will the money be paid?

Mr. WINSLOW. It goes back duly into the Treasury?

Mr. VOLK. Which treasury?

Mr. WINSLOW. The United States.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If the gentleman will yield, under the provisions of the act can money be appropriated for hospitalization purposes?

Mr. WINSLOW. If you mean directly by the United States, the bill specifically says "no." Now, gentlemen, as there seems to be a little lull in the questions [laughter] I desire to refer briefly to the financial items. The statement printed in the committee report is just as straight an interpretation as you can make. Please read it. If you have any local interest as to the amount each State may receive under the apportionment, you can find it in the tabulated statement which is printed on a one-piece sheet to be found at the Clerk's desk. In introducing the subject I told this committee that the financial question was one of the questions to be carefully considered on two lines—first, the question of giving the States from the Federal Government for these various purposes from time to time, and, second, the consideration of the amount of money which is to be appropriated, whether it be too little or too much.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman answer an inquiry?

Mr. WINSLOW. If I can.

Mr. LAYTON. In order to get the matter perfectly clear for the country, it means that the Federal Government will tax the people in order to give it back again?

Mr. WINSLOW. Well, I do not quite know what the gentleman means by the Federal Government taxing the people.

Mr. LAYTON. This bill taxes the people. The Government has no money unless it taxes the people to get the $1,490,000?

Mr. WINSLOW. There is no question but that the people will have to pay for it.

Mr. LAYTON. That is the point.

Mr. WINSLOW. I do not want to get into any expert discussion of taxation; that is all; we had one yesterday. Now, just to make one review of the last point about this financial matter and I shall have finished on that subject. We must determine whether we are going on with a policy of giving to the States for State work within their own borders. If so, whether or not we are giving too much or too little in the amount suggested by the bill. The amount suggested is what was recommended to the committee by the proponents of the bill with the exception that they desired to have $10,000 given outright every year instead of $10,000 for one year and $5,000 for each of the remaining five years. There are two or three other points of interest which I think Members of the House ought to bear in mind.

One is this, that the purpose of the committee is to give every possible reasonable final authority to the States and not to break into doing the States' work. Another one is the provision with respect of the power which representatives of State organizations having to do with the administration of the act and representatives of the Federal Children's Bureau which might be out studying and investigating, with a view to making reports, may have to go into a house and do certain things set up in this bill.

In the discussion of this matter before the committee there were many queries and many suggestions. A great number of them were shots in the air and amounted to but little, but nevertheless the miscellaneous notions of the possibilities under the original proposed act would indicate that it was wise for somebody to undertake to limit the authority of these agents who might be out under the umbrella of this act. And so we undertook to confine the powers of those agents, representing State and Nation, to the strict, literal interpretation of the purpose for which this act is intended. We do not care as a committee to recommend to this House any elasticity whatever which will allow any set of people, State or National in their affiliations, to build up or to institute and develop any social propaganda of ethics of any kind, and we hope we have struck it right. I believe I reflect the view of the committee when I make the offer to accept any amendment which will tend to make that provision if we fail to do so ourselves. There are many points I would have naturally referred to, but they have been brought up through the medium of inquiry.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. I would like to know whether or not this bill if enacted into law would allow State or Federal agents to go into homes against the desires of the wives, mothers, or daughters of a family and make inquiries or investigations into matters of health along certain lines?

Mr. WINSLOW. I would think so.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. You would? Then I think—

Mr. WINSLOW. You mean in the face of objections?

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. I would answer no.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Do you think they would assume that power, at any rate?

Mr. WINSLOW. I can not tell any more than I can tell whether anybody would steal an overcoat. [Laughter.]

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Is there any provision in the bill that will grant anything but an educational or advisory assistance?

Mr. WINSLOW. Not so far as the Federal Government is concerned directly. But if the States through their proper agencies set up a plan for the caring of maternity and infancy in any of its stages, we would expect that care and hygiene, which means a lot of things in connection with the public and private health, would come under the functions of the agency.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Under the State?

Mr. WINSLOW. Under the State.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Therefore this bill really offers no specific relief in cases of emergency anywhere so far as the General Government is concerned?

Mr. WINSLOW. Only through the agencies as operated by the States.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. In case the States should set up an agency of that kind, no part of the—

Mr. LAYTON. No material relief.

Mr. FAIRFIELD (continuing). No part of the money would be used for affording material relief?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is not so, in my judgment. I think the States can use this money for any legitimate purpose connected with the natural care of maternity and infancy.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I asked you a moment ago whether the money could be used for hospitalization purposes.

Mr. WINSLOW. By the Federal Government, I understood you to say.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I meant that the Federal Government does not, except in its administrative capacity, use any of the money. There would be no meaning in the question except as it applied to the State government, and, as I understood the answer, no State could use a dollar of this money to relieve cases of necessity where hospitalization was advised by the attending physician or by the agents of the Government? If I am wrong, I would be glad to be corrected.

Mr. WINSLOW. I regret that you interpreted my probably insufficient remark in that way, but I will state it so that there will be no doubt about it. When the Government approves the plans of a State agency for carrying out the provisions of this act, which means the care of maternity or infancy through all the stages of either or both, if that State agency provides for giving care to mothers and children, and the Government approves it, the money will be available. I can not imagine, for my part, any board that would cut off a State agency from giving any kind of care under the act to those who need it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Brooks] propounded a question to the gentleman in reference to the right or authority under the act for an official of the Government to enter a home over the objections of the parent or the person standing in that relation. I merely want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to section 9, which expressly prohibits that.

Mr. WINSLOW. That is so.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. I would like to ask the specific question whether or not under this bill the Surgeon General, at the head of the Public Health Service, and the other two members of the board, could not refuse Federal aid to a State unless the State authorities did actually agree on the plan, which the board here in Washington must approve, to look after the material care of a mother or a child by furnishing food, clothing, housing, and so forth?

Mr. WINSLOW. If such a thing is reasonably possible, I would say that the board could refuse that aid, but as a matter of ordinary horse sense I would not expect they would do it. [Laughter.] And if they do not approve they have an appeal to the President of the United States.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Certainly.

Mr. LAYTON. If the gentleman will excuse me, we are not dealing very largely with horse sense. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I understand that the administration of this act is under the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. WINSLOW. "Under the supervision of the Secretary of Labor," whatever that means.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Has the President so much spare time that he can attend to this also? Why dump part of the administration upon the President of the United States? Has he a lot of time on his hands that he is not using? Does he want this?

Mr. WINSLOW. He has not advised me by letter that he wants it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I would like to ask the gentleman the interpretation of section 12—

Nor shall any such moneys or moneys required to be appropriated by any State for the purposes and in accordance with the provisions of this act be used for the payment of any maternity or infancy pension, stipend, or gratuity.

I want to know how far that limitation goes on the expenditure of this money.

Mr. WINSLOW. Well, if you will force me into talking on this floor on delicate matters, I am willing to be driven. I am a father and a grandfather—

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I am a grandfather, too—

Mr. WINSLOW. And I can no longer blush at these suggestions; but the facts are that the committee has reason to suspect—and that is as far as I care to go [laughter]—that there might be under the provisions of the act which we discarded an opportunity for starting along some of the methods which have become in vogue in certain European nations, and we do not want to encourage it in this country. [Applause.] The politest way in which we could describe it in a bill of this kind is represented by the language the gentleman has quoted. We have no objection to anybody who chooses to father it introducing an amendment that will clarify that. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Among those European nations that the gentleman has mentioned, which one of those foreign nations has developed this idea to the highest power?

Mr. WINSLOW. I am not an expert on that subject, but I would say probably Russia.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. CLOUSE. Under section 3 of the act a board of maternity and infant hygiene is created?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLOUSE. I wonder if the gentleman can tell us whether or not this position will carry additional salary to the members of that board?

Mr. WINSLOW. There is nothing said about it in the bill.

Mr. CLOUSE. Is it contemplated that their duties would be so enlarged as to justify an additional salary of some $10,000 or $15,000 annually?

Mr. WINSLOW. That is not within our jurisdiction. Probably some one would have to thrash that out with the Budget Committee.

Mr. CLOUSE. Is not here the place to thrash it out and place a limitation on it?

Mr. WINSLOW. The limit we would have would be to omit it altogether. [Applause.]

Mr. CLOUSE. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. In answer to the gentleman's question, there is already a general law that would prevent any official of the Government from drawing two salaries.

Mr. WINSLOW. Hence the omission.

We have been over this in detail. I hope we shall discuss it section by section under the 5-minute rule, and if there are any misconceptions that will break out then or appear, the chairman of the committee, or any member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, will gladly answer any question about any section; and the whole committee knows the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GRIFFIN and Mr. KINDRED rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I have not given up the floor.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I was in hopes the gentleman, before concluding his remarks, would explain the apparent discrepancy between section 3 and section 13. In section 3 a board of maternity and infant hygiene is created, with very limited powers, as it would seem, except to pass upon the appropriation of the allotments or quotas to the various States. Then the administration of the act is intrusted to the Chief of the Children's Bureau; and then in section 13 the Chief of the Children's Bureau is put under the control, apparently, of the Secretary of Labor, who is not a member of the board of hygiene. What his connection can have with the proposition it is very hard, at least to me, to discern. Why, for instance, is the Children's Bureau, with which the administration of the act is intrusted, put under the control of the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. WINSLOW. That does look a little freckled, to be sure. [Laughter.] But the committee is bound to submit to those conditions which surround it. The Children's Bureau already is a department working under the Secretary of Labor. That would seem to account for that association. In order to be respectful to the department and its head, the Secretary, we brought his name in there in a parliamentary way, in order to show that he is the supervisor.

I personally would not pay him much money for the time he will probably consume in supervising, but nevertheless under the Alphonse and Gaston arrangement between the executive and the legislative branches of the Government we felt impelled to do this thing. [Laughter.]

As to the other proposition, the board to which the gentleman has referred as having slight power represents all there really is to this act, viz, the determination of the conditions under which the several States shall operate and the determination of the amount of money they may be entitled to by virtue of their cooperation under the act. The Children's Bureau has the right and the duty to make studies as broad as they choose and report to the Secretary of Labor, and so on, so far as such investigations, and so forth, may help the administration of this act. Beyond that the Children's Bureau furnishes the office force and the executive medium for carrying out whatever detail there may be in connection with the work provided for in the act. Is that clear to the gentleman?

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. In connection with what the gentleman has just said, does he think the language beginning on line 17 of page 10—

The Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor shall be charged with the administration of this act, except as herein otherwise provided—

Mr. WINSLOW. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. KINDRED. Page 10, line 17, provides:

The Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor shall be charged with the administration of this act, except as herein otherwise provided, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall be the executive officer.

Is there any lack of clarity or consistency between the language the gentleman has just used and these lines?

Mr. WINSLOW. I hope not. The idea is that the Children's Bureau shall carry out what the act provides, with the exception of having the final determination of the plans submitted by the States in the way of approval and the amount of money to be actually allotted to the States.

Mr. KINDRED. It means in the last analysis the Children's Bureau or the Department of Labor shall be the whole show.

Mr. WINSLOW. I have said several times that the idea of the committee is to take full power out of the single control of any bureau, whether the Children's Bureau or otherwise. In order to do it in this instance—the Children's Bureau—we have created a board only one of which has anything to do with the Children's Bureau. The other two are to represent two other organizations which have more or less to do with the public health and the general public education of the country.

Mr. KINDRED. May I call attention to the fact that the administration of the act is given to the Chief of the Children's Bureau?

Mr. WINSLOW. The bureau is to administer the act under the provisions of the act. It is like the administration of a factory by the superintendent or general manager. You have to have some one to do the work, and so as the Children's Bureau is interested in it we left it there.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Under the provisions of this bill the Federal Government is empowered to tax the State and cover that money into the Federal Treasury. Now, suppose that the Children's Bureau should not agree to the plan of spending that money proposed by the State organization, and the State organization refused to meet the plans suggested by the Children's Bureau; what is to become of that portion of the money which ought rightfully to go to the State? It has been taken from them.

Mr. WINSLOW. It has not been taken from them in that they never got it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. You take it from the State by taxation. The Federal Government has no revenue except what it gets by taxation. When they tax the State they take the money from that State and cover it into the Federal Treasury. If the State refuses to meet the requirements of the Children's Bureau, what becomes of that money?

Mr. WINSLOW. It is like many other things in the way of taxation. In other words, to use a very common but suggestive expression, it goes into the "kitty." [Laughter.]

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Under the provisions of this bill can the Federal Government force the provision of the act upon a State until the legislature of such State meets and accepts it?

Mr. WINSLOW. It can not force it on a State under any circumstances. It provides that if a State legislature does not accept the act and create a proper organization to work it out, in the absence of a legislative session the governor can make the appointment of an officer or agency to receive and accept this money until the legislature convenes. A member of our committee suggested this morning an amendment which seems to me to be rather important and very much to the point, and that is to make a time allowance for a State where the legislature may not meet in time to get to work fully under the act so that they will have six months after the adjournment of the legislature to effect conditions that will bring them within the act. Mr. Chairman, if now there are no more questions I would like to proceed without further interruption.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. In section 11 you give to the board administering the act the power to pass upon the question whether the State organization has complied with the act or not.

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. WOODS of Virginia. Does not that give considerable of a whip hand over the States and enable the bureau to say you must conduct your health agency in accordance with our plans or we will withdraw the aid?

Mr. WINSLOW. It does permit the exercise of an arbitrary power, but in most instances where the human element is considered we have got to trust to the good sense of somebody in final authority, and we felt that as the Government may be paying money to the States, by the same token the Government ought to have the right in some way to make sure that the State would spend it along the general lines of the act and for the purposes set forth therein. We have placed it in the hands of people, named by title, and it seemed to the committee that no one would ever occupy any one of those places who was not above the average man for honesty and intelligence. We do run that risk, but wherever we delegate power to any human agency we always run the risk of getting a crank to execute it, and then we get out of it the best way we can, and if that time comes we will have to do the same in the case of this proposed legislation. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I will say a word as to why the committee has reported out this bill. The proposed legislation has undoubtedly stirred up more sentiment, wisely or unwisely created, than any bill which has been before the Congress in 10 years, or maybe 100 years. The representation originally made in behalf of this proposal was that it was purely for the development of the care of maternity and infancy, and so forth, but before it ever got to our committee, and down to this very morning, it had been redolent with personal sentiment, and its approval and opposition has almost invariably been tainted with a high degree of personal feeling which has not characterized any other bill of which I have ever had knowledge. One side has said that they represent 10,000,000 women. It is not for me to say that they do not, but there have been plenty of others to say that they do not represent anything like that number. Unfortunately the discussion of this bill has not always been on broad lines in my judgment.

I believe in the case of mothers and infants to the limit. I have had to do in my home city with a hospital and have held a prominent position there. I was one of an original subcommittee, long before any woman or man who has been a proponent of this bill ever talked to me about it, which organized a social welfare and hospital auxiliary force. We did this work. We did it because we knew there was need for it, but I have not been able to make some people fussing around here believe apparently that I have enough humanity in me to think that mothers expecting children were worthy of any considerable consideration.

The agitation over the bill has worked back and forth. Members of the committee have been like a tennis ball—batted back and forth. Enthusiasm for and against this bill passeth all understanding.

Every man of the committee has been belabored one way and another for and against the bill until I believe, figuratively speaking, each one has become mentally sore through that treatment, and it may have been a good one—I am not prepared to say that it has not been. We have at all events awakened to an appreciation of the fact that whether we are for it or against it, this subject is really interesting a great many people, who think of any of these things, countrywide.

When I stated in the beginning that the committee has never, so far as I remember, expressed its opinion officially as to the merits of the bill, I stated that regardless of the fact that I feel that the committee did the wise thing to report a bill which they thought would best do the work, and report it unanimously, in order that this House may on its merits, as they see them or otherwise, determine whether or not the bill shall become a law. The committee through the phraseology of a form in which bills are reported is committed to the expression that they think the bill should pass. Whether that happened by oversight or not, I do not know. I am prepared to subscribe to the idea that it should pass because I think, in view of the fact that this is a subject which appeals to the sentiment and the heart desires of so many of our women, who at home are thinking seriously of this thing, who at home in most instances have no thought of politics in it at all, we ought to put the plan on trial.

I hope I have reflected the committee accurately and fairly. I have no reason to feel that I have not, but in order that there may be no difference of opinion as to my own attitude at this moment on this bill, I say to you, in repetition, that I believe, all things considered, the character of the bill being borne in mind, the limitation of administration, the bill ought to be passed and given trial. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BARBOUR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendment of the House of Representatives with an amendment to the bill (S. 843) to amend section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," had insisted upon its amendment to the amendment of the House, had requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. WALSH of Montana as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7294) supplemental to the national prohibition act.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, before I begin to address the committee on the subject under consideration, I want to congratulate the chairman of the committee upon his very able efforts in presenting the case involved in this measure. He has my absolute admiration, and he has at the same time my absolute sympathy.

I have already spoken upon this subject at such length that I did not think that I would appear upon the floor of the House a second time in order to express anew my views on the question, but I feel impelled to voice my opposition again to this measure, hoping that something I may say may avert the enactment into law of principles which I deem insidious and full of evil consequences to the public.

I shall be as brief as I can, knowing there are many who desire to express themselves upon this bill, and to whom I desire to accord the fullest opportunity for so doing.

I am opposed to this bill—

First. Because it is unnecessary.

Second. Because it is an inexcusable expense.

Third. Because it is plainly socialistic.

Mr. Chairman, I do not purpose to attempt to analyze this bill. I have read every paragraph of it, and I am going to allow the specific elements entering into the bill to be digested, analyzed, and dissected by all of the Members of the House who will have, undoubtedly, abundant opportunity under the 5-minute rule to do so. I intend to approach the consideration of this measure in a general way, affecting as I believe it does the Republic of which we are all members, and in speaking upon the bill I desire to have all of you keep in mind the fact that in discussing the Sheppard-Towner bill I am discussing the Smith-Towner bill, I am discussing the Fess amendment, and I am discussing the whole brood of socialistic propositions which have littered up the very calendar of the Congress for the last three Congresses.

This bill is unnecessary because there is no cumulating demand for its passage by reason of any unusual mortality either in expectant mothers or in newborn children in this country.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. LAYTON. Surely. The gentleman from Ohio is the very gentleman I would like to discuss this question with.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman oppose all education, since there is not any education that is not socialistic?

Mr. LAYTON. I do not believe I quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. FESS. All education in the United States is socialistic, every bit of it. Does the gentleman mean that he is opposing education because it is socialistic?

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman has made an assumption which is absolutely incorrect, in my judgment.

Mr. FESS. What is that?

Mr. LAYTON. All education in the United States is not socialistic.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman understands that I mean education which is supported at the public expense, which comprises the great portion of our education.

Mr. LAYTON. But it does not follow, my dear friend from Ohio, that a thing that I would do in my home, or a thing that I would do in my community, or a thing that I would do in my State, good as they are, should be shifted through socialistic processes upon the Federal Government, to take power which I want to retain. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Would the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. LAYTON. And if the gentleman will let me proceed, before I get through I shall quote as eminent an authority on education as the gentleman himself, and I think the gentleman will see that the quotation which I take from that authority expresses exactly my views upon the question that he has raised.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman has objection to partial assistance of the States on educational matters, that is one thing, but when he opposes this measure on the basis that it is socialistic, then, to be consistent, he must oppose all public education, because it is all socialistic.

Mr. LAYTON. Oh, not within the States. That is where the gentleman confuses the issue.

Mr. FESS. Why, certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. LAYTON. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I suggest that if education is turned over to the Federal Government and put in the hands of bureaucrats and politicians, it is in great danger of becoming socialistic. [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. Correct.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAYTON. I will stop any time to answer a question from the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman from Delaware has stated this measure is insidious, socialistic, and unnecessary. I would like to ask him if it is his intention to tell the committee in what way it is insidious, socialistic, and unnecessary?

Mr. LAYTON. Absolutely, if the gentleman will allow me, I have taken the trouble to develop an argument and I would like to try to have time to deliver it and let my dear friend from Ohio and everybody else take it for what it is worth. Gentlemen, I have taken a great deal of trouble about this matter and I have tried to boil down some of these sentences until they are as clear as I can make them. I wish you would give a little heed to them for what they are worth, whether much or little. I repeat:

This bill is unnecessary, because there is no accumulating demand for its passage by reason of any unusual mortality either in expectant mothers or in the newborn children. There never was a time since this Government was established when human life was more carefully guarded and conserved than it is now. The science and art of medicine and surgery have kept pace fully with developments in any other pursuit of man.

Every Member of this House knows that there has been a remarkable increase in longevity during the last 30 years. Every well-informed person knows that the medical and surgical remedies for complications arising in the puerperal state have vastly increased. The mortality records of 30 and 40 years ago involving pregnant women have been wonderfully changed. Puerperal septicemia, acetone, and diacetone conditions, including anatomical obstacles to childbirth—practically all of the dangers and perils that surround the puerperal state are largely within the ability of the physicians of the land to combat successfully. Forty years ago a newborn babe without a mother was regarded as having a poor chance for living. Today a child can be reared in splendid health to maturity upon the bottle, provided the milk therein is properly prepared by a graded prescription. The diseases of infancy, such as cholera infantum, ileo-colitis, and other diseases incident to the first three years of life, have been carefully studied, and their pathology more accurately ascertained, which, together with an equal advance in the therapeutics of these diseases, has lessened the infant mortality of the entire country in a wonderful and supremely satisfactory way.

And if I were going to make a remark at this juncture as a physician I would say that, taking it by and large, a child can be raised better to-day on a bottle, because it will not inherit the weaknesses of its mother; neither will it imbibe, as it were, the noxious principals in the milk by reason of fear, anger, ill health, medicine, or anything else that affects the mammary secretions.

All of these discoveries and advancements in the pathology and the therapeutics of infancy have been made by the medical profession by the men and women who have devoted themselves to the study and the practice of the medical profession.

I want to repeat that—that all the wonderful improvements in therapeutics and pathology have been made by the medical profession and not by members of the Children's Bureau here in Washington, who have not anything on earth except a smattering of what they can read in the shape of medical knowledge coming from men and women who have made medicine their life's pursuit and study.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LAYTON. With pleasure.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman know that in the Children's Bureau there are a number of physicians, and physicians of standing?

Mr. LAYTON. Where?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In the Children's Bureau.

Mr. LAYTON. Here?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. My dear friend, I am going to be a little frank, and if you will listen to me—I hope it will not go beyond the walls of this Chamber, because I feel a little bad about it. Tell me who occupies a position in the Federal Government as a physician at $2,000 a year?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Who occupies it?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. There are physicians and physicians of standing. If the gentleman wants an answer, I will give it—

Mr. LAYTON. I will give an answer without you saying it. Go to every community in America and you can not get good physicians, intelligent physicians, you can not get skilled physicians, you can not get the best physicians to take a Government job at $2,000 a year. [Applause.] And everybody knows it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Perhaps the gentleman appreciates this fact that sometimes you can get men and get women of ability and skill who are willing to serve even if the compensation is not what they could get otherwise, and is not that true of the Children's Bureau?

Mr. LAYTON. If you are going to put the efficiency of the Children's Bureau upon some devotee of altruism, maybe you might find one in about 40 or 50 years.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAYTON. With pleasure.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. My understanding is the gentleman also is in favor of abolishing the Public Health Service. Is not that true?

Mr. LAYTON. It depends altogether. My friend is trying to quiz me about a matter I had a conversation with him privately. [Laughter.] Let me tell the gentleman something so he may know it. I do not talk with any man privately, that I do not talk publicly if it is necessary. Now, I will answer the gentleman's question. He asked about the Public Health Service, and I want to be perfectly frank with him. I am opposed to the Public Health Service of the United States as it stands, and I will tell you why. Simply because it is a great big service at a great big expense and is not worth the money that is spent on it.

Now I will amplify, and the gentleman need not have any question to ask me, for as long as he has brought the subject up I shall try to go into it with perfect frankness, and say I am in favor of a quarantine service of the finest kind. That is the first thing. In the next place, I would absolutely abolish the Public Health Service as it stands, and in place of it I would take some of Uncle Sam's money, which we seem to have plenty of, and build the finest biological, bacteriological, and chemical laboratory that money could build. I would equip it with every appliance that money could purchase. I would go out into the world and buy, if necessary, the highest science that can be found. I would go out and get the most distinguished devotees of science in all these three directions I have mentioned. I would bring them over here; I would send to Vienna, Berlin, Edinburgh, London, Paris, Rome, and I would bring them here, if they could be had, and thus have a corps of the finest delvers, so to speak, into science the world contains, who not only can delve into science but whose hearts and whose souls are engaged in the work, and in this way secure the very highest talent for the purpose of discovering specific remedies for the diseases of man and beast.

And after I had found one remedy that was a specific remedy for any of the things that bring mortality to men, I would not have a whole lot of peripatetic doctors traveling at Government expense and using that knowledge. [Applause.]

Let me say further that there is one boon, at least, in medicine. When I began to practice medicine, at one time in my life, almost breaking my heart to look at them, I saw four dead children in one house at one time from diphtheria. But I have lived long enough as a physician to find what is called the diphtheria antitoxin, and the man who goes out now to attend a case of diphtheria does not have any more fear or any more anxiety than he would have in attending a case of measles.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes. But I want to add this in order to make my remarks complete, and that is in order to use that splendid remedy we do not have to have in my State, and the gentleman is too proud to claim that he has to have in his State, any peripatetic doctors going through and telling us how to use diphtheric antitoxin. We know how to do it ourselves.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. In order to set the gentleman right as to whether I am violating any private conversation I will say that I procured my information from the gentleman's speech on the floor of the House. The gentleman is an able speaker. According to the gentleman's theory about all this being socialistic, he would have been opposed to the Public Health Service, which has brought about the control of contagious diseases in this country?

Mr. LAYTON. The control?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Control! Where in the name of heaven had the American people been all this time until you created this Public Health Service? Gentlemen like to talk as if the American people were the most helpless things on earth. How did we ever become the great Nation that we are? My friends, did you ever know any epidemics in the United States any more virulent in the days gone by than they are now? When one broke out in 1918 all over this country, what did the Public Health Service amount to in my State? Not to a hill of beans. [Applause.]

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Is it not true that the Public Health Service of the United States and the public health service of the States and the public health service of the municipalities are the ones that have brought good results in reference to the control of contagious diseases? If you will carry that further and say "the public health service of the individual," you might have a round robin.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. LAYTON. Frankly, I have but an hour, and I am going to keep this hour, and without being discourteous I will say that I must finish my speech.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman has unlimited time.

Mr. LAYTON. I have but one hour.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman made a very important statement a moment ago that I would like to have him amplify.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman can amplify it after I get through. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Will not the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAYTON. It is to these physicians that the credit is due, 150,000 in number, and to over 200,000 trained nurses, trained, by the way, under the supervision and the direction of the professors of our medical schools and by the accomplished corps of physicians and surgeons found in every hospital in the land. It is amazing that this House with all of its opportunities for knowledge should disregard these wonderful achievements and practically exalt above the regular physicians, a lot of ill-trained women to go out over the country and teach the mothers what to do. In every place where one of them goes she will find real physicians who have been and are now fully sufficient for the care of their respective communities. I challenge any proponent of this bill to show me a pamphlet issued by the Children's Bureau that contains a germ of new knowledge pertaining to such matters which the bureau or any of its members has discovered. If you pass this bill, the very knowledge that will be disseminated will be the knowledge discovered by the physicians and surgeons of the land. The principles of sanitation and hygiene which this cloud of amateurs are supposed to teach are the primary lessons incident to the profession of medicine and surgery.

The committee of the House has reported a maternity bill which they claim with great complacency has all of its objectionable features removed from it.

But, to my mind, this bill is worse than the one passed by the Senate, and worse still than the one the original proponents of this legislation demanded. If it is true that the mothers of the land are demanding Federal legislation for the preservation of the mother and the child, why do you give them a stone when they call for bread? [Applause.] Why do you send around an army of "advisory committees" to talk over and discuss with the expectant mother her cares of maternity when she needs something else than talk? An overwhelming part of the good that could be done in this direction can be done only by economical means, by giving food, clothing, heat, and shelter to expectant mothers and the newborn babe, and not by feeding them on tracts and pamphlets. [Applause.] A large part of the existing mortality among the expectant mothers and the newborn babes is due to lack of food, to lack of clothing, to lack of fuel, and to lack of housing, and is not due to any lack of knowledge nor care on the part of the physicians of the land. The original proponents of this bill understood this, and they openly advocated an appropriation in money to supply what they knew to be needed. As has been well said, this bill does not provide a cradle, nor a hot-water bottle, nor milk, nor clothing, nor a pound of coal, nor a load of wood, though there is need of these things, nor does it erect a single hospital, but prohibits all of these things which are the very fundamental needs involved. But it does provide for an army of amateur investigators to tell the expectant mother what to do when the expectant mother in a large majority of cases is utterly unable to do the things required or to get the things she needs. This bill provides "for money to incur such travel and other expenses as the Children's Bureau may deem necessary." Instead of the trustworthy family physician always near at hand, these expectant mothers are expected to consult amateur "advisory committees," possibly politically appointed.

I repeat again that this bill is unnecessary because there is no national need for it, no matter how the juggled figures of statisticians may be arrayed before you. The very fact that the longevity of the Nation has increased in such a remarkable degree is proof positive that no such alarming or unusual condition of infant mortality exists. There is not a physician in this House, I do not believe there is a physician in the country, and I challenge any physician in the House, who will say that the means of combating the diseases of infancy have not kept pace pari passu with any other branch of curative medicine or with any other art or science in the land. If this be true, how absurd to load up the already burdened back of the taxpayer with a bill which those who introduce it claim has been robbed of its teeth until only a skeleton remains. Having extracted the albumin and the yolk out of the egg, why not throw the miserable eggshell away? [Applause.]

If the purpose of this bill is justifiable, why not bring in a bill for Federal aid and control over tuberculosis? Where there is one case of death by reason of maternity there are eight times as many by reason of tuberculosis. Nor should we stop here. There are other causes which result in mortality—typhoid fever, malarial fever, diphtheria, pernicious anemia, and so on throughout the whole list of diseases. Why stop with one cause of disease, and that exceedingly small as compared with others? Take the statistics of any city in the Union and compare the mortality of pregnant mothers and of children with the mortality of pneumonia, tuberculosis, and other diseases, and you will see that this is true. The truth is that under the plea of the mother and her child, which appeals to the natural instincts of every man, we are being swept off of our feet by a false sentiment, and led into a morass of injustice, favoritism, and unnecessary taxation. [Applause.]

I oppose this bill as an inexcusable expense at a time when every effort should be made to reduce taxation. I oppose it because the party stood openly pledged in every Representative's district in the last campaign to economy in every way. There is not a Member of this House, certainly not a Republican, who did not base his chief plea for election upon that of economy. Admitting that this bill is good in principle, I contend that its enactment into law could be well delayed in view of the promises by which we obtained our seats in this Chamber, especially as no one can show that a greater exigency exists for the care of an expectant mother or her babe than has existed at any other time in our history.

This bill puts on the backs of the people another ten million to be raised in taxes in the next five years. This is advice I am giving the Republicans of the House for the good of their souls.

Let me quote from a bulletin issued by the Civic Federation of Chicago:

Stop extending Federal aid to local government, or peace-time taxes will exceed taxes due to war.

Federal taxes are higher and more generally burdensome than ever before in our history, due largely to the World War.

From every quarter comes a demand for a lessening of the burden.

In the face of this we find pending in Congress measures designed to add at least one hundred and sixty-nine millions at once to the normal burden of the National Government. Of these, measures carrying more than one hundred and fifteen millions and paving the way for increasing Federal appropriations of at least ten times that amount within the next decade are backed by a Nation-wide propaganda of highly organized and subtly persuasive character.

This hundred and fifteen millions (plus) is not, however, to be expended under the supervision of the United States Government, which is to raise and appropriate the revenue. It is to be distributed to the several States and expended under the supervision of the States, or the local governments within them. Thus no government over which the people have control will be responsible directly to the voters for the expenditure of this large and constantly growing sum. The National Government will not be responsible, because it has nothing to do with the expending. It merely appropriates. State and local government will shoulder no responsibility, because they will be spending money which will not be reflected in the State and local tax bills, for which alone local governments can be held responsible.

This is a condition that strikes at the very foundation of the rights of the State, because the State as a governmental unit is deprived of its liberty. It is a case of taxation without consent. Take my own State as an instance. You who represent a majority can impose your will upon Delaware for a purpose that Delaware is opposed to. You can tax it, and it is helpless to resist. Then to enjoy the supposed benefits of this legislation it must tax itself again dollar for dollar which it receives. Nothing more hypocritical, nothing more destructive of every principle of liberty and independence can be imagined. It is the paternalism of some power which asserts, "You are ignorant. You are unable to think or care for yourselves, so we will drive you for your good." I can not believe that this body is so craven, so lost to all sense of righteousness, all regard for those principles which are the foundation of all we have had and cherished, as to do this thing.

England's experience in this matter should be a warning. The British national "grants in aid" have grown from £244,402 in 1842 to more than £65,000,000 for the fiscal year 1920. Such prominent Englishmen as Sidney Webb and J. Watson Brice describe the present English condition as a chaos which practically no one understands. Gladstone himself opposed the continuance of this paternalism as imposing too great a burden upon labor and industry, and maintained that the grant acted as bribes to extravagance and needless local expenditure. The sentiment of Gov. Frank Louden, of Illinois, is eminently sound and encouraging on the same point. He says:

The Federal Government should appropriate only for those interests which are purely a national concern and clearly within the purpose for which the Federal Union was established.

We exclaim daily on this side of the House the need for economy. But what have we done? What are the people back home saying as to what we have done? There is just one prayer that applies to this House, which should be uttered daily: "We have done those things which we ought not to have done, and we have left undone those things which we ought to have done, and there is no health in us." [Applause.] We pride ourselves on saving a few dollars on Monday, and the very next day pass a bill appropriating millions needlessly. The real needs of the country, the things that concern most deeply the revival of prosperity, such as lower taxes, increased employment, provisions for rapid and adequate transportation and distribution of food and other products, these are largely left to take care of themselves. Let me suggest to the House that national prosperity is the best health measure that we can possibly institute. National prosperity is a prerequisite to national health at all times and under all circumstances. What we should be working for, straining every energy for, is a revival of business, a nation-wide revival of employment. A people employed is a happy people, because they are a healthy people. A people employed is a people with money to buy food and clothes and shelter, which are the substantial things that the expectant mother and children need, and is worth tons of tracts and a million glib talkers sent out by a fatherly government to speak of things concerning which they possess a mere superficial knowledge. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that when the Children's Bureau was established—and this is a pertinent item in connection with this discussion—its proponents at that time asserted that the cost would never exceed $25,000 per annum.

In 1920 the appropriation was over $270,000, while the estimate for 1921 was $654,450, and this bill starts off at a million and one-half dollars. What demands will its proponents make in the future if we judge the future by the past? I ask again, as I have once before, who in this House will say that the proponents of this bill have abandoned their original purposes of paternalism and will not demand in the future, as soon as this bill is enacted and the principle of socialism indorsed by this House, appropriations for food, clothing, shelter, and medical care to all the indigent prospective mothers of the land? What man in this House could logically fail to vote for such a bill if he can vote for this? As a matter of fact, to do this would be far more humane and sensible and would accomplish a far greater and more direct good if you are resolved to embark upon these paternal waters and admit the port of socialism as your prospective haven. And having taken care of all the indigent mothers, why not take care of the indigent fathers? [Applause.] If national beneficence is to become the slogan of the future, why not take care of all who need, and for all they need in any way?

Again, let me suggest that if education in matters affecting maternity and infancy is what is needed by merely literary methods alone, a simple calculation will show that $100,000 would place a public document on the subject of maternity and infant care written by real physicians in the hands of every one of the 20,000,000 married women in this country. Why spend millions for unscientific advice? Moreover, it must not be forgotten that there is nothing in this bill that will prevent the head of a children's welfare bureau from disseminating and approving all sorts of hectic ideas germinated in the deranged minds of the peoples of distracted foreign lands concerning birth control, the use of contraceptives, sex hygiene, endowment of motherhood, wages for mothers, State support of children, false economics, the economical independence of mothers from husbands, or prenatal feeding for the differentiation of the race after the Darwinian idea of creating distinct species in our citizenship by distinct feeding. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAYTON. I can not do so. It hurts me not to be able to.

The people's money can be used, as it has been used, to spread all of these pernicious doctrines among the people.

Let me call your attention, also, to a very alluring but deluding proposition in this bill. Apparently it is to last only five years. Can the Members of the House be caught by such bait as this? Put this bill on the statute books, and I say that long before the end of five years there will be a new crop of Representatives beset by a new swarm of pestiferous pleaders who will make it very plain to this new crop of Representatives that their wishes must be regarded and their demands acceded to if they wish to retain their seats in the House. In this connection is there any real, sincere Member of this House who thinks that this measure could get 20 votes for its passage if judgment and conscience alone dictated the vote? We all know, and the country knows, that if this bill is passed what the influence is that will pass it. It will not be passed because of the conviction that the country needs it or that taxpayers want it. At this point, gentlemen of the House, it will be proper and pertinent for me to remind you that there are other women who vote besides the women in the clubs—women who are allied in the closest bonds of interest, of affection, and of sympathy with their fathers, brothers, and husbands—millions of these women who feel and share the burden of their taxation and the hardships that result therefrom. Let me also remind you of the fact that the physicians of this whole country are opposed to this measure and to its ultimate purpose, the nationalization of medicine.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAYTON. No; I can not. While you are weighing the chances of your reelection, consider carefully the other voters who will have opinions of their own. While you avoid, as you think, Scylla on one hand, see that you fall not into Charybdis on the other. [Applause.]

In the midst of the glare and glitter of congressional life we are too apt to forget what the people back home are thinking and demanding. Gentlemen, they are weary, unutterably weary, of the burden of taxation. Every day and hour they are crying out in the language of the old watchman upon the tower of Hellas, who, day in and day out, strained his eyes looking for a flash of light from Illium, and ever exclaiming:

I pray the Gods a respite from these toils—this weary keeping at my post the whole year round, wherein upon the Atrides roof, reclined like dog upon mine elbows, I have learned the constellations of the stars of night—the rising and the setting of the stars.

The people want the abolition of bureaus, not the creation of new ones with a new expense. They regard as intolerable and foolish the imposition of new taxes while laboring and staggering under those that now exist. [Applause.]

Before concluding my remarks on this subject I desire to call your attention to the fact of the socialistic or paternalistic propaganda that is going on throughout the country, and which unless checked can not fail to subvert our most cherished institutions. I am not going to indulge in mere declarations. I am going to ask the Members of the House to get Senate bill 2507 of the Sixty-sixth Congress, Senate bill 814 of the Sixty-sixth Congress, Senate bill 526 of the Sixty-seventh Congress, House bill 5724 of the Sixty-sixth Congress, all of which concern a new Federal department of health, and then see what such proposed legislation would result in. It would medicalize the Census Bureau, see Senate bill 2616 of the Sixty-sixth Congress; it would medicalize the newly proposed department of education, see Senate bill 1017 of the Sixty-sixth Congress; it would medicalize the Department of Labor and the Department of the Interior, the Treasury Department, and the Department of Commerce. In addition to these bills, study House bill 12652 and Senate bill 3950 of the Sixty-sixth Congress. Study Senate bill 3259 and House bill 10925 of the Sixty-sixth Congress and see how these bills all tend to the compulsory control of the general public, of adults and children from birth up, through marriage, and until burial, in all matters pertaining to health, housing, living, and industrial condition, domestic and commercial, commercializing physical examination and medical treatment under compulsion.

See how they lead to the compulsory control of schools, school buildings, schools for children of all ages, school-teachers, of all matters of sanitation, health, physical education, and medical treatment in social life and industry. Commercializing physical examination and medical treatment in the entire school system, under compulsion, and nationalizing education for this purpose. See how it leads to the compulsory control of labor conditions, including infants, children of all ages, prospective mothers, mothers with infant children, laboring men, working women, and industry in general, placing labor conditions under medical control, commercializing medicine and physical examinations, and medical treatment throughout the Department of Labor. See how it would lead to medical control of the available supply of medical men and women operating under these bills, if enacted, bringing into the general plan the number and kinds of schools of medicine, regulating and restricting the number of men and women prescribing medical treatment; also the education and control of public as well as private nursing, with inspection and supervision of housing and living conditions, and in industrial and municipal affairs and hospitals, and giving all health authorities the special privilege of free use of the mails usable for medical propaganda to further their plan. See how they lead to food and merchandise control, commercializing medical control of the handling, manufacture, marketing, and using of all fruit products, agriculture, and all others; control of the industries as well as the labor employed, and nationalizing this medical control of food and drug products, including control of all hotels and eating places.

I want to emphasize again at this point that the Congress has on its calendars now bills of this character, put there for a purpose, and that those same bills are backed exactly as this bill is now, by the same proponents, by the same propaganda throughout the whole country.

I beg you before you vote for this bill to study all these bills which I have enumerated, and see for yourself if there is not every evidence of a deep-seated conspiracy to socialize the Government.

I am not the only alarmist in this matter. More and more as the people become acquainted with the legislation proposed in Sheppard-Towner bills, Smith-Towner bills, Fess amendments, and a dozen other propositions which are not only seriously entertained but which are actually crystallized in bills that have gone upon our calendar, they see them to be permeated with a socialistic purpose. Take the Smith-Towner bill which evidently proposes to nationalize education. Am I the only one who raises this alarm cry? Listen to this: I am quoting from an utterance of Arthur T. Hadley, president of Yale University.

With all due respect to my friend from Ohio [Mr. Fess], I assume that Arthur T. Hadley, president of Yale University, is a very competent authority among educators.

It is an excerpt from a letter addressed to Mr. Samuel T. Cappen, president of the American Council of Education, April 7, 1920. This is what he says:

The concentration of educational supervision in a national capital has always worked badly, and there is no reason to suppose that the United States would prove an exception to this general rule. French education when controlled from Paris has tended to ossify, and only as they have given independence to different districts and different parts of the system has there been any progress made. All the great pieces of progress of the last century were done in opposition to the national incubus of a centralized bureau. In Germany the case was even worse. When I was in Berlin during the winter of 1907-8, I saw a good deal of the inside working; and the degradation of German thought was largely due to the fact that through the establishment, first of Berlin University, and second of other centralized Prussian authorities, the politicians had become able to throttle free thought. I regard the Smith-Towner bill as a long step in the Prussianizing of American education.

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, at this point I ask unanimous consent to print the rest of the letter which Prof. Hadley addressed to Mr. CAPPEN. I have quoted only a paragraph from it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting in the RECORD the letter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. This is the letter:

I regard the introduction of another Cabinet minister as calculated to weaken rather than strengthen the influence of the Cabinet. In the old days, when our Cabinet consisted of heads of Government departments of the first rank, Cabinet councils meant a great deal, because the Cabinet consisted of men who knew how to govern. The introduction of Departments of Agriculture and of Labor, however good in themselves, weakened the force of the Cabinet council, because men were appointed for other reasons than their training in the science of government. If we compare the cabinets of the day with those of 20 or of 50 years ago I think we all see the difference in this respect, and I think that most people will regard the change as a change for the worse.

Finally, I regard the present as a singularly inopportune time for anything that involves increased national expense at Washington, because everything of this sort tends to increase the high cost of living. There is not time for going into the details of the economic analysis; but every hundred million of money spent by the Federal Government under present tax or loan conditions is mostly taken out of capital and mostly added to personal expenditures. The addition to personal expenditure means an increased money demand for products. The diminished capital means a diminished supply of means of production. Thus the price disturbance, already bad enough, is accentuated at both ends. I am inclined to think that the bad effect of the proposed bill taken by itself, in putting up prices of goods beyond their present high figure, would be greater than anything it would do for teachers' salaries; and if this bill is not taken by itself, but regarded as part of a movement for getting national money for local distribution in a great many directions, the adverse effect is going to be many times bigger than any possible good.

Let me also quote from an editorial of the Ohio State Journal of its issue of January 12, 1919, entitled, "Educational Autocracy":

Centralizing education at Washington is now the scheme that is being pushed vigorously in that quarter. It is the old Germanic method of putting the education of our youth under the direction of a Federal autocracy. It is absurd to center educational effort at Washington. It is done for self-exploitation and individual vanity.

[Applause.]

I want you to dwell on those words.

It is monstrous to think of having our schools directed in any way by the political influence that controls the capital of the country. We should get as far from it as possible. It is inconsistent with every true idea of education. It is a step toward the materialization of education which should be resisted at all hazards. Education is not machinery; it is the heart's devotion at work at the home and in the real life of the youth wherever they are. Educational autocracy at Washington! Shame on the idea!

I quote again from the Cincinnati Enquirer, March 3, 1919. The editorial is headed, "Hands Off Local School Control":

One of the devices of the repudiated Prussian system being absolute power in Germany was the seizure and control of public education. Some brutality was displayed, a thing to be expected when Bismarck and the Hohenzollerns were directing the operations. For decades it has been a Teutonic boast that illiteracy did not exist in the Empire. Yet always it was admitted, grudgingly, to be sure, that there was a lacking essential. Machine-made and machine-driven education was not making the proper kind of men and women. How firmly the feeling of dissatisfaction with the system was fixed is shown by the historic utterance of Von Bethmann-Holweg on February 11, 1911, in the Reichstag: "The fear that we may not be working along the right lines in the education of our youth is the cause of great anxiety to many people in Germany. We shall not solve this problem by shunning it."

Under the guise of nationalizing the public-school system of the United States efforts are being made to introduce, through a congressional enactment, precisely the system that the Prussian autocrats utilized a century ago. It is purposed to direct curriculum and the training of teachers from the banks of the Potomac and to place in the President's Cabinet a secretary of public education. There are proffered to finance the weak States and districts subventions from the Treasury. An end, and a sudden end, should be put to these machinations. It is a cardinal principle that control of education should be kept close to the people. Vast, indeed, was the concession of the family to a State when authority over teaching of the children was surrendered in part. As a compensation the voters were clothed with power to choose the educators and supervise the curriculum, and they have guarded it with commendable jealousy.

To forego this privilege of controlling the throttle and to relinquish it to Federal officials miles away and under political influence is unthinkable.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, in this bill one of the most prominent things is the open, plain bribe that is offered for its passage. How can any man in this House go back home and look his constituents in the face and say to them, "Yes; I voted for this bill. It is going to tax you by a Federal law, and then when we get to enjoying the benefits under it you have got to tax yourselves again in order to come in under it." I do not think they will like it.

If the proponents of this plan desire only to assist the poverty-stricken schools, as they profess, this can be done without adding to the legislation the dangerous right of declaring how the money shall be spent and for what ends. Federalization of education is a serpent that ought first to be scotched and then slain.

Pardon me if I quote from another editorial from the Cincinnati Enquirer of November 22, 1920. The editorial is entitled "No Caesar's tribute for education":

There persists, despite the skilled and professional opposition to it, the movement for the nationalization of education in the United States. It is in vain that the admitted sorry failures of the plan in Germany and France are urged against it, as well as the invasion of State and individual rights, the establishment of such a supergovernment would entail in free America.

What is now being sought in the United States is the creation of a new Cabinet portfolio, that of education, and the consolidation in the new department of all the educational activities now operating. To this will be added supervisory power over education in the various States, administered, of course, by trained pedagogues whose services would compel commensurately large salaries. Besides there would have to be maintained a large fund for equipment, endowment, and subvention.

At the present time, the Department of the Interior is charged with the administration of such educational matters as the Federal Government is aiding. One of its most useful functions is the gathering of statistics and general information concerning the condition and progress of education. Another is the handling of the funds for the support of agricultural and mechanical departments in endowed colleges. It looks after the Alaskan schools as well and supervises the reindeer industry there.

The assumption of control of education in the States through fixing a general curriculum for the schools and establishing certain standards in pedagogy is entirely a different matter. If freedom of thought is wanted anywhere, it is in the schools. It would be far better if ignorance of letters prevailed than to have the race taught by educational Helots, because the one would keep liberty alive, and the other would invite that most dangerous of all national diseases—intellectual slavery. Proud Russia fell and dragged down dependent Germany with her because of this very disorder of the body politic.

There is just now an outcry against this spread of bureaucracy in this country, and with it there has been given a promise by the incoming administration that it shall be curbed and confined. In view of this fact it is difficult to reconcile with these promises the prospect of the creation of a gigantic educational machine whose initial request for funds is measured by the gigantic figure of $100,000,000. It is dizzying to contemplate the number of place holders the system would create, and the continuous growth of maintaining it.

Initially, the matter of education is a family function, and the further away from that standard control is taken the worse for the community the venture will be. There is no weakness in the present system now supervised by the State that calls for Federal intervention. Of old it was written:

"Ye shall know the truth, and the truth will make ye free."
The absolute necessity of life-to-day is freedom to become informed. The boundless universe is none too large for those who speak the truth upon which liberty of conscience and action is founded. Not centralization of more power at Washington is wanted but decentralization of that now existing there. It is well enough to pay Caesar's tribute there, but not a penny should be given for things that might interfere with the God-given right of free and untrammelled education.

I could go on and fill the RECORD with excerpts from the leading journals and from the public addresses of prominent men of practical wisdom from one end of the country to the other. But I will not do so. The reason that I have made these quotations is because every argument employed is just as apposite and cogent when applied to the Sheppard-Towner bill as when applied to the Smith-Towner bill and all of that brood of bills to which I have previously called your attention.

Gentlemen of the House, you can pass this bill, not by your sincere convictions, as I honestly believe, but solely through political considerations. But if you do, remember my warning—that unless this House is in agreement with the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], you will be called upon to face one by one all of these insidious propositions sooner or later, for they are all socialistic beads strung on one string and manipulated by a determined and settled propaganda to socialize the Government—a propaganda which has been going on conspicuously for the last 10 years. In conclusion, let me say that if you favor supplanting representative democracy by socialized democracy, vote for this bill, but do not delude yourselves with the idea that there is no machination nation-wide in its character that is organized for this purpose and which will work while you sleep and compel you to weakly yield to its demands, if the vote on this bill be a sample of your strength.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Delaware has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed for an hour by unanimous consent.

Mr. LAYTON. No; I only want two minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Delaware may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAYTON. Gentlemen of the House, I must repeat what I have said. I want to repeat it earnestly. I want to repeat it without offense. I want to repeat it, however, from the deepest convictions that I possess. If you pass this bill not by your sincere convictions, as I honestly believe, but solely through political considerations, remember my warning. You will be called upon to face one by one all of these insidious propositions sooner or later.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall conclude by asking leave to place in the RECORD a justification for my action in this matter. It is a telegram sent to me by the Secretary of the New Castle Medical Society of Delaware, representing more than half of the physicians of my State, and I will say representing some most able physicians. In fact, they are a fine body of medical men. I want to place this in the RECORD for the reason that it justifies my intrusion upon your time. I wish to read it:

THE NEW CASTLE COUNTY MEDICAL SOCIETY,
Wilmington, Del., November 17, 1921.

HON. CALEB R. LAYTON,
Representative from Delaware.

SIR: On November 15, 1921, the New Castle County Medical Society of Delaware took this action in regard to the congressional bill known as the Sheppard-Towner bill, namely: That this society commends you on your declaration against this bill and urges you to vote against it when you have the opportunity.

Respectfully,

ELI NICHOLS, Secretary.

[Prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I approach the discussion of this measure as its sympathetic and genuine friend. I desire in the time I shall occupy not only to call attention to some of the virtues which I think the measure possesses, but I desire also to call attention to some of the opposition and to criticisms that have been hurled at this bill by those who have opposed it.

Before I do that I wish to correct what I think was an unintentional injustice done to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce by our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW], at the outset of his remarks, when, as I think, he conveyed the impression that this bill was here upon report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce because that committee desired to "pass the buck" to the House and then leave it to the House to determine whether the bill ought to be passed. I think I speak for a majority of the members of the committee when I suggest that the committee did not report this bill to the House as a buck-passing proposition.

In the Sixty-sixth Congress the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce by a unanimous vote, if I am not mistaken, reported a similar bill to the House of Representatives after it had passed the Senate by an overwhelming majority. When this bill was introduced in the House during this session by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], it was introduced, if I recall aright, in the exact form in which it had been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House in the last Congress, and that form was very similar to the provisions of the bill as it passed the Senate during the early days of the present session.

I think the attitude of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may be more correctly stated as being about this: There has been very violent and consistent and insistent and honest opposition, I will say, on the part of many people outside of the Halls of Congress and by a considerable number on the inside, including members of the committee. If the committee had been called upon to vote yes or no on the proposition of reporting this bill in the House in the form in which it was introduced by the gentleman from Iowa or in the form in which it was passed in the Senate, I think it is fair to say that the committee would have reported it in that form. But on account of the opposition to the bill both outside and inside the committee, on account of the opposition that has been very persistent and in some respects virulent and vicious, especially on the outside of the committee, we have as a committee undertaken to consider all of the objections, and I think the fact that we have stricken out the language of the Senate bill and substituted the language that has been put in by the committee is evidence of the fact that the committee, notwithstanding its willingness, if necessary, to vote the bill out as originally proposed, was willing to meet, so far as it was possible, the objections of those opposed to the bill; and that is the reason why we reported it in the language which now appears as the House amendment. The committee as a whole has acted in good faith, and there has been no time when a majority of the members were not ready and anxious to bring this measure before the House for favorable action.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that the committee is entitled to that statement, because I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] desires to leave the House under the impression that we have voted this bill out in order to get rid of it, although that is perhaps the impression that he did leave by the suggestion that he made.

I realize how difficult it is sometimes for men to distinguish between governmental activities that are socialistic and governmental activities that are not socialistic. I suppose we might broadly say that all governmental activities are to some extent socialistic, to the extent that they have, in the very nature of things, to deal with the problems that in some sense appeal to or affect our social welfare. When our forefathers framed the Constitution of the United States they set out certain purposes which were to be accomplished by that great document, which Mr. Gladstone has described as the greatest document that ever fell from the brain of man in any particular period of the history of mankind. Among those things set out as the objects of that document was a provision for the common defense and for the general welfare of the people of the United States. Objections have been raised to this measure upon the ground that it is unconstitutional. I suppose that some gentleman will rise in his place here before the debate is concluded and declare that he is against this particular measure because of its unconstitutionality. I do not desire to impugn the motives of any man who speaks against this bill, nor do I desire to reflect upon his intellectual integrity or his judgment of the constitutionality of this or any other measure, but, it is inconceivable to me how a man can conclude that a measure of this kind is unconstitutional. If it has no other basis, constitutionally, for its legality, it is surely based upon the preamble of the Constitution which gives Congress the power to provide for the general welfare of the people of the United States.

I know of no more legitimate or effective way by which Congress can provide for the general welfare of the people than by making an effort to provide for their health. I do not think that provision should be limited to adults who happen to be fortunate enough to reach the age of maturity, but it ought to apply as well to those who have just been born into the world, who have a right to expect that they will have an equal chance with every other child in the world, not only to be born in health and proper environment, but an equal chance to survive after they have been brought into the world.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question there?

Mr. BARKLEY. I prefer to wait a little later; then I should be very glad to answer the gentleman if I can. As far as the constitutionality of this measure is concerned, we have many precedents for legislation of this kind. The Constitution provides that the States may have a militia; but during the last 25 or 30 years we have provided that the Federal Government may purchase, by expenditure of its money, raised by Federal taxation, certain things for the encouragement and equipment of a State militia which is under the control of the State governments and authorities. We have provided by legislation from time to time that the proceeds of the sale of certain public lands might be devoted to matters of education by cooperating with the States, and that money has been paid out of the Treasury and is now being paid out of the Treasury for the assistance of some particular educational institutions in the various States. I do not recall that anyone raised the question of constitutionality when those provisions were made. Not only that, but under the Smith-Lever law, which is now in force, under the Smith-Hughes Act, which is now in force, and under other acts—the good roads act, particularly—the United States Government, acting under the provisions and the authority conferred by the Constitution, has appropriated out of the Treasury money for the purpose of cooperating with the States in not only the building of the roads but in the education of their people and in the advancement of their social and intellectual welfare.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. The point I want to make, and that is my whole attitude—

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, I know the gentleman's attitude.

Mr. LAYTON. My point is this—

Mr. BARKLEY. I gather from the gentleman's remarks that he is against the bill.

Mr. LAYTON. I am, for this reason, and I am trying to give the gentleman the reasons. Can we not just as readily—and I would like to have a categorical answer—just as easily, under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, have a bureau in Washington for the foodless, another bureau for the clothesless, another bureau for the houseless, and under that general-welfare clause do anything that the most radical socialist in the world demands?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am inclined to think that under the general-welfare clause Congress could do all of those things without violating the Constitution. Whether it desires to do them is another question, and I am not in the least bit frightened or intimidated by the gentleman's use of the word "socialistic."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but I shall have to insist upon going on after this.

Mr. WINGO. Can the gentleman from Kentucky follow the genial gentleman from Delaware and make a distinction, so far as socialism is concerned, as between the Congress undertaking to tell the farmer what the texture of his berry baskets shall be and a bill that will undertake to take care of his children and the public welfare.

Mr. BARKLEY. It depends a good deal on whose berry basket is being gored, but there is no difference so far as the socialistic idea is concerned.

Mr. WINGO. There is no difference in theory, both being founded on the public welfare.

Mr. BARKLEY. It has been established by several laws which Congress has enacted, some of which have been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States, that Congress has the right under numerous provisions of the Constitution to appropriate money. The Constitution places no limit upon the ability or the power of Congress to appropriate money, otherwise we could not appropriate money for thousands of things which we appropriate for, and we would be limited in many of the activities of our appropriation bills which we enact from year to year. Congress has established the precedent of appropriating money out of the Public Treasury in order to co-operate with the States in advancing the welfare not only of the States as individual States and as component parts of the Nation but as a whole people and the welfare of all the people, and I think there is no question that this bill at least is not subject to the criticism that it is unconstitutional. If that be true, then the question arises, Is it desirable legislation? That leads me to discuss for a few minutes a question of the need for this legislation. I am not one of those who think that the Nation is going to be destroyed or that the stars of heaven are going to fall if this bill should not be enacted into law. The same thing might be said of many forms of legislation which we pass here, but the question which Congress, and the House particularly at this time, ought to consider is whether it is desirable, whether it is needful legislation, whether its enactment will result in the general welfare and advancement of the people of the United States socially, economically, morally, and in every other way.

As I said a while ago, we can not do anything that will not have some effect on the social welfare of the Nation. I want to reply to another suggestion by the gentleman from Delaware that if this bill is passed—and the gentleman from Delaware undertook to convey the impression—that if the bill is passed it is not to be passed because it follows the judgment and conscience of the membership of this House, but we are to pass it because of some lobby that has been able to intimidate and scare us into voting for the bill. So far as I am concerned, I resent that insinuation and reflection upon the membership of the House. I believe that the House of Representatives is just as courageous as the Senate of the United States and just as courageous as any legislature of any other State, and that it is as courageous in its collective capacity as any member in his individual capacity. [Applause.]

Now, is this legislation desirable? Some eight or ten years ago we established in the Department of Labor what is known as the Children's Bureau, and, among other things, some of the duties which were conferred upon that bureau were to investigate and report upon the question of child life and child hygiene and infant mortality in the United States. There has been a question raised from time to time why it was placed in the Department of Labor. It is not necessary to discuss that now; it is in the Department of Labor and it was placed there because the Department of Labor has largely to do with the conditions of labor throughout the country, and the conditions of labor throughout the country have very materially affected the infant as well as the adult mortality of different sections of the United States. During the investigation by the Children's Bureau startling facts have been revealed in regard to infant mortality and maternal mortality in the United States. There are only about 26 States and the District of Columbia which are in the vital statistics area, where there is a law requiring that there shall be vital statistics as to births and deaths, and therefore it is impossible to obtain statistics and results in 48 States because in only about 25 or 26 of them is there a law requiring statistics of births and deaths.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield for a slight interruption?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I want to say that on to-morrow we are going to be down at Newport News to put a new battleship on the ways, the West Virginia, and I can not be here to participate. I want to say that I am with the gentleman in this proposition. We are getting tired of this nonsensical talk about spinsters going around the country teaching the mother what to do. We know that the Greeks always tried to develop strong children and strong soldiers and able men. Now, what I want to do at this time is to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on this bill and say a few words to the ladies of the country, the gentleman from Delaware to the contrary notwithstanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the gentleman will not extend his remarks too extensively in the vitals of my speech. [Laughter.] During the investigations made by the bureau facts have been developed which have resulted in the introduction of this bill. It has resulted in a conviction among all those familiar with the subject that something of this sort is necessary. Something must be done to preserve the lives of children and mothers in this Nation. It has developed that more than 300,000 children in the United States die every year under 1 year of age. It is a very startling fact that among the whole number born in the United States every year more than 300,000 of them die under 1 year of age, and 47 per cent of those that die under 1 year of age die under 1 month of age, and that 33½ per cent of all those who die in that year die under 1 week of age. It has been testified to by an eminent medical authority whose word I believe and whose knowledge of this subject I have faith in that the majority of infants that die under 1 month of age die from causes that are connected with prenatal conditions of the mother prior to the birth of the child and at the time of its birth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the hearings which I read last evening on this subject—and I did not read them all—I was surprised at the statement of one expert that the mortality among infants of one month or less is 7.4 per thousand among American native-born mothers, and only 5.6 among those of foreign-born parents. Will the gentleman inform me—because I did not have time to read the entire hearings—whether it was disclosed the reason of that great discrepancy between American and foreign born mothers?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that statement was made by Dr. Baker, who is connected with the Health Department of the city of New York, and she said that those figures applied to New York. I do not think they apply to the whole country. The reason they are true of New York is the fact that the foreign-born mothers were more eager to take advantage of the service that is being rendered in the city of New York based on similar provisions to those in this bill, and by reason of their eagerness to use every facility placed at their disposal by the New York health department.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I want to suggest that another explanation is that the foreign-born mothers come from other countries where they are accustomed to the very thing provided for in this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. That explains the reason why they are more eager to take advantage of it.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Is it not a fact that foreign-born mothers have been accustomed to great muscular development and are better prepared for childbirth than are the American women?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am going to yield now, but then I desire to get on. I did not know the gentleman wanted an answer to the question. I thought he was making a statement. That may be true to some extent, but I do not believe that fact alone would explain the difference in the death rate of native and foreign born mothers in New York due to childbirth.

Mr. KINDRED. I will yield gladly to have the gentleman answer.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not in the position of an expert to pass upon the muscular development of foreign-born people.

Mr. KINDRED. Could the gentleman—and this is the only interruption I want to make—answer in regard to whether they were preventable causes of death of the 300,000 children which it is alleged die as a result of the lack of an agency which will be provided by this bill? How many die through preventable causes and through causes that are not preventable, such as abnormal presentation at birth, for instance?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I can not give the gentleman accurate information in regard to the percentage of that 300,000 whose death could be prevented. That is to some extent speculative. But 47 per cent of them die under one month of age. The testimony before the committee is that the majority, more than 50 per cent of those who die under 1 month, die from causes connected with prenatal conditions which could have been prevented if ignorance and poverty had been relieved in some way or information brought to prospective mothers concerning the rules of hygiene and good health and proper prenatal care.

Mr. KINDRED. In other words, it is inferred they die from preventable causes?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not inferred that they all die of preventable causes. In the gentleman's own State 13 years ago the department of health of New York established this very work. It has been indorsed by every responsible medical society in the city of New York, and a few years ago when the city administration was threatening to withhold the appropriation for this work there was danger of a monstrous parade before the City Hall to demand that this appropriation be continued. New York City alone appropriates $900,000 for this very work. That is in the great city of New York, and every medical society in New York indorsed it and requested that it be continued by the government of that city. [Applause.]

Mr. KINDRED. My State does its work so well that we do not need Federal interference in this manner.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am willing to accept the gentleman's statement that if all the States and cities were doing as well as New York City, we would not be here at this time asking Congress to pass this measure, but unfortunately that is not being done. Thirteen years ago when you began this work in New York 144 babies out of every 1,000 born in a year died, and that in the great city of New York. Last year, 13 years after that work was begun, the percentage of deaths had been reduced from 144 per 1,000 to 85 babies out of every 1,000 born in the city of New York. The work had been carried on there so successfully to the great benefit of the people of New York that the birth rate among children who died under 1 year of age had been decreased almost one-half by the results of this work in that great metropolis. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the same evidence show that there is the same approximate decrease in the percentage of deaths of mothers?

Mr. BARKLEY. Practically the same decrease in the deaths of mothers.

Mr. LAYTON. As a matter of fact, does not the city of New York owe a great deal of its success by supplying not only medical treatment, drugs, and so forth, but—

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, I am not so sure. They might in the hospitals. They certainly have clinics and visiting nurses that might find some family in destitute circumstances and some expectant mother and provide the physical requirements, but the gentleman from Delaware would not be in favor of this bill if it established a commissary in front of every home where a child was expected to be born?

Mr. LAYTON. No; I would not.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would be impossible for this bill to be amended so as to appeal to the mental proclivities of the gentleman from Delaware. More than one-third of all the children who die in a year under 1 year of age die within less than a week after they are born. In view of this it has been stated by an eminent scientist that the average child born has not as much chance to live a week as the average man who is 90 years of age. Now, in view of this enormous death rate, in view of the feeling which has come about in all the different countries which have tried it, I ask whether the United States Government is now going to halt or to hesitate or to oppose a great humanitarian measure such as this which is designed to save human life. Are we any less solicitous about the lives of our children than about the lives of our pigs and cows? We appropriate millions each year to save the lives of dumb animals.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield for me to answer?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman poses as an expert, I am willing for him to answer it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No. I meant to approach the question with the same respect for the gentleman that I thought he had for me.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have the greatest respect for the gentleman, and I have the greatest respect for his inquiry, but he arose with such alacrity that I thought he might qualify as an expert. I will be delighted to yield to the gentleman. If we can justify our appropriations—and we do justify and indorse them—for the saving of animals, can we not with greater force justify our efforts to save the lives of mothers and their children?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would like to ask the gentleman if we save the pigs for the pigs' sake?

Mr. BARKLEY. No.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We save them so that we may have the animals to slaughter for these mothers and children.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and we save them, too, for the reason that we do not desire to lose the economic value of the pigs.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is the same thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is hardly the same thing. I am not willing to view the life of a hog from the standpoint of food for expectant mothers or fathers either, so far as that is concerned, and then deny to that mother or her child any assistance in the effort to save their lives. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But the gentleman insists on showing how much the Federal Government spends on pigs and other live stock and contrasts it with not spending any money on babies, and this is used on the theory that we have a sentimental relationship toward the pig but we do not have any toward our children. Anybody who looks the thing in the face and applies logic to it knows that we do not save the pig for the pig's sake. It is not any eleemosynary effort on our part to save the pig for the sake of the pig. We save it to eat it.

Mr. BARKLEY. We save the pig not for the pig's sake, of course, but because of the pig's value. We desire to save the baby for the baby's sake. That is the difference. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. The Department of Agriculture spends money out of the Treasury of the United States to teach how to breed cattle, does it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. And to impart other valuable information to the agricultural classes of the people. Now, the only thing this bill does is to aid the educational facilities of certain bureaus of the Government; is not that true?

Mr. BARKLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. LONDON. That is all the bill does?

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman from Vermont has misconceived my intention or my purpose in suggesting the appropriation for hogs and cattle if he thinks that I for a moment attach any sentimentality to the saving of the lives of dumb animals. It is a cold question of economic values.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I did not mean to draw that from the gentleman's speech.

Mr. BARKLEY. The mere fact that we are willing to spend millions of dollars in order to save the lives of animals for their economic value to us as a Nation, or even from the standpoint of food, which may have some sentimental attachment in connection with it, is the very reason why we ought, if necessary, to yield to the sentiments which actuate our hearts in a desire to save the lives of infant children, who have the right to live, who are brought into the world without their consent and knowledge, and who have a right to expect at least that society will give them an even chance with the dumb animals to preserve their lives. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The question that the gentleman means to impose is not one of humanitarianism. It is a question of where it is the duty to save the lives of animals that human beings eat. That is the question at issue. So these statistics about poor pigs having an untimely death do not come into reckoning.

Mr. BARKLEY. The thing I am calling attention to is the fact that we have a constitutional right, and I am attempting to exercise the constitutional argument, to appropriate money out of the Treasury in order to save the lives of dumb animals for whatever purpose those lives may be saved, and we have not only the same right, but owe it as a duty, to do that much for the saving of human life, for which all of these activities are supposed to be intended.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I will say to the gentleman that having a right also implies some judgment as to when to use it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that is a legitimate suggestion.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not doubt the constitutionality of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is in your mind that it is not the duty of the Federal Government to do it, but some local authority?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Do you think the same duty involves upon all of the localities—State, counties, and cities—to perform all these other duties that the Congress has taken over in the appropriation of money to cooperate with the States?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not think many of them can be used as a precedent. I do not think that two wrongs make a right.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I may suggest to the gentleman that pigs collectively are a national asset, as mothers and babies collectively are a national asset. Does not he believe the health of the mothers and babies of the country and their conservation is as great a national asset as the conservation of pigs?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In starting originally in our scheme of things it was thought that the liberty of the women and children in the homes was the greatest asset we had, because that was the root of national liberty itself. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not care to take up too much of my time talking about swine. I suggested that as an argument why we ought not to run away from the saving of women and children. As far as the invasion of the home is concerned, as the gentleman has suggested, not only does this bill not permit that, but it prohibits it entirely. In New York City, and even in Boston, and in every other place where this work is being performed, there is no authority to invade the home of any man or woman against their will and consent, and there is no effort made to do it, and in order that we might safeguard the provisions of this bill, and in order that we might meet the opposition of some people who are afraid that we were going to establish a national office force and go over the country and invade the homes of the people against their desire, we have specifically provided against that in the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would like to suggest to the gentleman as an experienced and able legislator, that he knows that no Congress can bind its successor; and once you open the door to a policy and embark upon it and hand it down to other Congresses, they will amplify it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Well, of course, no Congress can bind its successor, but every Congress has a right to assume that its successor will be at least as wise as it is, which may or may not be a compliment to the successor. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I want to observe this fact: I think it is a disgrace that the babies of this country that are to develop into men and women of the future should be compared with that porcine animal, the pig. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman is correct. But I am sure he does not wish to give the pigs any advantage over the babies.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I wanted to call this fact to the attention of the gentleman in reference to these appropriations. Each year there is paid to the Public Health Service a lump-sum appropriation for the purpose of combating epidemic diseases, just as appropriations are made to the Department of Agriculture for combating the epidemic disease of hog cholera among the hogs, and just as appropriations are made to combat an epidemic disease among cattle, to wit, tuberculosis. Now, when there was a ravage of infantile paralysis in the country, very properly the Public Health Service used that appropriation to combat that disease. Personally, I have always supported an appropriation of that kind to put down epidemic disease among children and adults, just as I do for the Department of Agriculture, but I think it is a very different matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then the gentleman agrees with the purpose of this bill in principle, but objects to the agency through which it is to be carried out.

That leads me to suggest this: There was a decided difference of opinion among the various members of the committee, and also among those who appeared before the committee, as to whether this legislation ought to be administered by the Public Health Service or by the Children's Bureau.

The committee came to the conclusion, and I think wisely, that the necessity for this legislation or the desire or need for it at least had been brought about by investigations which have been conducted from time to time all over the country by the Children's Bureau; that the Children's Bureau was created specifically and definitely to deal with the question of infant mortality and maternal mortality, and had developed the facts which made this legislation desirable, and being especially equipped for this work the administration of it should be entrusted to it. I want to say that there is not any branch of the Government for which I have a higher respect than I have for the Public Health Service of the United States. It has more than demonstrated its effectiveness and worth to the people of the United States.

I do not believe that there are very many Members on this floor or very many people in the United States who agree with the proposition laid down by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], that the Public Health Service ought to be abolished. But when we came to decide which agency of the Government ought to administer this law the committee felt that it ought to be administered by the Children's Bureau, which by its investigations had developed the need of the law and which was better equipped for the purpose than any other branch of the Federal Government. Therefore, in this bill the committee has made the Chief of the Children's Bureau the executive officer in the administration of this law.

Gentlemen have expressed opposition here from time to time, and we have gotten circular letters and other letters from people who have been lobbying here against this bill; and while mention has been made of the enormous lobby advocating this bill, I think it is not more evident and not more insistent than the one that has been haunting our footsteps and the corridors of the Capitol against the bill. But they have a right to be here, just as those who favor the bill have a right to be here, and I have no complaint to make against them, whether they are for the bill or against it.

One of the things originally urged against this bill was that it would establish a system of Government medicine, that we were going to send doctors around the country to perform obstetric services in the homes of the people of the country against their will and whether they wanted them or not, and that we were going to set up a national school of medicine. That was one of the objections to the proposed law and that was one of the reasons, especially it was one of my reasons, for voting to place this work under the Children's Bureau. The Public Health Service is primarily a medical function of the Government. It is presided over by medical men, and its force, which is scattered all over the country, is made up very largely of medical men. If the object had been to place the administration of this law under the Public Health Service, there might have been given some color to the fear of those who dreaded the establishment of a recognized Government school of medicine. That is the thing that we desired to steer clear of, and that is one reason, among others, why it was deemed wise to place this work under the control of the Children's Bureau. It is placed partially in the control of a board of three, one of which is to be the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, at present Dr. Cumming, for whom I have the utmost respect, not only as to his character but as to his judgment and good faith in the exercise of these duties. The other member of the board is to be the United States Commissioner of Education. This being a matter of the dissemination of knowledge among the people about hygiene and health measures before and after the birth of children and in some degree educational, we felt that as representing the educational forces of the Nation the Commissioner of Education ought to be a member of the board. Of course, the Chief of the Children's Bureau, being the executive officer to administer it, ought also to be a member of that board.

In that way we met the objections of those who have feared that the Government wanted to recognize and establish a particular school of medicine in the United States and send its doctors around to attend patients. There was never any ground for that fear, but some people seemed to be obsessed with it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] asserted that the medical profession as a whole throughout the country was against this bill. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky if there were any representatives of the medical profession present at the hearings in opposition to this bill as it is now reported to this House?

Mr. BARKLEY. No, sir; there was not. There were only two or three witnesses who appeared in their capacity as physicians to testify against the bill, and they did not represent any medical society or any organized society of medicine, but appeared individually. But I wish to say that in a convention of all the health officers of the United States, representing 48 States, a resolution was passed indorsing the provisions of the original Sheppard-Towner bill, which had been amended to meet some of the objections of those against the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is the Chief of the Children's Bureau a physician?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know about that. The late Chief of the Children's Bureau, Miss Lathrop, was not a physician. I do not know whether the present incumbent is a physician or not, but I am inclined to think she is.

Mr. KINDRED. No.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Has the committee held any hearings on the bill in its present form?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course not; the bill in its present form is a bill based on the hearings that we held for two or three weeks.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman stated that no medical man had appeared against the bill in its present form. There has been no opportunity.

Mr. BARKLEY. No medical man appeared against the bill in its original form who represented any medical society. On the contrary, I think a majority of the witnesses who testified in favor of the bill were practicing physicians from various places, and one of these men who appeared in favor of the bill was the distinguished physician of the President of the United States, Brig. Gen. Charles E. Sawyer.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield? I want to ask the gentleman if he spoke as a doctor or as a soldier?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad to say that he talked as a doctor.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman allow me to read what the chief obstetrician of the Johns Hopkins University said against the bureau?

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the gentleman will do that in his own time. Dr. Williams indorsed the bill in one statement before the Senate committee. He may have given another statement to the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. Johns Hopkins Hospital is in my district, and I understood that he was against the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. In spite of that fact I am still in favor of Johns Hopkins University. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I think the gentleman is using what he has called "white horse sense."

Mr. BARKLEY. That ought to appeal to the equestrian gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. My home town is York, Pa. We have a population of about 60,000. In that town we have a hospital, we have a health board, we have a visiting nurses' association, and everything is done that is possible to take care of the sick in the community. What I want to know is: What would be the practical operation of the bill in a community like that?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the community does not need the service it will not be forced upon it. Some advocates of this bill who come from New York City have testified as to the wonderful work being done there and were frank enough to say that New York City would not benefit in any particular by the passage of this legislation; that they are already doing the work, and all that they could do under the present circumstances; and they will not need it. But they were liberal enough to state that while New York does not need it New York is willing to make such contribution as may be required in order that the work may be done throughout the United States. [Applause.] In all probability if York, Pa., is now equipped as well as any other section may be equipped, under the bill, financially speaking, you may not derive any benefit under the law. I feel sure that the citizens of York, Pa., represented by the amiable gentleman from Pennsylvania, are willing not to count this thing in their own particular local benefit but make such contribution as they can for the advancement of the national welfare regardless of the effect it may have upon them. But that would be for the decision of the State board of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. The people of York are liberal and patriotic.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure of that; if not, they would not be properly represented by the genial gentleman who is now speaking. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. FESS. Is it not true that each State has established a hygiene agency, and if York, Pa., demanded it it would be entirely in the judgment of that agency?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and that leads me to say that objection has been made that this sets up a great Federal authority in Washington to tell people how to doctor themselves and how they are to live. There will not be under this bill—and I say it to relieve the fears of anybody who is uneasy and fears that a Government doctor is going to break in their front door in order to administer to the needs of some family—there will not be, in all probability, a single physician sent to a single home in the United States from any authority exercised in Washington. Only 5 per cent of the entire appropriation is to be used in Washington. They must employ all assistants they have and publish all pamphlets and send out all the information they obtain with that 5 per cent, which represents only $50,000. The actual administration of the law is to be under the State boards of health. In some few States they have already a division of child hygiene. They have to match the Federal appropriation, and with the two sums added together they can perform the duties required under the law. All States have public health departments, but some do not have a division of child hygiene.

In any State that does not have that division they will be required to establish such a division in the department of health or to designate officers already in the department of health of the State under whom the law is to be administered. They must outline certain plans. We have recognized in the amendment here that it is impossible for the Children's Bureau to set up regulations that will apply to every State. Local conditions will have to be consulted in determining what the regulations in every State will be. Therefore, we have not empowered the Children's Bureau nor this board of hygiene and maternity to issue regulations from Washington that are ironclad, rigid, inelastic, for the State boards of health, but we have provided that all these boards shall make their own regulations and submit them to this board for approval, and after approval and the money is turned over to the States, then the State board of health through this agency is to carry out the provisions of this bill under the plans which have been submitted to and approved by the board.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. My curiosity is aroused by section 8 of the bill. Many of the States have bureaus of infant child welfare, authorizing the State authority to enter the home and take from there children and subject them to hospitalization and treatment. Can a State having such a law, under section 8, participate in the distribution of this appropriation?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the State regulations will have to comply with this law in so far as they control the money provided for in this bill.

Mr. MILLER. Then this law prohibits that?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. That is the intention of it, and I think it does.

Mr. MILLER. Can a State which authorizes its agents to enter the home and remove defective children and subject them to hospitalization irrespective of the desire of the parents have its regulations approved by this board?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am inclined to think that the spirit of this provision is that the State, in order to get the approval of the board for its plan, must provide that forcible entry into the home over the objection of the parents can not be made.

Mr. MILLER. Could it be possible that provision might be made for a distribution of a separate fund apart from that which the State law provides? Under the State law they could enter into the home and take the child, and would do that under funds to be supplied by the State, while the national appropriation provided for in this bill might be utilized for another service.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a matter for the States to determine. If the State wants to create a separate fund under which it will administer its own laws, I do not think Congress could prevent it, but in so far as it applies to the administration of this law and the expenditure of money provided by Congress, matched by the States, it can not do the thing prohibited in this law.

Mr. MILLER. Would the gentleman have any objection to an amendment providing that this appropriation shall be subject to expenditure under the general law of the State?

Mr. BARKLEY. I would have to consider that amendment. I would not want to accept it until I know the effect it might have on the general proposition. I think it is covered in a subsequent section, but as far as I am personally concerned I should be glad to consider the gentleman's suggestion. I would not want to speak for the committee.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The effect of this law does not have the slightest bearing with respect to the State law relative to the control of dependent or delinquent children.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not a thing.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Those laws will operate just as if this law was not in effect.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and the State may appropriate a million dollars and authorize every officer to invade every home and take diseased or indigent children to some public institution. It would not have any effect upon the administration of this law.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am very reluctant to embarrass the conclusion of this speech, but there is one thing about which I should like to be enlightened. I have waited all of this time to have the gentleman reach it. I wish the gentleman would describe to the committee just what are the measures contemplated by this bill to check infant mortality. I am not speaking of the constitutional measures, but I refer to the actual measures of sanitation and precaution contemplated by this bill to check infant mortality.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that is a matter it may be difficult to answer in full, because the bill, in the nature of things, can not provide the detailed regulations that will be submitted by these various boards of health in the various States. I imagine that in a general way these State boards operating under this law will provide for agencies of the board of health, either medical, nurse, or educational, that may be applied to by people who need this service. They may even establish headquarters or agencies somewhere, or they may have men and women who, operating under the laws of the States, under the jurisdiction of the State boards of health, may be available for advice and information, suggestions with reference to the proper care not only of infants after birth but of mothers prior to their birth, and that is not always a medical matter. That is very largely a sociological matter. It may result in the relief of conditions of ignorance and in some cases of poverty, but that will depend upon the measures to be advocated and adopted by the local agencies; that is, the State boards of health, with their divisions of child hygiene and maternity care, so that it is impossible to cover in any definition all of the activities that these various State agencies may be engaged in.

Whatever may be done to educate or to inform or advise expectant mothers before the birth of the child or afterwards in respect to cleanliness, sanitation, ventilation, and all the multitude of things that go to make a well woman, that are not necessarily medicinal, will be done by these local authorities in the dissemination of information and the giving of advice, and in cases perhaps of the administration of care to people who are in need of this service.

Mr. COCKRAN. Am I then correct in understanding that this is to be educational largely, rather than medical?

Mr. BARKLEY. Very largely so. It is not intended that the Government of the United States shall go into the business of furnishing doctors to wait upon people.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I would like to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] that there are social organizations, social centers in his own city, and the people who have charge of that work, charge of the maternity cases and child welfare, appeared before our committee and told us of the tremendous amount of good that this educational work had done in that city, and of the large percentage of lives of women and babies that have been saved through that work.

Mr. BARKLEY. And I will say in that connection, and further replying to my friend from New York, whose suggestions

I am always delighted to have, that it is in the testimony before the committee that in the State of New York these activities are greatly sought after by the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask for five additional minutes.

Mr. COCKRAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts what he is going to do about this debate. Are we going along here allowing every person who gets the eye of the Chairman to have an hour? Probably only a dozen Members under that system will get to speak on this bill, whereas we may make an agreement about time. There are a great many Members who would like to say a few words, and under an agreement as to time they would get an opportunity to say something, whereas under this procedure they would be cut off.

Mr. WINSLOW. An effort was made, as the gentleman knows, to arrange for a distribution of time, that Mr. BARKLEY, the ranking Member of the minority end of the committee, should have charge of the time on that side, and the chairman of the committee have charge on this.

Mr. RAYBURN. Not at all under this arrangement.

Mr. WINSLOW. But there was an effort to bring that about, but it was objected to, and after that no more effort was made to have anybody appointed to handle the time, and we went into the Committee of the Whole, subject to the general rules of the House. Now we find ourselves confronted with the situation which the gentleman describes, and the query is whether we shall undertake to make some arrangement which would limit time by the regular parliamentary way.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am not objecting about the limitation of time. I want everybody to speak on this bill who desires to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish the gentleman had waited until I got through instead of suspending me in midair. I am perfectly willing to go on if we reach an agreement—

Mr. RAYBURN. I think we can reach an agreement. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. We can not make an agreement in the committee.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. By unanimous consent we can agree as to debate terminating in committee, and I think as soon as we do that we will be willing to go into the House and divide the time.

Mr. RAYBURN. In other words, if we are going on as we are going, this debate will probably go on for 12 hours, and 12 people only will get an opportunity to speak on this bill. It was noticed that each gentleman who had the floor has used his hour and some more time. There is great interest on this bill, and if this procedure is followed with reference to Members allowed to speak, this debate will go on for a week.

Mr. WINSLOW. What does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. RAYBURN. I suggest that we get some agreement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request to speak any longer. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. I think this debate should well go on for five more hours, if it is properly allotted.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Let me suggest this—

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to state to the gentleman from Kansas this is a real discussion.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. There is no popgun stuff here, and it is a measure in which Members of the House have a general interest.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I suggest this—that we run on with general debate to-night as long as you wish and the bill be disposed of to-morrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. There are two or three people who have secured recognition and used three hours.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think we can still have a division of time—

Mr. Sisson. I do not know who has the floor. The time has been divided among several members of the committee. I think we ought to have a real division, so that those against this bill may have some opportunity to have something to say about the bill. Now I have absolutely no objection to the chairman of the committee controlling the time of the committee, but I understand that the committee has reported it unanimously. When Mr. CANNON was Speaker he always asked the committee whether or not it was a unanimous report, and if so he recognized somebody opposed to the bill because he wanted a real debate. If you should recognize those for and against the bill you will have an equal division and proper division.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If we do not have any agreement as to time and every man is recognized for an hour, perhaps five, six, seven, or eight men will have an opportunity to express themselves and the rest of us can sit around and have no chance.

Mr. Sisson. That is true; I think the time ought to be divided between those who are for the bill and those who are against it. Those for the bill have already used two and a half hours to those against it using one.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, may I submit a unanimous-consent request? I doubt if gentlemen will desire to remain here longer than 6 o'clock, and it occurs to me we might continue debate until 6 o'clock with the time in the control of the chairman of the committee, the time to be divided equally between those for and those against the bill, and to-morrow morning, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we should when we convene fix a time for the closing of general debate, with the understanding that the time will be properly divided between those for and those against the bill, and that time be so arranged that we have a final vote on the bill to-morrow afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that only three gentlemen have been recognized and have spoken so far.

Mr. MONDELL. Before I ask unanimous consent, I will say that before we adjourn to-night I shall ask unanimous consent, when we are in the House, to adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow. But now I ask unanimous consent in the committee that the debate may continue for one hour, to be controlled by the chairman of the committee, to be divided equally between those for and against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, how can it be divided between those opposed and in favor of the bill when if a man is recognized he is entitled to an hour?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, if we have a unanimous-consent agreement—and that is what I was asking—to continue the debate for one hour this evening, I do not care how it is controlled; I simply suggest it be controlled by the chairman and divided by him between those for and against the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MONDELL. The chairman of the committee reporting the bill.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WINSLOW. Reserving the right to object, I wish to make a statement to the Members about this matter. There is a very great call for time. An opportunity was lost by failure on the part of somebody to take technical advantage of the opportunity to request to handle the time for the opposition. So that went by, and we find ourselves in this predicament.

In consequence of the situation the chairman of the committee, who is supposed to be running this bill, I presume, has passed out certain guaranties to the members of the committee on both sides and of all shades of mind, in good faith, and I do not want that good faith shaken unless it is shaken with the knowledge that they are doing that thing. I have told them, after consulting different people, that we would run on through the evening in order that those who might wish to speak might have the opportunity unless the House decided to the contrary. With that off my mind I do not care what is done.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I shall be happy to have the House debate this question all night, but every gentleman here familiar with the practice of the House knows full well that after about 6 o'clock some one will insist upon a quorum, and that the balance of the time will be consumed in calls of the House. Now, knowing that, why not arrange for as long a debate as it is possible to secure? And that is what I had in mind.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman appreciates it takes only a hundred Members for a quorum in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to withdraw my request and let the debate go on, with a gentleman securing time for an hour and keeping everybody else out, if that is the way the committee desires to go on and continue indefinitely. It seems to me the other way is a more orderly one. We could have an hour of debate this evening, about two hours of general debate to-morrow, and then take up the bill under the five-minute rule. Or if we could meet at 11 o'clock we could have three hours of general debate to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman give way for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. COCKRAN. Is there any pressing or capital necessity for concluding this bill even to-morrow? Is there any pressing necessity for doing so?

Mr. MONDELL. I think we should conclude it to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRAN. I think the gentleman will concede that there has been no time wasted here.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sure of that.

Mr. COCKRAN. I have no objection to these gentlemen having an hour apiece if they will give them the time. I think the whole question of when the debate shall close might be sent over until to-morrow and be decided according to the enlightenment the House might have at that time.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not asking to have any decision reached as to when the debate shall close. I was simply trying to reach an agreement whereby we might have another hour of debate this evening. I think that is about as long as Members want to stay.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Reserving the right to object, a good speech was interrupted 15 minutes ago in order to fix the time. The gentleman from Kentucky was making a good speech, but was not permitted to conclude. He was denied that privilege. We have spent 15 minutes, and I think as we have spent that much time we had best fix the time now rather than to spoil a day to-morrow in agreeing to the time. I think we had better do that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? I would like to say this, that after a conference with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] a little while ago, and in response to inquiries made by gentlemen upon this side of the Chamber, I said to some of them, who have since left the Hall, that I understood it was the plan to run right along into the evening. I do not know that that would make any material difference with those gentlemen to whom I gave that information, but if that plan is to be changed I felt like a public statement should be made.

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to say again that we shall be very glad, indeed, to have the debate continue indefinitely this evening, but I am rather of the opinion that it will not continue indefinitely, and I am endeavoring to get an agreement for as long a debate as is practicable this evening. However, I am perfectly willing to withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming withdraw his request?

Mr. MONDELL. No. I submit my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. VOLK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as two hours have been given to those in favor of this proposition, and inasmuch as the committee is unanimously in favor of it, may I not ask that the extra hour be consumed by those in opposition to it?

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from Wyoming was to allot the time equally. Is there objection?

Mr. WINSLOW. I object.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio rose.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I unintentionally took the gentleman from Kentucky off his feet, and I am sure no one will object to his proceeding for 10 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. QUIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to know if the request of the gentleman from Wyoming went through?

The CHAIRMAN. It did not. Objection was made. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I hesitate to take any more of the time of the committee, but there was one thing that I desired to call attention to before I concluded, and I was prevented by the number of questions which I was called upon to answer and which, of course, I was glad to answer. When a crossfire is going on, time escapes more rapidly than we realize, and therefore I did not get an opportunity to do it.

I wanted to state that, so far as the consideration of this bill is concerned, there is no politics in it; there is no partisan politics in it; and I think in a certain degree both political parties are committed to it. While the Republican Party platform last year did not in terms indorse this bill, I think the President, then the candidate of the Republican Party, in his speeches practically indorsed it. He came out in a speech or two in which he favored it, and in his annual message to the Congress, which he delivered in person here on the 12th day of last April, he committed, so far as he could, the party he represents to this proposition, because in the course of his message, after enumerating a lot of measures which he desired enacted, he used this language:

In the realms of education, public health, sanitation, conditions of workers in industry, child welfare, proper improvement and recreation, elimination of social vice, and many other subjects, the Government has already undertaken a considerable range of activities. I assume that the maternity bill, already strongly approved, will be enacted promptly, thus adding to our manifestations of human interest.

So that the President of the United States, so far as he could, has committed his party to the proposition which is now under discussion. So far as the Democratic Party is concerned, it is more specific, because in the platform that was adopted last year in San Francisco we find this language:

We urge cooperation with the States for the protection of child life through infant and maternity care, in the prohibition of child labor, and by adequate appropriations for the Children's Bureau and the Woman's Bureau in the Department of Labor.

So that the Democratic platform of 1920, having in view this very legislation, has committed the Democratic Party, in so far as a political platform can commit a party, to this identical legislation, not in general terms but specifically. So that both parties, I think, are committed to the enactment of this legislation, and, of course, it remains then for individual Members to determine what weight they will give to the authoritative declaration of their parties and the leaders of their parties with respect to legislation of this kind.

There are many things that I would like to discuss in connection with this bill, but they will be considered in the debate later, and we may go into more details and discussion then. In my humble judgment this is a very meritorious measure. It not only appeals to the sentiment of men but to the conscience and heart of humanity. Whatever Congress can do, whatever the Government can do, to alleviate these woeful conditions which the testimony on this measure has developed, ought to be done by the Federal Government, and I draw no fine-spun distinction between the duties of the States and the Nation in legislation of this kind. If it is a proper governmental function, it is proper both for the State and the Nation, and whatever may be for the uplift, the advancement, and the welfare of the whole American people ought to be done by Congress, and without hesitation. [Applause.]

All the activities of the Nation and of all the States with reference to health and sanitation are for the purpose of preserving human life. We appropriate millions of dollars for the support of the public-health activities of this country in order that life may be saved and that the people may enjoy that boon without which nothing is of much value. This measure proposes to do for the mothers and the children of the Nation, through cooperation with and aid to the States, that which will make it easier for them to live and enjoy that life with which God has endowed them. More than 23,000 mothers in the United States die every year in bringing their children into existence. It is not claimed that this law, or any law, can save the lives of all this vast number of noble women. But it will save many thousands of them, because where the service contemplated by this measure has been in operation the death rate of mothers from childbirth has been materially reduced, and we believe it can be done in all the Nation if the proper effort is made. We do not claim that all the lives of the 300,000 children who die every year before they are 1 year old can be saved by this measure. But, basing our belief upon the results achieved where similar measures have been tested in this and other countries, we are confident that it will achieve a success which can not be measured in money but can only be measured in the preservation of hundreds of thousands of lives of children who have a right to life. We can not escape our obligation to them upon any technical grounds. And when this measure has been enacted, as it will be, and the results of its operation are assessed by us and our successors, I believe that even those who now oppose it will give generous and worthy praise to those who conceived the plan and have labored for its fulfillment. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont, Mr. HILL, and Mr. KINDRED rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED].

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, as an opponent of this bill, I ask to be recognized for the period of one hour, with the understanding that I shall take 10 minutes myself and yield 50 minutes to other gentlemen opposed to the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I desire in the 10 minutes in which I have to speak on this important measure to discuss it most dispassionately and entirely aside from any partisan or even professional prejudice.

In the first place, in regard to the attitude of the physicians of the country with relation to this bill, it is a fact that, in respect to this bill and in respect to all similar bills, busy doctors do not go before committees as a rule. [Applause.]

Gentlemen in perfect good faith stand here and undertake to tell the Members of this body how the medical associations stand on various measures. I know that in speaking for the 2,500 members of my local associations, including physicians, druggists, and dentists, of Kings County and Queens County, N. Y., I am speaking for a very negligible number of the 110,000 physicians of this country; but I know that that organization is solemnly against this measure, and through no selfish reasons whatever. I say I know that organization is solidly against this measure, and through no selfish reason whatever. I believe, gentlemen, that the physician who comes into most intimate contact with the agonizing experiences that accompany childbirth—and I do not wish to give to it any sort of trivial aspect—that he knows some of the practical applications of laws that ought to be enacted to control this condition in regard to maternity and the newly born child. In the first place, we physicians above all desire everything that means more humanity and kindness to everybody. That is the original proposition upon which you must take the physician's argument on this question. To my mind this whole question reduces itself to a question of efficiency. How are we best to secure these measures which will make for the uplift of humanity and stop the large death rate of mothers and children?

In this connection I wish to say, as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] in his able and exhaustive speech, that there is no disquieting death rate at the present time. There is nothing about the death rate of mothers and children at present which should alarm us. There are numbers of deaths that are not preventable. In their statistics, which are more or less unreliable, they have not told you that in certain cases, abnormal presentations, death of the infant child is inevitable. The child is dead before it is born. Yet they tell you you can prevent by bureaucratic and interfering and mischievous enactment like the proposed law children of that kind being born dead.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINDRED. No; I have only reserved to myself 10 minutes. As to efficiency, that element of the measure—and I am speaking from the standpoint of a practical man and also from the standpoint of the overburdened taxpayer—and I tell you that the States of this Union can more efficiently carry out these measures and control this matter of childbirth than the mongrel measure like the one pending before us. In this connection I am sure, as has been virtually admitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the committee, in his able and fair presentation of this measure, there will be at all times a great danger of conflict between the Federal and the State law. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], in answer to a question as to what is the practical purpose to be accomplished by this bill in addition to mere education, has said in effect that we were groping and we know not where we are going.

If we know not where we are going and what we are doing in a Federal measure which will be constantly in conflict with State laws, we had better pause now. I say that the States can better accomplish the purposes of this measure. I candidly believe that other States can do what New York has done. It has been said and is in the record of the hearings that the State of New York has a most excellent child's welfare bureau. I want to say in addition to that that the Board of Health of the State of New York—and the other States throughout the Nation can do the same thing—has lately, within 10 years, caused clinics and educational agencies to be instituted throughout the State of New York and brought attention of the humblest woman in the State as to the importance of the question of maternity.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINDRED. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. If I recollect right, the last appropriation for the use of the lady at the head of this service, Dr. Josephine Baker, was something over $1,000,000. Dr. Baker is a very good physician—

Mr. KINDRED. An eminent and well-qualified person for the position of chief of the child welfare bureau of the city of New York.

Mr. LAYTON. I understand in the last appropriation in the city of New York it was nearly a million dollars for the purposes of child welfare in New York City.

Mr. KINDRED. Child welfare?

Mr. LAYTON. Was that spent on pamphlets and tracts, or was some of it spent for milk and coal?

Mr. KINDRED. I am glad my colleague has called attention to the fundamental situation. You can not secure a healthy baby unless you feed the mother. There are two things in which I do not agree with my distinguished friend from Delaware—one is as to the superiority of the bottle-fed baby over the breast-fed baby, and the other is as to his estimate of the Public Health Service, but in all other respects I indorse every word of his able speech.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KINDRED. For a brief question.

Mr. LAYTON. My question is rather long, and I guess I will not put it.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used eight minutes.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. KINDRED. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. I am interested in the efficiency of Dr. Baker, of New York, testified to by both the physicians of the House. I understand that Dr. Baker is very enthusiastically in favor of this legislation.

Mr. KINDRED. Dr. Baker is regarded as being in favor of this legislation, but a great many idealists who do not search for the deeper conditions are in favor of this legislation. Has Dr. Baker considered the taxpayer in the matter? Has Dr. Baker considered that we shall in the next five years expend over seven million and a half dollars in a mere experiment? I do not object to the paternalism of Government, I do not even object to what my friend Mr. LONDON, of New York, advocates, socialism in the accomplishing of humane and better conditions, if it will work efficiently and has any sense in it, and does not afflict our citizens, as the pending measure will do if it is enacted into law, with increasing burdens of taxation and invade personal liberty, even to the extent of destroying the privacy of the home and family.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill and, following the course which I usually pursue when I am against a bill, I intend to vote against it. I shall not enter upon any discussion as to the merits and value of legislation promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy. I shall assume that all will agree that such legislation is desirable on the part of the States and municipalities and is in the highest degree commendable. Several speakers who have made addresses in advocacy of the bill to-day have made mention of what the city of New York is accomplishing along these lines. Very well; I am glad to hear it. The very fact that some 30 or 40 States and some large municipalities have already legislated on this subject and are engaged in activities along these lines is proof that it is desirable as a subject of legislation for States and municipalities. If this is not a subject which can be safely left to their discretion, then I know of none which can be. If the States and municipalities can not be trusted to enact all of the needed legislation and furnish all of the required financial assistance for an activity so intimately connected with the home and the most sacred domestic relation, then it seems to me that we might as well no longer rely upon the States and municipalities to do anything for their people, but will have to trust everything to the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. The care of mother and child, in so far as it is a governmental function at all, is a State and local, not a Federal function. All will agree that every mother and child should receive proper care. So should every mother and child receive suitable nourishment. But it has never been my understanding that it is the duty of the Federal Government to provide either food or care.

Some of the advocates of this measure justify their support of it upon the contention that the bill does not interfere in any way with the control of the States and municipalities over these matters, but merely provides for Federal assistance and cooperation. That was the gist of the able argument of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. He claimed that this bill does not interfere or infringe upon the jurisdiction of the States and municipalities, but merely provides for Federal aid and cooperation—in other words, makes a gift from the Federal Government to the States of the several million dollars authorized to be appropriated by the bill.

Waiving aside the objection that this is an entering wedge of Federal legislation concerning subjects relating to our most intimate domestic relations, I desire to notice briefly the argument that the bill should pass because it provides a gift from the Federal Government to the several States. In answer to that argument, let me say in the first place that the Federal Government has no money of its own to give. The only money which it has is that which it gets from the people in the form of taxation, and almost everyone will admit that already we have enough commitments ahead of us for the next few years to engage all of our ingenuity in raising taxes without adding on any more new ones. [Applause.] If I wanted to make sure of the defeat of the Republican Party in the next campaign, I would aid its majority in keeping on creating new Federal activities and voting new appropriations and enlarging taxation. For that policy will surely do the business for them.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I am sorry, but unless I can get an extension of time, I shall have to decline, because it will be impossible to complete my argument, which is only brief but which I would like to finish. Many of these commitments to Government expenses which we already have are imposed by subjects which are clearly matters for the Federal Government to handle, such as the Postal Service, the Army and the Navy, most of the expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, in the Treasury Department, in the Interstate Commerce Commission, and other Government departments. I admit that some Government activities that we already have are not proper subjects for Federal expenditures, but, to say the least, are already committed to them by law, and we must go through with them unless they are repealed. Taking into consideration these Government expenditures which we already have ahead of us, it should be apparent to everyone that Congress should be very careful now about taking on any more new subjects. We already have ahead of us for many years to come the task of raising $1,000,000,000 per annum to take care of the interest and the sinking fund on the public debt.

It will not be many years before the annual expenditures for pensions and war-risk benefits to soldiers of the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and the recent World War will approach the $1,000,000,000 mark. That will make in these two items, alone, an expenditure of approximately $2,000,000,000 a year. So when gentlemen talk about the United States Government making gifts to the States of money to be used for this and that and the other purpose, laudable and worthy though such purposes may be, they should well bear in mind the old equity maxim, which says: "Be just before you are generous." In my judgment the Federal Government is going to have all it can attend to in meeting the just obligations which it owes, and by that I mean those which clearly fall within its proper sphere of activity, and at the same time avoid oppressive and confiscatory taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BLACK. If the United States Treasury was some great reservoir, bursting over with fabulous wealth, it might be perfectly proper to make generous donations of money to be used by the States, not only for this purpose of promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy but for other social and humanitarian purposes; but it is not such a reservoir of overflowing wealth. We are already scraping the bottom of the barrel and using the last measure of oil and the Secretary of the Treasury is having to go into the market every few months and sell short-time obligations in order to meet the necessary obligations of the Treasury. Some of these days these short-time obligations must either be paid or refunded into long-term obligations, and it is well that we begin to consider the approach of that day and make preparation for it. So even if I thought this bill were a proper subject of Federal legislation, which I do not, and it was one where the Federal Government is justified in taxing the people and handing the money back to the States again in the manner provided in this bill, I would not vote for it at this particular time.

Speaking for the people in that section of Texas which I have the honor to represent, I can say that I have never known a time when they were less able to have their taxes increased, either by the Federal Government or by the State and municipal governments, than at the present time. I shall not vote for any measure which will impose an additional tax on the people at this time unless I believe that it is one of great urgency.

I agree that there are certain public health functions which are clearly national in character and which the Federal Government should and does perform. Some gentlemen in this debate have referred with a great flourish and blare of trumpets to the fact that Congress appropriates money to be spent by the Department of Agriculture in stamping out epidemics of hog cholera and tuberculosis among cattle, but nothing for the care of mothers and babies. Why do not these gentlemen be fair and state that Congress does appropriate nearly $9,000,000 annually for Public Health Service to be spent under the direction of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service. For example, there is $500,000 of this amount appropriated for the prevention of epidemics:

To enable the President, in case only of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, Chinese plague, trachoma, influenza, or infantile paralysis, to aid State and local boards in preventing and suppressing the same.

Now, it is clearly the function of the Federal Government to engage in an activity of the above kind, because epidemics have no regard for State lines and must be dealt with in a systematic way, but epidemics are very different from the hygiene of maternity and infancy.

Therefore, I do not regard this Sheppard-Towner bill as presenting any proper subject for Federal regulation. The Republic has existed more than 140 years without legislation of this kind, and our people have gotten along fairly well, and, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to try awhile longer without it. [Applause.]

"The support of the State governments in all their rights, as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against antirepublican tendencies" is just as true to-day as when Mr. Jefferson uttered it in his first inaugural address March 4, 1801. It is getting time Democrats were giving some heed to it.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this bill the Members of the House should divorce their minds from the original bills introduced two years ago and from the bill introduced in this House.

Senate bill 1039 has been changed by your House committee 88 times. Whole sections have been rewritten, sections stricken out, and a number of new sections added. It is not the same bill. Even its title has been changed. In its revised form I shall vote for it.

Your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is composed of 18 lawyers and 3 business men of experience. It is no exaggeration to state that there were some provisions in the Senate bill which were not understandable by a single member of this committee, and there were other provisions upon the interpretation of which the committee divided, part believing that a section meant one thing and part believing that it meant entirely another thing.

The proponents of the bill, supported by an intensive propaganda, have advocated a measure which I am quite convinced would not have met with such enthusiastic indorsement if they had given it the same careful consideration as that bestowed by your committee.

The proponents of the bill—its real friends—had in mind in its advocacy but one thing: To stimulate, encourage, and aid the several States in promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy by appropriating money for that purpose, and to cause to be made studies and investigations, and report to the various State agencies the result of these studies and investigations.

This revised bill provides for these things, removes national control over State agencies, and confines the object of the act to this specific purpose.

It further limits the whole operation to a period of five years, in which time it is assumed that State agencies will be developed to such a point of efficiency that both the management and the support of such agencies will be reserved for the States without further assistance or stimulation from the National Government.

I think it will be admitted that some few of the publications of the Children's Bureau were unfortunate, or at least subject to criticism, wherever they wandered from the expressed objects of the bill and discussed, or even presented for the consideration of the public, questions relating to the maternity benefits or birth control.

There were no direct bulletins issued specifically advocating these things, but their discussion and consideration caused many people to view with suspicion the real object of this enactment.

As barnacles attach themselves to the bottom of a mighty ship, some unsolicited supporters espoused the cause of this bill. Their unwelcome support brought most of the criticism and nearly all of the strong opposition which has developed.

Unfortunately, we have in our great Republic more than our fair share of cranks, parlor bolsheviks, and theorists, who seem to derive some pleasurable excitement from a discussion of the sacred things of pregnancy, maternity, and infant control. Whether their interest is the result of an abnormality or a moral perversion it undoubtedly exists, and in the name of decency should be condemned by all right-thinking people.

It would seem that common sense should limit the direction and control of these matters to the physician or to mothers or to women of scientific medical education or to those nurses who have been taught by physicians.

PROPAGANDA.

Laws by propaganda are becoming a dangerous menace.

Congress desires information above all things. It particularly requires specialized information. It is impossible for the human brain to intelligently consider even a small proportion of the 30,000 bills which usually flood each Congress. Whether this information comes through the mail or is delivered personally, it is welcomed by the conscientious Representative.

But there is another form of so-called information which is not information at all.

A small group of citizens conceive an idea. They finance the idea. They employ attractive men and women to travel from State to State and from city to city to promote this idea. Hurriedly, without investigation, and in nine cases out of ten without even hearing the proposed bill read, with no comprehensive understanding of the enactment, acting merely upon the delightful tale related by the propagandist, a resolution is passed, an indorsement is given, a local committee appointed, and then the attractive gentleman or lady proceeds to the city of Washington, and at the proper time the pounding process begins. Resolutions, telegrams, and letters pour in upon the Congressman, warp his own intellectual judgment, distort his personal view, and curtail his capacity by pounding and pushing him into a position which does not agree with his own intellectual conviction.

In many cases this artificially organized propaganda distorts the public mind and beguiles to its support intelligent men and women, who, upon explanation, become ashamed of their support or opposition to a measure. This has notably happened in this bill.

People have supported it because it had the word "mother" and the word "child" connected with it. They have not considered cost. They have not considered national control of a State function. They have not considered State control of the sacred and intimate things of life. They have not considered the possibilities of an opening, by way of precedent, for the promulgation of theories and doctrines totally antagonistic to the American idea of the rights of the home, the privacy of the individual, and the fundamental fact that motherhood is the fruition of love and not of science.

The propaganda favorable to this bill was met by a propaganda in opposition which is exaggerated, which attributed to the real proponents of the measure ideas and opinions which they did not possess. This opposition read into the bill imaginary things which it did not contain. It built up imaginary horrors for the purpose of knocking them down. Because a very small, insignificant support came from a group of sex neurotics, it falsely charged that theirs was the view of the leaders of the movement. The evidence it produced was not convincing and finally dwindled to mere mischievous assertion, unaccompanied by proof.

This bill, as now presented for your consideration, is not the measure which the propaganda of the proponents indorsed; and it can be stated with equal emphasis that it does not now contain in its provisions those things to which the antagonists of this bill so strenuously objected.

1. National control over the State agency is removed.
2. No expectant mother or child can, without the consent of such mother, or the guardian or custodian of the child, be interfered with in any way.
3. The right of entrance into a private home without permission is prohibited.
4. There is nothing in the bill which would permit the introduction, or even discussion, of maternity benefits, compulsory registration of pregnancy, or birth control.

5. It does not permit the selection of a physician for the patient by any officer or agent of the United States Government.

6. It does not permit the Chief of the Children's Bureau to dictate the plans of States, to control the allotments to States, to select agents for the States, or to dordinate the control in the States.

7. It creates a national board of maternity and infant hygiene, which is composed of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, the United States Commissioner of Education, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau, and provides that this board shall select its own chairman, and that rules, regulations, and conditions under which the Children's Bureau shall operate shall be controlled by a United States Government medical expert, a United States expert in the matter of education, cooperating with the Chief of the Children's Bureau, who becomes the administrative and executive officer, subject, however, to the rules and decisions of this board.

We have preserved in the law the real objects sought to be attained by the vast majority of the proponents of this bill. We have eliminated those provisions which made it possible to interject objectionable doctrines, socialistic control of the home, and, more important still, we have reserved for the medical profession the actual work which belongs to that science.

THE PHYSICIAN.

The scientific physician commences his career and his preparatory studies when about 15 years of age. He prepares the foundation with a college education. He adds to this four or five years in a university of medicine. He supplements this scientific education by work in hospitals.

It usually means that 10 or 12 years of his life are devoted to study or preparation before he receives his first $3 fee as a doctor.

Ten years in time, 10 years of expense, 10 years of concentrated thought and study entitle him to believe that in all matters pertaining to health, sickness, and disease his opinion and his advice in all matters relating to pregnancy and childbirth should be given first consideration. He believes that 95 per cent of the causes of death and infant mortality are occasioned by sickness and disease, and that death comes from causes for which he alone should prescribe.

The trained nurse is the right arm of the doctor. If properly equipped, she is his trained assistant, working under his direction and as the result of his investigation.

To put aside the scientific training of the physician and to attempt to substitute for it unskilled advice carries danger and might have a tendency to increase, not decrease, the mortality rate.

A laywoman, uneducated in the science of nursing and acting on her own initiative, with lack of experience, can bring death as quickly as disease.

To send an unmarried woman—who is not a physician or a trained nurse—into the sickroom to advise and direct the expectant mother is criminal.

One witness before our committee made the following impressive statement:

People do not die of sociological conditions. They die of actual ailments. Of course, nobody will deny that sociological conditions have an important effect upon the condition of the health of the individual. If a person can not get any food, of course, he will starve to death. In the winter time, if he can not get adequate clothing and shelter, he is likely to suffer from the effects of the cold weather in the form of pneumonia or diminished vitality that causes him to be a prey to infection. Of course, there is a sociological side to the question. But there are only two ways in which you are going to effectively protect the lives and health of the people. In the first place you would if you could get it, give them money enough to buy all they desire. That, of course, is absurd. The question then becomes one of proper public health protection, leaving the individual to work for himself under proper health conditions. You can do that. You can go ahead with those measures which will protect the health of the people. Those are not sociological measures; they are public health measures, medical measures, and every public health measure of any consequence, or every efficient measure that we know for the protection of the public health, is directed by physicians and their aides.

One witness claimed that the cause of maternal and infant mortality was subject to division into three parts: The social, the economic, and the medicinal, all affecting the health of the mother and the child. The social element naturally includes the subject of environment, education, and heredity. The economic relates to the matter of property, the ability to provide proper food, heat in winter, ice in summer, pure air, and pure water. The medicinal relates to diseases, organic and acquired, which can be treated only by the physician.

The relative part which each of these factors bears to the whole was a matter of some dispute, though physicians declared that 95 per cent was medicinal and only 5 per cent social and economic.

This proportion was varied by other witnesses, but I do not think that any witness reduced the proportion of the medicinal as against the social and economic to as low as 50 per cent.

To eliminate the advice and direction of the doctor from any local or national health agency would be indefensible. By placing on the board the Surgeon General of the United States and leaving to the health departments of the various States the local administration of the law, the influence, advice, and direction of the physician, as the law is now amended, is not removed, and the national portion of the act is confined largely to what might be termed the social and economic elements.

The following questions and answers given by the head of one of the great national medical associations gives the physician's viewpoint:

Mr. HAWES. Doctor, the nurse is the assistant to the physician?
 Dr. KOSMAK. Yes.
 Mr. HAWES. Primarily trained by the physician?
 Dr. KOSMAK. Yes.
 Mr. HAWES. And as new knowledge comes to the medical profession, that is imparted to the trained nurse by the physician?
 Dr. KOSMAK. Yes.
 Mr. HAWES. And one of your objections to this bill is that 95 per cent of the effective work done in the interest of protecting maternity and the child is medicinal?
 Dr. KOSMAK. Yes.
 Mr. HAWES. So that you object to the 5 per cent controlling the 95 per cent in the matter of administration. Is that your idea?
 Dr. KOSMAK. I do.
 Mr. HAWES. I understand, Doctor, that you favor full and ample investigation and proper appropriations by the Federal Government in the matter of investigations, statistics, reports, and advice to be sent to the States?
 Dr. KOSMAK. Yes, sir.
 Mr. HAWES. So that your objection to this bill can be analyzed as about three or four objections. First, you believe that it should be directed by a skilled physician?
 Dr. KOSMAK. Yes.
 Mr. HAWES. Second, that national control should not dominate local control?
 Dr. KOSMAK. No; it should not.
 Mr. HAWES. And probably your third objection is that this bill does not define in any way what the national function will be, but leaves it to some board to be appointed in the future. In other words, Congress does not say how this money shall be spent, but some board which will be created in the future will say how it shall be spent?
 Dr. KOSMAK. Yes.
 Mr. HAWES. Not in the volume of money, but in the manner of expenditure?
 Dr. KOSMAK. Yes.

It must be kept constantly in mind that the law we are discussing is not the law that went before the committee, but the law that came out of it.

NATIONAL VERSUS STATE CONTROL.

There seems to be a growing tendency to send all problems for solution to the National Government. This is not done in the European nations. The counties and cities in England, and certainly its Provinces, have all preserved their measure of self-control and local self-government. This is so in Germany, France, and Belgium, and even in Spain. The city and the province has its separate laws and institutions. Each of these nations has a much smaller population and is much more closely knit by blood lines than those of America. And yet, without much thought and little consideration, year after year Congress is called upon to take away from the States their powers and functions and repose these powers in the National Government. For the mere purpose of expediency we break down a great fundamental principle and set the precedent for other legislation.

No profession has suffered more from this attempt at national control than the medical profession. Tied down by restrictions, inhibitions, and regulations, a great, scientific, learned, and indispensable public factor is being deprived of its initiative and freedom of action.

Soon the National Government will be called upon to regulate the clothes we wear, the food we eat, the kind of houses we should live in. It will be invited to perform marriages and grant divorces; and, latest of all, it was to have been invited into the sacred precincts of the home to examine the prospective bride and groom, to record the cases of pregnancy, direct the mother, and control the child.

There are persons so thoroughly un-American in their understanding who think that the barber who trims a man's hair, the tailor who clothes him, the chiropodist who treats his feet, the shoemaker who makes his shoes, all are to be regulated and controlled by some bureau of the United States Government.

The bill, as originally presented, did provide for national direction and control over the State agencies, but this has been entirely eliminated, and it was eliminated with the consent and approval of the leading proponents of this bill.

The first witness called by them was a woman physician, Dr. Baker, of the Public Health Service of New York, who immediately won the approbation of our committee by her broad views and intelligent grasp of this legislation. She said:

When this bill was first introduced in Congress there was a clause in this bill which provided for the organization in each State of a separate committee to work out a program under the general control of the Federal Children's Bureau, and I appeared before the House committee in opposition to the bill on that ground. I am absolutely opposed to any Federal administrative functions in the State, and if this bill were so amended as to give administrative functions to a Federal department, to come into the States and carry on the work, I think I can promise you I will be down here to appear against it again.

The restrictions placed upon national control which have been inserted by your committee are as follows:

SEC. 4. Provided, That in any State having a child welfare or child hygiene division in its State agency of health, said State agency of health shall administer the provisions of this act through such divisions.

Thirty-three States have this State agency and the balance of the States are expected to write them into their laws as legislatures convene.

SEC. 8. Provided, That the plans of the States under this act shall provide that no official or agent or representative, in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall enter any home or take charge of any child over the objection of the parents, or either of them, or the person standing in loco parentis or having custody of such child.

SEC. 9. No official, agent, or representative of the Children's Bureau shall, by virtue of this act, have any right to enter any home over the objection of the owner thereof, or to take charge of any child over the objection of the parents, or either of them, or of the person standing in loco parentis or having custody of such child.

Nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the power of a parent or guardian or person standing in loco parentis to determine what treatment or correction shall be provided for a child or the agency or agencies to be employed for such purpose.

SEC. 14. This act shall be construed as intending to secure to the various States control of the administration of this act within their respective States, subject only to the provisions and purposes of this act.

Each State is left free, in its own way, through its own legislature, to provide for its own State agency.

The provisions of old section 4 of the bill, relating to advisory committees both by the State and local agencies to be under the direction of the Children's Bureau, was eliminated. This section sought to legislate for the States by providing, among other things, that at least half of these advisory committees should consist of women. This was stricken out because it was not considered proper for the head of the Children's Bureau to determine any matter concerning an advisory committee of a State, how many members it should consist of, or what its sex should be. If a State desires to appoint an advisory committee composed exclusively of women or of men, it can do so; or if it desires to make a provision of one-half women and one-half men, it is left free to pursue that plan.

A further and fundamental objection to this provision was the recognition of sex in the creation of public office. That is a matter which should be left either to the discretion of the appointing officer or for the voters of the various States and Nation to determine.

Followed to its logical conclusion, if introduced into one department of the Government, we would soon have the proposition presented of providing a sex for the President, a different sex for the Vice President, and so on through the list of Cabinet officials, determining a matter by law which should be left exclusively to the voters to be determined in exercising their right of suffrage.

Whether the Children's Bureau shall be controlled by female officials or male officials is left to the discretion of the appointing power. In this particular case this discretion has been wisely exercised in the appointment of women, and if I were governor of the State of Missouri and the question of a State advisory board came before me for consideration I should unhesitatingly appoint women to half of the board, as I consider them well qualified in every way to hold such positions.

Section 9 of the old bill, which gave the United States Commissioner of Public Education the right to designate and select certain colleges in each State for the purpose of introducing lectures upon the question of maternity and hygiene, was stricken out entirely because, in the opinion of your committee, the designation of these State agencies should be left to a State and not to a National official.

In each of the States there are a number of educational institutions where this work could be carried on, but the selection of one or all should be left to a State and not to a National officer who is not a resident of the State and may never have crossed its border.

The principle of having a national commissioner, who may have been raised in the State of New Mexico, to dictate the educational policy of, for instance, the State of Missouri, is totally repugnant to anyone at all conversant with the theories upon which our Government was established.

Section 10 was also eliminated as tending to direct or control the agencies of a State.

So it will be observed that both by the process of elimination and the further and emphatic process of express statements, the direction and control over State agencies has been removed.

THE COST.

For some unknown reason some of our thoughtless citizens seem to consider that National expenditures for State benefit come out of some mysterious treasury for which they do not have to pay. It is well for them to understand now that for every dollar of Federal money appropriated for State purposes the people of the State pay their part under some form of national taxation.

The Utopian idea of a national administration of public health worked out in dollars and cents presents an appalling cost which I am sure will convince anyone of its impracticability.

The relative proportion of county and State public health appropriations can be illustrated by the amount of money spent in one State. This State has for its budget on public health, not including local agencies and the vast sums spent by volunteer organizations, $6,000,000 annually, and it will receive from this Federal allotment only $40,000, and yet under the original provisions of the bill before amended by our committee the $40,000 had it in its power to dictate to the $6,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWES. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the theory of the bill that by national appropriations the National Government will stimulate activity in the 15 States that have not undertaken this work, or is it the policy that the 33 States that have undertaken it do not provide sufficient money and must necessarily call upon the National Government for appropriations to carry it out in its proper functioning?

Mr. HAWES. The effort is joint. I understand that Pennsylvania appropriates $6,000,000 a year for the purpose of public health. That is probably doubled by benevolent associations, so we might say there is $12,000,000 spent in public health in the State of Pennsylvania, but from the National Government under this act it would only receive approximately $40,000 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HAWES. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the policy then that Pennsylvania is not appropriating enough and this $40,000 contributed under this bill will make the requisite amount necessary for the proper functioning in the State of Pennsylvania, or is it just merely a contribution to the State in addition to that which they have at present?

Mr. HAWES. As a financial contribution to the State of Pennsylvania $40,000 would be ridiculous.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then why contribute it when they are not asking for it?

Mr. HAWES. It is a contribution for the stimulation of educational work on the line of hygiene, economics, and sociology. The State of Pennsylvania might be inspired to increase its agencies, and in smaller States in the West, where they have no agencies of any kind, we offer them a mere promotion fee, if you please, to establish some agency.

Another illustration: If the Children's Bureau ever invades the field of the doctor and the Department of National Health it will find its financial contribution so small that it will be ridiculous. For instance, there are 3,000 counties in the United States, some of them containing over 100,000 inhabitants and covering an acreage of 30 or 40 square miles. To give any public nursing aid to these counties would require the constant employment of at least two trained nurses; that is, provided it was intended to give direct free medical assistance in maternity cases. At the minimum this would require two trained nurses, who would cost $5 each, or $10 a day. This would make an annual cost to each county of $3,650, or for the 3,000 counties an annual expenditure for only two nurses to a county of $10,950,000. This would not include buildings, physicians, medicines, and a dozen other items which would multiply this sum tenfold.

It becomes apparent that the welfare of maternity and child hygiene is a local and not a national function in its larger aspects.

THE NATIONAL WELFARE DEPARTMENT.

President Harding has suggested a wise coordination of all departments of health, hygiene, and sanitation under a department which is to be called the National Welfare Bureau, which bureau will ultimately have a place in the Cabinet. The present Children's Bureau is now under the Secretary of Labor. Enough has been said to show that it is not properly placed. Over 50 per cent of maternity mortality is medicinal, another large per cent is educational, and only that portion which might be determined economic properly belongs to the Department of Labor.

It is therefore much to be desired that the President's program will be carried out, and I believe it will be under the direction of Gen. Sawyer.

Gen. Sawyer's testimony before our committee was illuminating and is well worth careful consideration. He presented a breadth of view and a practical understanding of what the Children's Bureau ought to do and what it ought not to do, which I quote:

It must get its inspiration from the soul that inspired this measure. As I say to you, my understanding of this bill is that it handles the sociological side. Do I make myself clear? It does not handle the medical side of maternity. It handles the social relations; it handles the natural conditions that stand for the highest type of motherhood, for the best preparatory educational care or, I should say, precept that can be established. This is my understanding. As I said, this bill, its purposes, is to distribute information; and as I interpret the bill it does not mean that it is going to tell Mrs. Smith how she shall treat some disorder that she may have, but it is only to teach Mrs. Smith the things that are well for her to do that she may be in the best physical condition to meet maternity requirements. If Mrs. Smith has a disorder, such as comes to women, that requires medical treatment and medical attention, certainly those in charge of this affair would not attempt to treat that case medically.

If there is any way in which this bill can be interpreted to mean that it gives to the Children's Bureau the power to treat diseases of mothers or children, then I do not understand it.

This is a clear statement of what the objects of this bill should be, and if the bureau of public welfare is projected, then Public Health, Children's Bureau, and all departments will come under the head of this new bureau, and, from the testimony of witnesses who are proponents of this measure, I find there will be no objection; and it may not be too much to say that in presenting this bill your committee had in mind the ultimate depository of this power under the bureau of public welfare.

THE BASIC PURPOSE.

The benefits to be derived from this bill were exaggerated by its proponents. Its evils were equally exaggerated by its antagonists.

Judge TOWNER in opening the hearing made this very commendable statement:

Let me say to you, gentlemen, that if there is anything in the bill yet existing that in the slightest degree would, in your judgment, show an indication of autocratic exercise of power, let us have it taken out. It will meet with no objection on the part of the proponents of this bill. It is to aid, to encourage, and to stimulate, not to control.

Accepting the invitation of Judge TOWNER, your committee has been very liberal with its objections and its additions, but has preserved the basic things which the intelligent proponents of the bill had in mind and to which its thoughtful opponents should have no objection.

The first of these is to stimulate and assist State efforts to undertake a broader field of activity in an educational way, promoting the economic and social conditions which will improve the health of the mother and make more safe and agreeable the life of the child.

Second. To cooperate with the States by what might be termed the contribution from the National Treasury of a promotion fund, an advancement, to put on foot a proper State agency.

Third. To call to its councils the head of the great Public Health Service and the head of our national educational system and, with their assistance, to administer through the Children's Bureau a stimulating and sympathetic interest in the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy.

Fourth. This interest and education not to be intruded upon, not to be compulsory, not to be directory, but to be given when acceptable, asked for, and approved.

Fifth. The field of medicine is not to be invaded; the physician and the trained nurse to remain supreme in their own domain; nor shall the recipient of this public assistance be directed in the employment of any particular medical advice or help.

If these are not the objects of the bill they are not understood by our committee.

If any of the objectionable doctrines previously discussed should be accepted or engrafted upon this simple and splendid object, I believe we can count upon the influence of the women to cause the removal of such official and to restore to the bureau the American idea of the American treatment of this delicate subject.

Personally, I have the old-fashioned idea of maternity, that marriage is the result of love; that maternity is the result of marriage; that the child's care is dependent upon parental affection; that any attempt, by scientific management or governmental regulation, to change this natural order of life would be to undermine the welfare of the Nation and put love, marriage, and maternity upon that lower animal basis of stock-farm management, where regulations are provided for the stable and the cow barn. [Applause.]

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair state how much time I have left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 36 minutes remaining. Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] 10 minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced with great earnestness that it is my duty to the people of my State and my duty to the Nation to oppose the passage of this so-called maternity bill and to vote against it.

In doing so I am fully aware that its enactment into law is urged by many high-minded men and women who are persuaded that it is a beneficent measure designed to do much good to humanity. I heartily respect the noble aspirations of these people and only regret that in this particular instance I can not see my own duty in the light of their good intentions.

These people urge the passage of this bill mainly on the ground that it is calculated to relieve suffering and to save life. That these are among the loftiest of motives that can be embraced in human interest nobody can deny. Indeed, it is only to be regretted that many folks are so fervently advocating this measure, so enthusiastically committed to its purpose and policy, that those who dare to obstruct it are not infrequently put under color of the suspicion, absurd as it may seem, that they are stubbornly opposed to such a consecrated cause as this particular relief of suffering and saving of life. And, of course, no man in his right mind can be willing to rest under such an ignominious indictment.

But the answer to it is easy enough, if one will but analyze the subject and the situation and apply a little practical logic to the test. It is not defensible to do a wrong thing in order that good may come thereof. After many trials of one ethical and moral code after another, this wise old world has learned at last that the end does not justify the means. Granted, without argument, that it is urgently desirable to relieve suffering and to save life, the question still remains, Is this an instance when that duty should be performed by the Federal Government at Washington, or is it an obligation that rests upon organized society at home? And what will become of organized society, and how long will it, indeed, remain organized if it shirks off onto the agencies of a distant Government to be done officially and for hire the most sacred duties that devolve upon the home?

I am opposed to this bill for two general reasons:

First, because in my opinion it invokes a wrong theory and principle of civics or governmental policy in that it causes the Federal Government to do for its individual citizens that which they ought to do for themselves, or at least through their own voluntary and nonpolitical associations. It is paternalism, the most subtle and sinister enemy of popular government.

Second, I am opposed to the bill because it is economically unsound in the money obligations it creates between the several States and the Federal Government and in the financial relations of the peoples of the several States to each other and to the Federal Government, and because of the loss of the right to local self-government that ensues to the people of the several States in consequence.

I know well enough that the suggestion that there is paternalism in this measure and that behind it lurks the menace of State socialism will provoke a smile of incredulity on some faces. But anybody here in Washington familiar with the artful propaganda that has been maintained in support of the idea of embarking the Federal Government upon the policy of "the public protection of maternity and infancy," knows how cleverly that propaganda has been made to appeal to some of the warmest sentiments of humanity and how skillfully it has sought to engage the earnest interest of the women of the land thereby. Anybody here in this Capitol familiar with the stages through which this bill passed up to the time that it was reported out to the House in its amended form knows full well what a battle has been waged by the influences that would have given the measure over completely to the forces that in unhesitating avowal are making for the most radical principles of Government control of maternity, infancy, education of youth, and so on through the whole catalogue of Government regulation and Government standardization of the individual citizens of the land, including birth control itself. There is no secret about it.

The committee has stripped the original proposition down to a measure that does, indeed, bear the marks of simplicity, that closely resembles other enterprises upon which the Federal Government has cooperated with the States and now cooperates with them, and bids now for its support in this House on the theory that the bill is harmless, so far as any socialistic tendencies are concerned, and that men may vote for it with a freedom of mind that assures them that they have thereby committed themselves to no more than the text of the bill as it reads to-day.

But men familiar with the history of legislation must know, as indeed they do, that no Congress can bind its successors.

This bill is dangerous because it is the entering wedge for a policy that, once opened and in active operation, can have no other end than that broader and more insidious scheme of Government regulation and control that was in the minds of those who first proposed such a policy. To-day, happily, the Government does not seek officially to concern itself in any degree with the domestic relations of the care of maternity and infancy. Once this bill becomes a law, no matter how cautiously drawn, no matter how honestly advocated, the camel's nose has got under the tent.

The Government by that token has departed from its former policy and has begun to interest itself in this matter. Every man of experience in public affairs knows that from that day on the forces that have up to this time failed to get full recognition of their theories in this particular bill will never rest from their labors until upon the Government foundation here laid down they will erect an institution in which shall be found every one of their principles and agencies thus far rejected. Year by year, detail by detail, line upon line, precept upon precept, they will seek through amendment of law to work out a statute that realizes their fullest aspirations.

And the agencies and officers authorized even by this simple bill must inevitably, in the very nature of the development of such things, soon become the missionaries that will beset every home in the land with propaganda for the further extension of the law. [Applause.]

The time to stop such a thing is now, when, for the only time, we can prevent its beginning. [Applause.]

Why, for that matter, the very fact that the bill sets a time limit of a few years upon the continuance of any operations under it is a bald confession by its own framers of distrust of the principle and frank admission that it can only be entertained, if entertained at all, as a rigorously circumscribed experiment. [Applause.]

If it is a good thing, why should it not go on forever?

I say again this is the entering wedge, to be followed in season by the grosser thing. The time to kill it is now.

Do you remember the old rhyme born of a fierce struggle in the British Parliament years ago that is very apt just now in its relation to this particular parliamentary situation here?

I hear a lion in the lobby roar;
Say, Mr. Speaker, shall we shut the door
And keep him there, or shall we let him in
To try if we can turn him out again?

[Laughter.]

I know it must seem to some people that perhaps I am a bit old-fashioned in my views about such matters. Many folks are very earnestly and honestly hopeful that advancing social order will inspire Governments everywhere to do a great many benevolent and beneficent things for the good of mankind. And sometimes these people are not a little annoyed when they find men in my place who are not so eager about some of the proposals of this kind and are inclined to class such men with "standpatters," "reactionaries," and such like undesirables. Very likely, however, if many of these same high-minded folks were face to face with the stern responsibility of sifting these propositions one by one, of scrutinizing their details and the theory upon which they are based, of inquiring back into their antecedents to determine their reason for being, and of looking equally far ahead to conjecture their probable outcome—very likely, I say, many of these same people would themselves come to be somewhat conservative about adopting every new proposition that kept springing up in a period of such restless theorizing as that in which we now live. Very likely when they soberly realized that it was no longer academic speculation with them but direct personal responsibility for the thing to be done and all its consequences, they would listen to the voice of St. Paul coming down the ages to them:

Prove all things; hold fast that which is good.

Personally, from my youth up, I have believed myself to be moved by ideas and ideals of a progressive social order. In times past I have engaged in many a battle along that line of ceaseless warfare for social betterment. My heart is with it still. But, however hopeful and ambitious we may be for a progressive and ever more exalted and useful social order, we must not make the fatal mistake of confusing the agencies that are to accomplish it with the agency that the social order itself is to accomplish. Government is the creature of social order, not the parent of it. And government will be just as healthy and just as strong as that social order has proved itself to be, no more, no less.

When society, through its own agencies and forces and inspired by its own exalted sense of self-preservation and self-responsibility, works itself up to higher and higher levels of social order, then society is strong and healthy, as all mortals are who take care of themselves and do for themselves. And the government such a society sets up is strong and healthy, too, because, being a popular government, it comes out of the ranks of strong and healthy people.

But when society reaches that stage of vain speculation and aimless endeavor that it seeks to shirk off onto government the duties that belong to itself, individually and in the mass, society grows more and more lazy, inefficient, irresponsible, incompetent, helpless, and dependent in proportion as it drops its own burdens. For a while, it is true, government appears to carry the additional load; and then it is discovered, little by little, that society, having little responsibility to bear for itself, is only breeding parasites and dependents and is no longer sending strong recruits from its own ranks into the government. And the government, on the other hand, being no better than the people who make it, sinks to the level of incompetency and helplessness of the very multitude that looks to it for help. [Applause.] Then follows the inevitable process of sloth, decay, corruption, and collapse, and another one of mankind's heroic attempts to work out for himself on this planet an exalted civilization is gathered to its own dust for archaeologists of after ages to explore and a few crumbling monuments for historians to write books about.

I believe this bill is economically unsound.

In the first place, it is one more instance in which we show our disregard for that which grieved the fathers who declared their independence of King George on the charge, among other things, that—he has erected a multitude of new offices and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out our substance.

[Applause.]

And here we are 145 years later still doing the very self-same thing to ourselves!

Here we have once more the familiar story of the Federal Government making a proposition to the States that, if they will raise a certain sum of money for a purpose, the Federal Government will match it with a similar sum—but this must be done under conditions that the Federal Government lays down, and the money must be spent subject to the approval of the Federal authorities.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I regret that I can not; I regret the seeming discourtesy.

Once in a while, maybe, there is some variation in the terms, as in this instance, but they all amount to the same thing in the end. They all amount to this:

First. The Federal Government has to spend more money and, therefore, as it has no money of its own that it makes for itself and its own uses (contrary to an apparently rather widespread mistaken popular notion), it has to raise more money by taxing the people of the several States. The States are hard put to it now to raise at home the money to pay their own legitimate expenses, and the counties and towns as well. And now the Federal Government is combing the same territory, taxing the same people over and again to raise its own extra money also. Where is it going to end?

Second. The States that are thrifty and up-to-date pay the great bulk of the taxes that go into the Federal Treasury at Washington, only to receive in the general redistribution under the terms of just such bills as this but a very small part of what they put into the common fund. Vermont, it has been said, pays about $32 into the Federal Treasury for every one she gets back. Whether these figures are accurate or not, they are near enough to it to illustrate the injustice that is done the State. But, under this vicious system, States that are backward or thriftless or unprogressive, or whatever it may be called, are encouraged to rely upon their thrifty sister Commonwealths for the money they ought to raise for themselves by and among their own people, because it is to be spent for their own benefit. And so much is this true that it is no secret here in Washington that this policy is openly advocated by various influences in those States in order that they may profit by it at the expense of their neighbors.

Third. Inasmuch as the Federal Government insists that no money shall be forthcoming or employed except under its own policy and general direction, it follows that the States little by little surrender to the bureaucrats at Washington the control of the work thus to be done within their own borders, and even change their own laws to comply with the regulations that come down from Washington in order to give the freer scope to the Federal administration of what amounts, after all, to their local affairs. Thus, persistently and ceaselessly, the Federal Government is sucking away from the States the powers of local self-government that belong to them of ancient right and appropriating those powers to itself to be administered by bureaus here in Washington. And that means, in turn, that armies of tax gatherers, agents of the law, inspectors, supervisors, overseers, and swarms of bureaucrats and their clerks descend from the Federal Government down upon the land, spy out the people's business or actually do it for them, and so, even as in the days of much-despised King George, "eat out our substance." Over and again, under this same old delusion of "getting something for nothing," the States have met the Federal proposition and lost just so much more of their original inheritance of the right to manage their own home concerns by doing it. Over and again has American Esau sold his birthright for a mess of pottage. [Applause.]

Where is all this to end? How can we square ourselves with our own knowledge and best judgment based upon that actual knowledge, with our own sense of public duty, and still keep saying to ourselves: "I will vote for just this one. This one shall not count," and still keep on piling up the score? Some day they will be counted, they will all be counted together; then we shall realize the cumulative mischief that the aggregate of all these little things has done; and then it will be too late. In the language of Scripture, these are, indeed, "the little foxes that spoil the vines."

There are presently opposed in the American world of civics two schools of thought. One adheres to the philosophy of the American fathers, that the security of our individual liberties rests in the maintenance of the greatest amount of local and home government that is consistent with national security and responsibility. It rests upon the time-proven fact that a popular government can be no stronger than the homes it comes out of; that the greatest practical amount of local self-government in a Republic like ours is a nursery and school for strong and sturdy citizenship and the reservoir of self-reliant and capable men and women experienced in responsibility from which it can constantly draw its own personnel and thus keep itself healthy and strong. Whereas a paternalistic government in time makes dependents of its people, weakens their moral fiber, causes them to be undisciplined in responsibility, and thus cuts off the supply of strong forces for the maintenance of the government at its very root. The other school is frankly paternalistic in government on the theory that, all men and women being partners in the State, it is the duty of the State to act as guardian of and for them in order to fit them for that partnership and then to fit them generally for the activities and duties of life and to father them through those activities and duties from the cradle to the grave.

It is only a step from the ultimate realizations of a paternalistic government to State socialism. Once paternalism is the established policy of government, through steadily intensifying degrees of State regulation we gradually develop the doctrine of State standardization of men and things. After which we shall be ripe for the open and avowed policy of raising or leveling all men and things to the compulsory State-fixed standard. And then State socialism is upon us at last.

We must choose between those two schools of thought, because we are at the parting of the ways. And just such propositions as this maternity bill itself emphasizes that sober fact.

It is all very well to argue that we have done other things in government that are of the same order as this measure. Two wrongs never did make one right. A bad precedent does not justify another like performance. It is true that our social order has become so complicated in some respects that society can no longer tolerate with safety all the individualism that once obtained of right. It is true that we have made experiments of a paternalistic character, perhaps some of which have become so incorporated into our system now that they are not easily, perhaps not wisely, to be uprooted. But in this particular measure, no matter how we gloss its phrases or simplify its apparent objective, we have opened the door to a train of measures and a line of policy that, once under way, will not in the very nature of things evolutionary come to an end until we have adopted a theory of State regulation and control that would make many friends of this bill gasp if it were called by its true name.

We may try to deceive ourselves now and then by writing sleek phrases into our laws, by miscalling things, perhaps, and by employing apt and alluring rhetorical devices under which the naked truth may masquerade for a time. We may keep on for a while, as we have been doing, setting up one after another the agencies of centralized and bureaucratic National Government, growing more and more paternalistic every day, and still think to lull ourselves into fancied security from the terrors of State socialism.

But it is the effect of these laws, not their titles, that stamps our public policy for what it really is.

And one of these days this country is going to wake up to the sober realization that for a long time back the legislative signboards have been misleading, and that America has actually left the straight and narrow path that the fathers laid out for it, and left it long ago, and is on the broad highway to all the ills of bureaucracy and the corruption that goes with it that those very same fathers fled from Europe to escape.

Back of this unpretentious, simple looking bill to-day are the agencies that for a long time have been persistently and insidiously working to incorporate into our American system of public policy in some degree and form or another, Government supervision of mothers; Government care and maintenance of infants; Government control of education; Government control of training for vocations; Government regulation of employment, the hours, holidays, wages, accident insurance, and all; Government insurance against unemployment; Government old-age pensions; and much more of the same kind and to the same end. Not all these agencies are working for all these things, to be sure, but collectively they serve the same purpose, and they expect never to cease their efforts until they get it.

And this is no mere idle charge. Many friends of this so-called maternity bill to-day would be amazed to see the forces that are eagerly awaiting its passage, ready to welcome it as one great accomplishment that will ultimately lead to more and greater realization of the dreams of the bolshevik and the soviet. Of course, the true American people that are behind this measure indignantly repudiate all community of interest with such forces. And they are honest about it, too. But whether or no they are innocently working to the very same end, just the same.

There are in this land to-day radicals of various degrees, from the mild parlor Socialist to the revolutionary and the red, who are determined to change the constitutional character and policy of the American Government. Some of them hope to do it peaceably and through popular education and the ballot box. The extremists are determined to attempt it by direct action and physical force at the first favorable opportunity. Meantime—and here is the pity of it—every change of policy along this same line now proffered that is introduced into the Government through the activities of often well-meaning but mistaken and misled theorists, whose loyalty to the constitutional principles is above suspicion, by just that much weakens the Government itself and prepares the way for the red. So long as the red is prevented from destroying the Government by his own physical assault, he is gratified enough to see its structure more and more breached and broken down because some part of his doctrines and philosophy are introduced into it by infiltration, and, strangely enough, on the part of its would-be friends at that. And thus the way is prepared to make easier the eventual destruction of government by the red and his physical force.

There was a Pharaoh once who ruled over a people whom at times he feared. It was this Pharaoh who sent forth instructions to the midwives of the land, and they may be read in Exodus 1:15-22. That was a pretty severe and autocratic enforcement of a maternity law, to be sure, and it happened a long time ago, and people think that such things are no longer possible. Of course they are not possible in this generation and in this land, and I do not want to be thought merely absurd in referring to it. And yet these same people might do well to look over into soviet Russia and see what has been done there in our recent day or, if they like, listen right here at home to the voices of those that preach the nationalization of the mother and her child, birth control, and various other similar devices and institutions. Government can do, it does do, mighty drastic things when it once gets under way with them.

I hope still to be a forward-looking man with fond expectations of the new and higher levels that social order will successively reach. I am not unmindful of the new color and the renewed warmth of beneficent concern for the public welfare that will be given to our public policy through the reinforcement of political influences by the great body of women voters and women participants in the activities of the Government, and know that much of lasting good may come of it.

I am not cast down in thought by occasional discouraging developments in our affairs, nor am I now lamenting a hopeless situation or terrifying myself with shadows.

But I can not bring myself to believe that the people of this country, could they be consulted home by home to-day, want this bill or anything like it to become a law of the land. I can not bring myself to believe that the families of America in the millions of homes, once they have analyzed the situation for themselves coolly and thoughtfully, want to embark this country upon the new policy indicated in this bill, with all the sinister possibilities that lie beyond its present text. I do not believe that the great body of the women, those mothers and daughters, sisters, sweethearts, and wives, that seldom raise their voices in public affairs, actually want this law put upon them and their hearthstones.

I fervently believe that the home, with its sacred domestic obligations, is still the bulwark of American civilization and social order, and I can not bring myself to help in its surrender to eventual control in any degree by politicians and bureaucrats in Washington.

If a great and benevolent work in educating any part of the women and the households of this country in the responsibilities of maternity should be undertaken anywhere at all, then let it be done in the home, by the home, and by the community of homes [applause], sister ministering to sister, neighbor to neighbor, and friend to friend, in whatever concerted action or perhaps organized effort may be necessary, perhaps eventually in some degree officially countenanced by the home State, but always in that sweet sympathetic understanding of united womanhood that has in all time mothered the race.

Let us not, in any event, decree here and now that this most holy function of womanhood and the home shall be placed under any possible menace of hereafter passing under the scrutiny and regulation of that soulless corporation that we call the State and become the mere professional duty of distant strangers, working in a national political bureau for their daily hire.

For my part I do not believe that the women of my plucky little State of Vermont are yet ready to admit that our social order has so far broken down that they must cry out to Washington for help in the care and safeguarding of maternity and infancy in the homes that lie among our old green hills and valleys, where for nearly two centuries the flower of American manhood and womanhood has been bred and reared by their ancestors and themselves. I can not make myself believe that the women of the Commonwealth of Vermont, whose noble pioneer mothers once upon a time went with their sturdy husbands into the wilderness and made a government for themselves, are now willing to confess that they have fallen so far from the high estate of their grand dames that they, in their day, must depend upon that Government for money and counsel in order to continue to rear generations of Green Mountain patriots. [Prolonged applause.]

(During the delivery of the foregoing remarks Mr. GREENE of Vermont was granted 13 minutes' additional time.)

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry as to the time the debate shall run this evening?

Mr. KINDRED. I may answer the gentleman's question by saying that I do not intend to allot any more time after the conclusion of the speech of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL]. I shall have but seven minutes' time, and I shall reserve it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill, although called a maternity bill, does not appropriate one cent for any child or any mother in this country. This bill authorizes the appropriation for expenditure during the next five years of $7,680,000 for investigation and instruction as to matters relating to maternity.

I have listened with a very great deal of interest to the statement of the chairman of the committee [Mr. WINSLOW], and that statement was such a fair statement of this particular bill that the reasons set forth in that statement are sufficient basis for my intention to vote against this bill. I think that this House should vote against this bill for four reasons. In the first place, the bill appropriates $7,680,000 out of the Public Treasury, when we, every one of us, are pledged to the strictest national economy.

There is no politics in this bill in the sense of Democratic or Republican politics, but every one of us has been seen by various members of our district. We have been told that if we voted against a bill which was labeled a "maternity bill," that every woman in our district would be against us. But I say to you, gentlemen, that I believe that the rank and file of the mothers and to-be mothers of this country are against this form of bill. [Applause.]

I know that those of us who propose to vote against this bill must defend our vote, and I for one shall welcome the opportunity to defend my vote against this bill, because not only is this bill ultra extravagant, not only is it an entering wedge for enormous millions to be expended in the future, but

It is an absolute departure from the theory upon which the Federal Constitution and the Federal Government were inaugurated. This Nation was formed for general national defense and for definite purposes set forth in the Constitution concerning the general welfare of all the States.

It was perfectly right and it is perfectly right that the State of Maryland should be taxed in order to provide for the general defense of this country, the general post office, or other constitutional matters, but it is not right that the State of Maryland—and it was not the intention of the State of Maryland when it signed the Constitution—should be taxed in order that such taxes might be divided up among the States and divided up for matters not described in the Constitution. It was not the purpose of the State of Maryland in coming into this Union that it should pay into the Federal Treasury sums to be expended for purely individual State matters, because, my friends, if there ever was an issue that is a local issue it is the issue of health and police. The Federal Government by such bills as this is attempting to take away the duties of the States. If we go on at this rate we shall absolutely do away with the powers of the State and local governments and center everything in the Federal Government.

Take an illustration: There is not a gentleman in this House who is not against common, ordinary murder. There is not a gentleman who would not laugh if I said, "Are you against murder?" But, I ask you, have we come to the point where we could pass a law in this House against common murder, such law providing penalties and providing that the Federal Government should take charge of prosecutions for murder in all the States? I submit, gentlemen, such a bill would be on the same principle as this. In other words, we are all against murder; but I do not believe that the radical element in this House, irrespective of their views of the Constitution, have yet come to the point where they are in favor of the Federal Government taking over all the remaining police powers of the States.

Now, let us look for one minute to what this bill does. The State of Maryland contributes 1.508 per cent of the total taxes of this Nation. The State of Alabama contributes 0.340 per cent. The State of Georgia contributes 0.801 per cent of the total taxes of this Nation. This is not a bill for the general welfare. It is a bill for distribution by the Federal Government of money from the Federal coffers. Consider the contribution to the Federal Government made by Alabama, Maryland, and Georgia and look what they, respectively, get out of it under this bill. I only take these States for illustration. I have no objection to Alabama or Georgia getting its just due, but I say from the point of view of Maryland it is unwise for its Representatives to vote for this bill. Under this bill Maryland gets $14,777, while Alabama will get $20,837 and Georgia $24,531. In the same way Mississippi gets $17,077 and contributes only 0.218 per cent to the Federal Treasury. Do not mistake me, for the purposes for which the Government was organized it makes no difference what each individual State contributes; but this is not for the general welfare; it is not for the common defense; it is simply a distribution of money to the various States to help in what certain cities and villages are doing at the present time, or should be doing, with thorough efficiency. Maryland should spend its money at home.

We can not afford to spend the money now, because both sides of this House are pledged by their national platforms to economy. In the second place, we are not voting in this bill for any definite plan. Under section 8, page 12, we are voting for unknown plans, to be submitted later on by the individual States. I have heard in the House so much about Congress ceding its rights and about letting other agencies do the work that Congress should do that I ask if you could have a greater cession of rights than for Congress to pass a blanket bill by which each of the 48 States shall bring in a separate plan organizing investigations and Chautauqua parties for training the mothers of this Nation.

We are all sincerely for proper measures to protect the American people. There is no politics in this bill, and no attempt to make partisan politics, but at least this bill is of doubtful constitutionality, and I submit as a third objection to it that whether it is technically so or not, it is against the Constitution, which gave the Federal Government definite rights and reserved for the States certain rights. Go back and read the Federalist. I submit to you that if such a proposition had been made to the various States they would not have gone into the Federal Union.

Now, in regard to the last point. This bill provides for the organization of Federal investigators—I do not call them Federal spies—but for Federal investigators to go all over the country, but it does not give the individual mother or the separate child a penny. When you vote for this bill you must not vote under that misapprehension. I said to-day that I was particularly interested in this bill because the people of my district were against it. I rely on the individual canvass of mothers more than I do upon certain women who take prominent parts as leaders. I want to say to you that the Johns Hopkins Hospital is situated in my district. From one of its heads, the famous Dr. Howland, in a report to your committee here, you will find the opposition of surgeons which he voices, and I will ask unanimous consent that I may incorporate the letter from Dr. Howland which appears on page 269 of the hearings:

THE JOHNS HOPKINS HOSPITAL.

[Winford H. Smith, M. D., director; William S. Halstead, M. D., surgeon in chief; William S. Thayer, M. D., physician in chief; J. Whitridge Williams, M. D., obstetrician in chief; John Howland, M. D., pediatrician in chief; Adolf Mayer, M. D., psychiatrist in chief; William G. MacCallum, M. D., pathologist.]

JULY 12, 1921.

Hon. SAMUEL E. WINSLOW,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WINSLOW: Your courteous invitation to appear before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives with reference to the consideration of the Sheppard-Towner bill, H. R. 2366, has been received. I am sorry that illness will prevent me from doing so. May I, however, state briefly my objections to the bill?

In the first place, I am unwilling to believe that such emergency exists as has been claimed regarding maternal care in this country, and I am quite sure from considerable experience with statistics that there is no basis for the statement that the United States stands seventeenth in maternal death rate. Even civilized countries have not sufficiently accurate statistics to enable anyone to make a definite statement such as this.

I do not believe that the way to improve health matters in States, except those that have a distinctly national or interstate application, is by Federal supervision or control. Public-health work depends upon enlightened local interest. It can not be improved by influence directed from a distance.

If such work as the Sheppard-Towner bill provides is to be undertaken, it should be undertaken by the United States Public Health Service and not by a subdepartment of the Department of Labor. Indeed, it appears peculiar to most physicians who are interested in work for the benefit of children that the care of children should be a function of the Department of Labor. The work is now in improper surroundings. To increase and expand the work of the Children's Bureau where it now is only to make matters worse.

Finally and chiefly I am opposed to the bill because I am opposed to the granting of subsidies to States by the Federal Government for work which is purely local in the States. It is to my mind an unsound financial policy and a dangerous step toward the centralization in Washington of matters which properly belong to the States themselves.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN HOWLAND.

Gentlemen, I do not like to rise here on this question after it has been so fully discussed but for the reasons which I have given I feel that I must vote against this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, I want to say that I, for one, do not agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] when he insinuated that every Member of Congress who is going to vote for this measure is moved to do so for political purposes. I want to say that I am moved to vote for this measure from the standpoint of principle, because I believe it is a bill that will do much toward the preservation of the human race. I fully realize that I can not say anything here this afternoon that will change the vote of one Member of this House, but, as a member of the committee that had this bill under consideration, I do at this time for just a few moments want to express my views upon it.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the bill which we are considering to-day, known as the Sheppard-Towner maternity and infancy bill, has attracted much attention throughout the country, because of what has been said and written about it. Let us consider for a few moments what it does and does not do and the reasons for its enactment into law.

By passing this bill Congress goes on record as indicating an interest in the welfare of the mothers and children of our Nation and in the future generations which in the natural course of events will fall heir to our country. Surely it is of the greatest importance that the children of to-day shall be strong, healthy, sturdy men and women of to-morrow. To call the provisions of this bill radical and revolutionary is absurd unless we would call all progressive, forward-looking legislation radical and revolutionary.

AIDS MOTHERS AND CHILDREN.

The Sheppard-Towner maternity and infancy bill does this, and nothing more than this: It provides that the Federal Government may stimulate, encourage, and aid the several States of the Union in promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy if the several States themselves desire to do so.

For many years the Federal Government has aided in the protection and development of crops and live stock. Does anyone dare say that the protection and development of the human race itself is not infinitely more important? If it is socialistic for the Federal Government to encourage and aid in the protection of maternity and infancy, then it is equally socialistic for the Government to aid in the protection of the cotton crop against the boll weevil and of the farmers' swine against hog cholera. Does anyone argue that cotton and pigs are more important than babies?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. In furnishing money to aid in the propagation of cotton, however, we do not study to see which State furnishes the most money. Those States that have no cotton whatever contribute to the money that goes to help cotton.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I am glad the gentleman from Indiana has made that point.

SMALL SUM APPROPRIATED.

To those who would claim that our Federal Treasury and our taxpayers can not afford to spend the money which the maternity and infancy bill proposes to appropriate I need only say that many times the amount appropriated in the maternity bill has been expended by the Government each year through the Department of Agriculture for the encouragement and protection of crops and domestic animals; and, furthermore, we have at last established a budget system to control the expenditure of the Federal funds. It is the duty of the Budget Commissioner to determine definitely what the Federal income is going to be for the coming fiscal year and also what the needs of the various Government activities will be, and make recommendation to Congress accordingly. By this method we expect to be able to control economically and equitably the relative financial outlays of the Government for all purposes, including the small amount which it is proposed to appropriate in this bill.

The Sheppard-Towner bill, as it has been reported to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I have the honor to be a member, appropriates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, the sum of $480,000, to be distributed in amounts of $10,000 to each State. For each subsequent year for five years each State will get $5,000 under the provisions of this bill. In addition provision is made for the expenditure of not more than $1,000,000 a year for the next five years, to be distributed among the various States according to population whenever these States offer to match each dollar from the Federal Government with a dollar from their own funds. According to this bill, the greatest possible amount that the United States Government can spend for the aid and protection of maternity and infancy during the next five years is $6,200,000.

CHILDREN'S BUREAU ADMINISTERS LAW.

The administration of the law is placed by the bill under the control of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, and a board of maternity and infancy hygiene, consisting of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education, is created to have advisory supervision. The bill provides that all positions in the Government service made necessary by the law shall be filled under the civil-service regulations, and that the cost of supervision by the bureau shall be not more than $50,000 a year. This amount is included in the total appropriation provided in the bill.

The bill states specifically that no agent, Federal or States, acting under its authority, may enter any home unless it is the desire of the mother or parents that the agent do so. It is also specifically provided that nothing in the bill shall limit the power or control of parents over their children in any way. In other words, there is nothing in the entire bill of a compulsory nature or which forces medical attention upon anyone, despite the misleading statements which have been made by opponents of the measure.

I want to say at this time that there is a propaganda going all over this country which is absolutely misrepresenting the provisions of this bill. In the last two days I have received many letters from the good women of my district protesting against the passage of this bill because they have been informed, by the opponents of this measure that if this bill becomes a law, no child will be permitted to be born in the mother's own home, but that the Federal authorities will take supervision over every maternity case and will bring every expectant mother to a Federal hospital where she may give birth to her child. That is the propaganda that is going all over this country, being sent out by the opponents of this measure.

GREAT NEED OF AID.

Let us examine for a moment the reason why those interested believe that this law is desirable and necessary for the welfare and benefit of the mothers and children and of the Nation as a whole. Evidence presented to our committee showed that in a single year in this country 23,000 mothers died in childbirth, that 250,000 infants died under 1 year of age, and that most of these deaths were preventable. It is stated with authority that it is safer to be a mother in 17 important foreign countries than it is in the United States, and that babies have a better chance to live in 10 foreign countries than in our own.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman give the authority for that statement?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. That statement was made by some of the very prominent people who appeared before our committee in behalf of this measure.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman says it was stated with authority.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. These facts were stated with authority. I can not just remember the people's names, but the hearings will show.

Mr. BARKLEY. The statement was made before the committee, I think, by Dr. Van Ingen, who is connected with Johns Hopkins University, and who I think is at the head of the obstetrical department, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. And that statement is based upon the report of the Bureau of Census of the United States and of all the available governmental authority.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman has stated very clearly and succinctly what the bill does not do. May I ask the gentleman just what will be done under the bill?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I am coming to that in a moment, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is it not an axiomatic fact in sociology that with increasing civilization and higher levels and standards of civilization the birth rate decreases?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I am not an authority upon that.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have the information which I think the gentleman desires. The information upon which he made the statement referred to a moment ago was based upon the statements of Dr. Philip Van Ingen, clinical professor of the diseases of children, College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University, New York City; Miss Julia Lathrop, former chief of the Children's Bureau in the Labor Department; Dr. S. Josephine Baker, director of child hygiene division, New York City board of health; and William Travis Howard, dean of the department of vital statistics of Johns Hopkins University.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman inform us what he means by its being safer to be a mother in 17 foreign countries than in the United States? I suppose that includes Russia.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it means this, that in 17 other countries the number of deaths of mothers during the period of maternity and childbirth is far below the number of deaths from the same cause in our own country.

Mr. WALSH. Proportionately?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I still further ask the gentleman if he does not associate with that the proposition I put to him a moment ago. It is an undisputed fact in sociology, according to the study of the races of man generally, that with increasing civilization and all that civilization brings the birth rate decreases, and we certainly have a superior civilization on this continent to pretty close to 17 other countries, have we not?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I would say this: That in many of these countries where the death rate of mothers at childbirth and the death rate of the children born is less than it is in the United States, they have provided such legislation as we are presenting to the House to-day.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I will.

Mr. WALSH. I do not like to interrupt the very interesting statement the gentleman is making.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that there is not a foreign country, with the possible exception of Germany, that keeps a birth rate and death rate with the accuracy which is done in the United States, with the exception of perhaps some institutions that are maintained abroad?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I can not answer that question.

Mr. LONDON. If the gentleman will permit, as a matter of fact we have the rates of birth in only 26 States of the United States.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. How do they figure the rate of the entire United States, then?

Mr. LONDON. We have no exact data relating to the whole United States, but they take into consideration those States which do maintain records of births.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And apply it as an average?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Would you take the average of New York State as the the average of New England?

Mr. LONDON. The most remarkable thing is that New York bears up well with the other States that do maintain a system of registration of births. The climate is exceptionally good in New York, the soil is good in New York, and it has a number of very intelligent men.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In New York City?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. Does not the gentleman from Vermont think it would be a good idea to resolve the doubt in favor of the mothers and babies?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not resolve doubts in that way.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I shall only take a few more minutes, and I would like to proceed at this time.

It was pointed out that, due to ignorance, poverty, and other causes, not only in congested centers of population but also in isolated rural localities the loss of life and suffering among mothers and helpless babes has been terrific. It is a startling and disgraceful fact that in this enlightened age and in this rich country more women between the ages of 15 and 45 lose their lives from conditions connected with childbirth than from any other cause except tuberculosis. It is not necessary to go into details regarding present conditions, but it should be stated that wherever this class of welfare work is now being conducted it has resulted to great benefit. Miss Fox, of the American Red Cross, said:

Wherever there is a public-health nurse provided and her presence in town or country becomes known, she is immediately surrounded by women of that territory, begging and imploring her to come to their homes and help them in their problems. The nurses will tell you they are distressed beyond measure because there are so few of them and they have such large territories to cover that they can not possibly at present respond to all the demands made upon them.

MISS LATHROP'S VIEWS.

Miss Julia Lathrop, Chief of the Children's Bureau, who has made a study of the situation and conditions, and is recognized as an authority on the subject, said:

The bill is designed to avoid an obnoxious governmental authority. It respects the rights and duties of the State and requires no rigid control of their appropriations. But experience shows that there should be a central source affording to the different States, when they make their plans, the best experience of all of the other States and of the world, and a central body competent to assure taxpayers and the special beneficiaries of the measure that its spirit is effectively carried out and that intelligent use is made of every dollar.

The actual public-health nursing anticipated under the bill would be done by local employees and not by the Federal Government. The percentage of the appropriation that may be spent for administrative purposes by the Federal Government can not exceed 5 per cent, and at least 95 per cent must be allotted to the States.

The bill does not contemplate the creation of new machinery in the States. It is its purpose to have the work done in the States by State child-hygiene or child-welfare divisions, and 35 of the 48 States already have such divisions, most of them under the State boards of health.

I disagree with my good friend from Maryland [Col. HILL] when he said that he believed most of the women of this country were against this bill.

WOMEN KNOW THE NEED.

This bill is undoubtedly being enacted in response to the wishes of the newly enfranchised women of the country. It is the first measure to be passed by Congress which women as a whole have specially supported. And it is to their great credit that they should support such a law, because its purpose and object must be near and dear to the heart of all womanhood. For all true women earnestly wish to see the sufferings of their sisters relieved and want to place their protecting arms around the helpless little children. Women know far, far better than men what women must undergo and what are the real needs of mothers and infants.

And so practically every woman's organization in the country, regardless of party, race, or creed, is enlisted in support of this bill to authorize the United States Government to extend a helping hand to mothers and children.

And I want to ask the gentleman from Maryland [Col. HILL] to listen to what I am going to say now relative to the question as to whether or not the women of our country are supporting this bill. Among those on record in favor of this legislation are the General Federation of Women's clubs, the National Congress of Mothers, the Republican and Democratic Women's National Committees, Daughters of the American Revolution, the National League of Women Voters, the National W. C. T. U., Y. W. C. A., Council of Jewish Women, college women, business women, and working women. Added to their voices comes the indorsements from governors of 34 States of the Union and the resolution of hearty approval adopted by the last Methodist general conference.

Just a word about the opposition. I believe most of it comes from misunderstanding and misrepresentation. A few conservative women have been misled as to the provisions and purposes of the bill. I understand that the Woman's Antisuffrage Association is against the bill, but I am sure all their fears and misgivings are groundless.

The leader of the Woman's Antisuffrage Association, who comes from the same State as our good friend from Maryland [Col. HILL], who appeared before our committee voiced her most vigorous protest against the passage of this bill. For I believe that the enactment of this bill into law will be a decided step toward the better recognition by the Federal Government of the human needs of our people of this generation and those who are to follow.

Mr. WINSLOW. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Ohio in his time. Would the gentleman be willing to state again the reference he made as to the indorsement by governors of this bill?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I think the chairman of the committee will recall, if the chairman does not I am sure some other members of the committee will, that the testimony was presented before our committee where the governors, and you will find it in the hearings, I am quite sure, in the last session of Congress.

Mr. WINSLOW. In the last session of Congress, but not on this bill?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Where the governors of 34 of the States of this Union had indorsed the provisions of this bill, and heartily approved the same.

Mr. WINSLOW. I just wanted to get it right so we will be fairly right. Does not the gentleman mean to refer to the consideration of the bill taken up in the preceding Congress?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Well, I do, but the principle is the same. The principle that was involved in the bill which was reported at the last session of the Congress does not differ in any way, shape, or form from this.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman if both bills were not the Sheppard-Towner bill?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes; and in principle and purpose both bills do not differ in any respect.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman find among the list of indorsers the name of Rose Pastor Stokes and Victor Berger?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I do not.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman will find they have worked for it.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. So far as I know from my personal knowledge, there has never been at any time any statement made before the committee indicating that Victor Berger or Rose Pastor Stokes have indorsed this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, there are a lot of people in the country die of old age each year. Is the gentleman in favor of the Government stepping in and helping to stimulate the activities of the States in combating the death rate?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts on general principles I am opposed to the Federal Government going into paternalism, but I do not consider this bill in any way, shape, or form paternalistic. I believe it is a step on the part of the Federal Government to aid the mothers and the children of our country, and, after all, these are the ones we have to look forward to if we are going to be a great nation of people and contribute our part to a Christian civilization and in trying to make the world a better place in which to live.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 7108. An act authorizing a per capita payment to the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota from their tribal funds held in trust by the United States;

H. R. 8298. An act to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to limitations in criminal cases;

H. R. 7051. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to execute deeds of reconveyance for certain lands in the city of Mount Pleasant, Isabella County, Mich.;

H. R. 8442. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved March 12, 1914, as amended; and

H. R. 2232. An act in reference to a national military park on the plains of Chalmette, below the city of New Orleans.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks the letter of Dr. Howland to which I referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to include in his remarks the letter to which he refers. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman withhold that request for a moment?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by placing therein resolutions passed by the National Women's Council at Philadelphia.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for that purpose?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes; I yield for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The following are the resolutions referred to:

WOMEN ASSAIL CIGARETTES IN FEMININE LIPS—SOCIETY DAMES AND 60-YEAR-OLD "PILL"-PUFFING "VAMPS" TARGET AT PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, November 17.

Bitter criticism of the sex freedom which permits women to smoke was made at yesterday's meeting of the National Council of Women when their resolution committee submitted a measure asking for more strict enforcement of laws forbidding sale of tobacco to minors.

Another clause in this resolution, later unanimously passed by the council, representing 10,000,000 women of the Nation, asked for the promotion of better dress for women as an influence on their morals and health.

"One sees beautiful young women in hotel dining rooms, nonchalantly lighting cigarettes and as nonchalantly exhaling," Mrs. Frances E. Burns, of St. Louis, Mich., said when the resolution was offered for action.

"It is a most deplorable condition which detracts from womanly appeal, and is in addition injurious to the health. Smoking is not confined to young and single women, but also to prospective mothers, who by their addiction to the tobacco habit injure the health of the unborn child. And many mothers continue smoking after birth of the baby, injuring the child more."

"Enforcement of laws prohibiting sale of tobacco to minors should not be confined to men but extended to women. I am astounded and too full to express my opinion of the fact that a transcontinental railroad recently opened smoking compartments exclusively for the use of women."

Mrs. Burns related how, when she paid a recent visit to Louisville, she was horrified to see young women with cigarettes between their lips driving their automobiles through the streets.

"Even more disgusting than smoking among young women," Dr. K. Walter Barrett, of Alexandria, Va., added, "is to see a 60-year-old vamp smoking and cast languishing glances at some young fellow." At the conclusion of Dr. Barrett's remarks the resolution was passed without a dissenting vote.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 1039, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, if possible I would like to have an arrangement for limiting the time for general debate to-morrow, and for the control of that time. If it would be agreeable, and we could get unanimous consent, I would suggest that we extend the time beyond what has already been allotted by four hours, half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the other half by the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. And I make the further request that we adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill S. 1039 be limited to four hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. WINSLOW. Four hours in addition to the time already allotted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman if it is his purpose to vote on this bill before 8 o'clock to-morrow evening?

Mr. WINSLOW. I hope so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts included the 11 o'clock meeting arrangement in his request?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill S. 1039 be limited to four hours in addition to the time already allotted, and that when the House adjourns this evening it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the assurance that I shall have at least 20 minutes. So much has been said about my having made converts I want to refute that statement.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a question? I understand the time is to be allotted to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the chairman of the committee, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. WINSLOW. That was included in the motion.

Mr. RAKER. Is there any way that I can have 15 minutes in favor of this bill from either side?

Mr. WINSLOW. I hope so.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman give me seven minutes and a half—

Mr. WINSLOW. I would not like to make an agreement like that contingent on the request to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. It is like trading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the general debate on the bill S. 1039 continue for four hours in addition to the time already allotted, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and that when the House adjourns this evening it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Saturday, November 19, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9110) granting a pension to William N. Hupp; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 9118) granting an increase of pension to John M. Jeans; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. A bill (H. R. 9198) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to pension soldiers and sailors of the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, and the China relief expedition," approved June 5, 1920; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RAKER. A bill (H. R. 9199) to defer the time for payment of grazing fees for the use of national forests during the calendar year 1921; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. KLINE of New York: A bill (H. R. 9200) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept certain land at Rockaway Beach, Long Island, N. Y., for aviation and other naval purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 9201) to regulate divorces in the Canal Zone; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9202) to amend sections 7, 8, and 9 of the Panama Canal act and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DOWELL: A bill (H. R. 9203) granting a pension to Lizzie Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 9204) granting a pension to Theresa L. Matthewson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 9205) granting a pension to Mary E. Sargent; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MEAD: A bill (H. R. 9206) granting an increase of pension to Fred A. Stout; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEWTON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 9207) for the relief of Ellen Moore; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PARRISH: A bill (H. R. 9208) granting a pension to Lewis H. Tubbs, jr.; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SCOTT of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 9209) granting a pension to Sam Wells; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WINGO: A bill (H. R. 9210) granting a pension to Risseller Everhart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9211) granting a pension to Isaac Pierce; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

3100. By Mr. CRAMTON: Petition of George Newberry and other residents of the seventh district of Michigan, protesting against the passage of House bill 4388; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

3101. Also, resolution of the Sebewaing Woman's Club, of Sebewaing, Mich., urging a comprehensive and effective program of disarmament without delay; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3102. By Mr. FULLER: Petition of the International Association of Machinists, opposing section 8 of the reclassification bill; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

3103. By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: Petition of Woman's Home Missionary Society of Cambridge, Md.; Social Service Club of Baltimore, Md.; Susquehanna Council, No. 8, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, Port Deposit, Md.; and Victory Council, No. 10, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, Athel, Md., praying for reduction in armament; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3104. By Mr. KETCHAM: Petition of the Cassopolis Woman's Club, of Cassopolis, Mich., favoring limitation of armaments; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3105. Also, petition of 12 members of the Disciples of Christ, of Glendora, Mich., urging reduction of naval program and some form of international cooperation for prevention of war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3106. Also, petition of the Colon Country Club, of Colon, Mich., representing 22 members, favoring limitation of armaments; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3107. Also, petition of the Ganges Home Club, of Fennville, Mich., favoring limitation of armaments; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3108. Also, petition of the Church of the Brethren of Woodland, Mich., favoring disarmament; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3109. Also, petition of Methodist Episcopal Church of Hastings, Mich., consisting of 850 members, favoring the reduction of armament by agreement; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3110. Also, petition of First Baptist Church of Sturgis, Mich., consisting of 195 members, favoring the limitation of armament; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3111. Also, petition of Benton Harbor Federation of Women's Clubs, favoring limitation of armaments; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3112. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of A. I. Namm & Son, Brooklyn, N. Y.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3113. Also, petition of American committee on Cuban emergency, New York City; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3114. By Mr. MacGREGOR: Resolution adopted by the committee of management of the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., most heartily indorsing the steps taken at Washington for the universal reduction of armaments; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3115. Also, resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Ellicott Drug Co. heartily indorsing the steps taken at Washington for the universal reduction of armaments; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3116. By Mr. MONTOYA: Petition of residents of Magdalena, N. Mex., asking the United States Government to extend relief and protection to the imperiled people of the Near East; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3117. Also, resolution of the board of directors of the chamber of commerce, Clovis, N. Mex., protesting against section 402, Fordney tariff bill, known as the American valuation plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3118. By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: Resolution adopted by the chamber of commerce, Moscow, Idaho, urging enactment of the French-Capper truth in fabric bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3119. By Mr. SNYDER: Petition of members of the Congregational Church, Camden, N. Y., and the Methodist Episcopal Church, Hinckley, N. Y., and the Methodist Episcopal Church, Prospect, N. Y., against legalizing the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3120. Also, petition of L. R. Steel Service Corporation, of Utica, against the enactment of the so-called maternity bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3121. By Mr. SPEAKS: Papers to accompany House bill 9177, granting an increase of pension to Harriet Gale; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

3122. By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition of American Society of Agronomy, in support of House bill 5230; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3123. By Mr. YOUNG: Memorial of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Barton, N. Dak., remonstrating against the ruling of the Treasury Department permitting the sale of beer by druggists; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3124. Also, petition of the Keeping-Up Club, of Monango, N. Dak., protesting against the imposition of a tax on musical instruments; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3125. Also, memorial of sundry citizens of Van Hook, N. Dak., remonstrating against the imposition of a sales tax on musical instruments; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3126. Also, memorial of sundry citizens of the State of North Dakota, remonstrating against the proposed tax on medicine; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3127. Also, resolution of the Bismarck Commercial Club, of Bismarck, N. Dak., favoring the passage of the so-called French-Capper truth in fabric bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, November 19, 1921.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, November 16, 1921.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	King	Page	Sterling
Brandegee	Ladd	Penrose	Trammell
Curtis	McCumber	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	McNary	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
France	Nelson	Robinson	Williams
Gooding	Norbeck	Sheppard	Willis
Harris	Norris	Smith
Harrison	Oddie	Smoot
Heflin	Overman	Spencer

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] on official business. I also announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained at a committee meeting.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] are absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] is absent on account of the death of his wife's mother, Mrs. Marcus A. Hanna.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. TOWNSEND answered to his name when called.

Mr. CARAWAY, Mr. KEYES, Mr. BURSUM, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. McLEAN, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. KENYON, Mr. ERNST, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. WARREN, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. NICHOLSON, and Mr. WATSON of Indiana entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators—a quorum—are present.

ALLEGED PREFERENCES TO FOREIGN VESSELS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution 169, copies of all agreements on file with the commission between railroads in the United States and steamship lines or companies operating from ports of the United States in the foreign trade, and a statement showing the quantity and kind of traffic received from and delivered to steamship lines engaged in foreign commerce by the railways named during the year ended December 31, 1920, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CIVILIAN AERONAUTICS IN COMMERCE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution adopted by the American Legion relative to civilian aeronautics in interstate and foreign commerce.

Mr. SMITH. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Resolution.

Whereas aeronautics have occupied the attention of the American Legion since its first meeting;

Whereas it is the sense of this convention that national aeronautics are becoming increasingly important to the Nation at large, both by reasons of national defense and transportation; and

Whereas the American Legion has twice before, viz, in its first and second annual conventions, adopted resolutions indorsing a proposed separate department of aeronautics in the National Government; and

Whereas it is now apparent, because of the increased development of civilian aerial transport as apart from the various bureaus of the Federal Government now dealing with aeronautics, that it is incumbent upon the National Government to provide for the regulation of this civilian transport and maintain the proper supervision over civilian aerial activities, chiefly because these civilian aerial activities are by nature an integral unit of the national defense, meaning reserve aviation; and

Whereas it is apparent that the heads of the Federal Government, chiefs of all bureaus dealing with aviation, the civilian organizations and clubs are unanimous in their support of a proposed law, viz, Senate bill No. 2448—introduced in the Senate of the United States August 22, 1921—creating a bureau of civilian aeronautics in the Department of Commerce to encourage and regulate the operation of civilian aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Legion, in convention assembled, recommends the early and favorable consideration on the part of both Houses of Congress of the above-mentioned bill; be it further

Resolved, That the national legislative committee be instructed to urge such immediate action in Congress as upon investigation it may deem advisable; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be prepared and forwarded to the Clerks of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, and to the Secretary of Commerce.

MICHIGAN SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. CURTIS. May we have the regular order, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is Senate resolution 172.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 172) declaring Truman H. Newberry to be a duly elected Senator from the State of Michigan.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, after the very strenuous efforts of the majority to force a night session on the first day this resolution was taken up, with the intention, as I am advised, to force it to a vote during that night if possible, I can not help observing that this morning, when we meet at 10 o'clock in order to help expedite its consideration, we are obliged to wait 46 minutes before a quorum is obtained.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that I agree with every word the Senator has said. There is no justification for what has occurred this morning. A quorum should have been here in time, and it should have been possible for the Senator from Ohio to go on 40 minutes ago.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There was no justification for fixing 10 o'clock as the hour to meet.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senate will recall, probably, that I predicted that if the Senate recessed to meet at 10 o'clock, there would not be a quorum here, and that we would not get to work before 11 o'clock. It is now 9 minutes to 11.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, when I recall that the title of a sitting Member to his seat is questioned, a title to a seat in which every sitting Member takes a pride, that Senators should refrain from reading the RECORD, refrain from reading the reports, in part, and absent themselves so that they may not hear the arguments, I do know that they are not free from blame.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], who opened the argument for Senator Newberry, has not yet published his speech in the RECORD so that anyone may read it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, my remarks have gone into the RECORD, although I have not had the time to revise the transcript. I shall hope to do it at a later day; but I was anxious that Senators who were not here might have the opportunity of reading what I said, and for that reason my remarks have been printed without any revision at all by me.

Mr. President, on yesterday I devoted a large part of the time to a discussion of the evidence contained in the record. I felt impelled to do that in order that Senators and the country might know what we believe to be the facts. I have transgressed a rule which I have set for myself, not to deal in prolonged debate ordinarily, but I felt that the circumstances in this case justified what I did. I expect to conclude shortly.

On yesterday and the day before I discussed Senator Newberry's connection with his campaign. Under the theory upon which this case has been tried by those representing the majority, Senator Newberry had nothing whatsoever to do with his campaign committee; they say that it was a committee of his friends voluntarily organized, and that he had nothing to do with it.

On the part of the minority I think I have shown that Mr. Newberry himself was the first man to suggest his candidacy. I speak from memory, after having read 2,000 pages of this record and the briefs, but I think that except for his own statements there is not an utterance in this record which points out that a single elector of Michigan asked him to be a candidate. Even his closest business associate, the chairman of his committee, was seemingly surprised when Mr. Newberry said to him, "My friends are urging me to be a candidate for the senatorship," and Mr. Templeton replied, "I had not heard of it."

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask the Senator to yield, because I know he does not want to make an error.

Mr. POMERENE. I want to be corrected if I have made any mistake.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator will look at the record, page 479, he will find that the then acting governor, as well as Mr. Andrews and a number of others, took up the matter first, and they were the ones who suggested it to Mr. Newberry.

Mr. POMERENE. Who testified to that?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. Andrews was the man who testified to it, and the Senator will find his testimony on page 479.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well, I stand corrected; but with that correction I submit there was no general call to Mr. Newberry to surrender his position in the Navy or his position in private life.

Mr. President, I think I have shown conclusively that there was not an important step taken by this committee, the organization of which Mr. Newberry supervised and approved, with which he was not familiar.

They were going to New York repeatedly to confer with him. He was writing to them and wiring them constantly making one suggestion after another. He knew of the publicity. He knew of the expenses which would be involved in the campaign. His funds were checked over into his brother's account and then into the campaign committee's accounts. He knew that this campaign could not be conducted without a large expenditure of money, and it all came from Newberry and his brothers and their allied family interests.

He—and when I say "he" I mean Truman H. Newberry—fairly gloated over the fact that one man at least who was competing for this nomination did not have the money with which to conduct the same kind of a campaign that he was conducting. Let me read from one of his letters. I refer to a letter contained in the bill of exceptions, beginning on page 880 and ending on page 881, written by Mr. Newberry to Mr. King, whom he addresses as "My dear Paul." I read one paragraph. It will be remembered that Gov. Osborn was one of the candidates for that nomination. He was known throughout Michigan. He had a large following, but he did not have the money that was necessary to go up against a man like Mr. Newberry, with the extravagant financial backing that he had. In his letter to "My dear Paul" he said:

There is much more information about Osborn's present plight. I will tell you when I see you. The statement that he is short of ammunition is an absolute fact.

The statement that Gov. Osborn, a candidate for the United States Senate, is short of ammunition is an established fact. No danger to the campaign of Mr. Newberry from that source. There is more about it. "I will tell you when I see you."

As bearing upon this, a good deal has been said about the fact that there have been no criminal prosecutions. Oh, this was not a fight which was inspired by the Democrats. Leading Republicans took the initiative, and they took the initiative before the day of the primary when it became apparent that the foulness of this corruption campaign smelled to high heaven. The Republican lieutenant governor of Michigan, Hon. L. D. Dickinson, wrote to Mr. Newberry as follows:

DEAR SIR: Men of all walks of life, who have the best interests of our State at heart, believe the men who are conducting your campaign for United States Senator are conducting one that will bring one of the greatest scandals on our State that Michigan politics ever saw and have asked me to take the lead in attempting to rid our State of this blight.

I note by your statement that you say you do not know of these things.

In giving you the information I will give you the terms that I hear everywhere in the 62 counties in which I have been recently. I have always had the highest regard for you and must believe you will relieve the Republican Party and the State of a campaign that is now being likened to the notorious Lorimer campaign of Illinois a few years ago. The terms "boodle" and "rotten" seem to be general terms that I hear.

Every section of the State shows evidence of an expensive newspaper campaign costing thousands and thousands of dollars. Thousands of men are liberally paid for work at many more thousands of dollars, an expensive suite of offices with a large force sending out hundreds of thousands of letters to influential voters at more thousands of dollars, thousands of autos already engaged for use on primary day at many more thousands; that practically every opponent of the primary system is backing your campaign; and that hundreds of the experts who have figured in or conducted for money the wet campaigns of the past are among the most active of your supporters.

Conservative estimates say everywhere from $250,000 to $500,000 is being used. The good people of the State are apparently powerless to give the voters these matters on short notice. In case you get the most votes you must expect to have the placing of your name on the election ballot contested. If by technical reasons you succeed, then you must expect every church and moral organization to work until election night to keep our fair State from the baneful influence that success following such methods would leave for years to come.

Then he goes on to tell what might happen in the way of a contest in the event that he should succeed in getting the election.

Mr. Vandenberg, the editor of the Grand Rapids Herald, wrote to Mr. Newberry on August 8, nearly three weeks before the primary, as follows:

DEAR SIR: I desire to direct your attention to certain phases of the Michigan Republican senatorial campaign which seem to demand very clear and explicit public statement from you well in advance of primary election day.

I direct your attention to these specific charges which have appeared in responsible newspapers. They are charges, furthermore, which find kinship in very general rumor and report. I fully realize that gossip is deadly and a ruthless assassin. But gossip, in this instance, is too widespread to be longer ignored. It charges you and your associates with the expenditure of money running into six figures in the erection of your senatorial organization. Such a situation must be as intolerable for you, if these reports are false, as it is intolerable for the State if the reports are true. Therefore, it is a situation which must be challenged, because if not challenged by you it will have to be challenged by the electorate.

While this letter is purely personal to you, I should be glad to have an answer from you which could be published simultaneously with this letter so that the issue may be made clear.

Mr. Newberry wrote to him:

I heartily concur in your views and suggestions as stated in your letter of August 8 just received.

The date of Mr. Newberry's letter is August 11. He continued:

I have not paid nor am I obligated to pay anything in connection with the senatorial primary nor have I any fiscal information thereof beyond the assurance of the Newberry committee that their accounts will be filed as required by law and all expenditures made only for such purposes as allowed by law. I have forwarded your letter to the committee requesting them to send you a clear, comprehensive, and adequate statement for publication with your letter as you suggest.

I thank you for writing me and appreciate the opportunity thus offered to state the truth.

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to ask whether the Senator has in that connection the letter thereupon written by Newberry to King?

Mr. POMERENE. I have, and I am going to read it now. On its face Truman Newberry is playing the part of a shrewd gentleman, but now mark the other side of Truman Newberry. In his letter of August 9, 1918, to Paul King, in the same letter in which he refers to Gov. Osborn being out of the race for the nomination—and bear in mind that this man Vandenberg was the editor of former Senator William Alden Smith's paper of Grand Rapids—Newberry said to Paul King:

I am inclosing a copy of my noncommittal reply to the Grand Rapids people—which covers the situation in a rather flimsy manner.

Now note—

Oh, how honest we are with the public! How saintly when we write a letter for publication! How much like the cheap politician when we write to one of the chief conspirators! Let me read that again:

I am inclosing a copy of my noncommittal reply to the Grand Rapids people, which covers the situation in a rather flimsy manner.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, has the Senator the letter or has he referred to the letter in which Senator Newberry said, "I have purposely refused to give information"?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not know how to analyze a character of that kind, but of this I am perfectly sure, that it is in entire keeping with his conduct when he refuses to come before the committee of the Senate.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does he not say in that statement that it is noncommittal, that "I do not admit, but I know, and King, of course, knows that I do"?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly. It is just such a letter as a man would write who had something he wanted to conceal from the public, and it is just such a situation as some Senators do not desire to confront or to know about, and that is why some of them absent themselves from the Senate while this discussion is going on. Now, let me see. Oh, this conspiracy was not hatched on this side of the Chamber. Some of the wicked Republicans in Michigan who did not feel it was quite right to let the Senatorship be bought began to rebel. Is it strange that they could not view the conduct of this campaign from the lofty pedestal on which Mr. Newberry and his committee stood? On page 13 of the petition of Henry Ford, as printed for the use of the Senate, there appears a letter dated August 20, 1918, and addressed to the editor of the Detroit News by Representative Merlin Wiley, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. Let me read it:

To the Editor: The campaign conducted on behalf of Mr. Newberry's candidacy for the United States Senate is a disgrace to the State of Michigan. Some one or some persons are incurring bills of tremendous size. They are incurred in behalf of Mr. Newberry's candidacy and they must be paid by some one. Facts that can not be denied, because the knowledge of them is common property, attest the following:

First. A large and pretentious headquarters has been conducted for months in the Ford Building in Detroit, with a clerical force of from 30 to 40. Office rent and competent clerks cost money in Detroit.

Second. A force of Newberry workers of the class who seldom work without pay have been scouring the State for months doing organization work for Mr. Newberry's candidacy. They cost money.

Third. Banquets in county after county have been held, sometimes under the guise of patriotic meetings and sometimes plainly and boldly for Newberry organization work, as was the case of the banquet at Lansing, when the local Newberry organization was perfected, and the banquet of the Newberry workers of St. Clair at Marine City last Friday night. These things cost money, and these are war times and not time for political banquets.

Fourth. A super-expensive advertising campaign is being carried on, handled by a Detroit advertising company, and carrying almost continuous advertising in nearly every one of the 700 papers in the State, both secular and religious. This costs money, and lots of it.

Fifth. It has been stated that a letter inclosing a return postal card, together with printed matter, has been sent to every voter in the State. This costs money.

Sixth. It is stated that the Newberry organization plans to have autos in every voting precinct to bring out the Newberry vote on election day. This will cost still more money.

Seventh. The old-time politicians, the opponents of the primary system, and the "wets" are almost to a man supporting Mr. Newberry.

Eighth. Not a word, not a statement, not a single announcement of what he stands for has Mr. Newberry made. Even his campaign expense statement states that his campaign is being conducted by his friends without his knowledge or participation, and that no expenses have been incurred with his consent or authority.

Those items cost money—more money than has ever been spent in a Michigan campaign, certainly in this generation. They are, in the amount expended, in plain and open violation of the letter and spirit of both the State and Federal laws. If Mr. Newberry should be elected, Michigan will have an election scandal worse than the Lorimer scandal in Illinois or the Stephenson scandal in Wisconsin. If this is to be the policy permitted in Michigan, then none but millionaires or men with millionaire friends who will pay the bills need apply for the office of governor or United States Senator, for only they can pay the price.

It is variously estimated that the entire cost of the Newberry organization and the conduct of Mr. Newberry's candidacy will have cost from one hundred thousand to one-half million of dollars. Certainly, it will cost enough to down the fair name of Michigan for a generation to come. And if Mr. Newberry should be nominated, he can never hope to take his seat. A United States Senate that, as Republican, would not permit William Lorimer to retain his seat and would seriously challenge the right of Senator Stephenson to a seat therein will never, when Democratic, permit Mr. Newberry, if elected, to be seated after such campaign expenditures.

It is time for Michigan to wake up and shield her honor by administering a defeat that will forever make impossible the repetition of such methods.

LANSING, MICH., August 20, 1918.

Mr. Wiley was Gov. Osborn's manager.

Mr. President, it was stated with a good deal of force here by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on yesterday that there had been no indictment of Mr. Newberry by the grand jury for a violation of the laws of the sovereign State of Michigan. That may be, but the letter which I have just read is an indictment before the entire electorate of Michigan, and the answer to the indictment is that Mr. Newberry would not testify in the criminal case at Grand Rapids and would not testify before a Senate committee which was appointed to investigate his case. Mr. President, silence under these circumstances is a confession of guilt.

Let me go a step further. Gov. Osborn, after being defeated, was what in political parlance would be called a "good sport." He telegraphed apparently to Mr. Newberry; Mr. Newberry writes him a generous letter; and then Gov. Osborn comes back with a reply which I think more paddles Mr. Newberry than it pets him. The letter, dated September 17, 1918, is found on page 16 of the petition of Mr. Ford, and is as follows:

SEPTEMBER 17, 1918.

MY DEAR COMMANDER: I have read your letter. Thank you for your sentiments. I shall support you. Already I have straightened out entanglements that would have been hurtful to your success. I am not interested in you personally a particle. The entire matter is so far beyond personal consideration and transcends individual proportions to an extent that only public welfare may be thought of. You can be elected; no doubt you will be. My idea is that the thing for you to do is to honestly confess that you broke the law and that you knew all about the campaign, but that you did not realize the enormity of your offense.

That was good advice.

In such a position you would be intrenched in honesty, I fully believe. And an indulgent people would forgive you and fight for you, because of the past services they think you have given and what they have been told you are giving now. In addition, this action would make for your name an honorable place in the history of Michigan. Otherwise the future will curse you.

The plea can not be honestly made that you spent money in excess because you were fighting Ford, because you had begun your reckless campaign long before Ford was mentioned and had already transgressed the law. Nor can you plead "you did not know." That would prove you to be both an ass and a liar, which I choose to think you are not. I am for you only to save the Nation and the State from the curse of Fordism.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I did not quite hear that. Will the Senator read it again?

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator did hear it, but I will read it again.

Mr. SPENCER. I have been waiting for two weeks to hear the Senator complete the reading of that letter. It was not done when the Senator read it the other day.

Mr. POMERENE. I quoted from it the other day, and I should like to have the Senator read the Record.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator read the concluding sentence so that it may be heard on this side of the Chamber?

Mr. POMERENE. There are but few Senators over there, but I will be very glad to read it again, and I will come right up to the Senator's desk and read it if he wants that done. There is not anything to be gained before the American people by trying to muddy the waters here by making certain accusations against Mr. Ford when he does not appear in this contest. We have held that he is not entitled to the seat. I will read it for the enlightenment of the Senator, but, in view of the fact that the Republicans who are trying to "jam" this case through the Senate are not now in their seats, I hope that the Senator from Missouri, in the interest of truth, will read my speech to his Republican colleagues in the cloakroom or wherever else he can find them.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

Mr. POMERENE. I will read.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator will be fair, I know, and say that there are precisely seven Democrats upon the Democratic side of the house, and there are a corresponding number, seven Republicans, on the Republican side of the house.

Mr. POMERENE. I will be frank to say that there are not as many Senators on this side as I should like to see here, but they have not been trying to "jam" this case through the Senate as have Senators on the other side, and they have been in their seats a very large portion of the time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum. Let us get both Democrats and Republicans here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. SPENCER. I suggest that there has been no business transacted since the last roll call. If, however, the Senator from Ohio desires a quorum, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. POMERENE. I have not raised the question. I do desire a quorum, but I know that those who have made up their minds that they are going to continue Mr. Newberry in his seat will not stay here to hear what I have to say; they do not want to hear.

Mr. OVERMAN. Since the Senator managing this case objects to it and makes the point that no business has been transacted, it looks as if he does not want a quorum, and therefore I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, let me continue the reading of this letter:

I am for you only to save the Nation and the State from the curse of Fordism. A vote for Ford is a vote for the Kaiser right now, as I view the case.

Yours, truly,

CHASE S. OSBORN.

Mr. CARAWAY. What reply did Senator Newberry make to that letter?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not think that ever came before the committee. If Mr. Newberry had come before the committee, I think then I would have been able to answer the very question of the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, as far as this record shows, he never replied to that letter any more than he came before the committee to explain his lack of information?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, it is about the same thing. Like the Pharisee on the street—

God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are, * * * or even as this publican.

Mr. President, Mr. Ford has been accused of extreme pacifism. If what has been reported in the papers about what he may have said at certain times is true—and I have heard these statements uttered and denied—I could not approve some of those things. I think they were most unfortunate if they were said; but, Mr. President, I have had some experience in criminal practice. There never was an indictment against any defendant in any case which did not involve some accusation against the prosecuting witness; and when these accusations are not made until the defendant gets into the clutches of the law I think fairness suggests that we should accept them with a few grains of allowance particularly when made against the prosecuting witness, and particularly when they go to his right to a seat.

Mr. President, all the cuttlefish that darken the waters are not found in the ocean's depths.

Mr. President, in my judgment we have proved that this was Newberry's committee; that this committee and Newberry were in a conspiracy to get that nomination; that they were determined to get it, at whatever cost; that by their conduct they have blackened the fair reputation of the sovereign State of Michigan; and permit me to say now, before taking my seat, that it is not alone the Senator from Michigan who is on trial before the Senate. The Senate is on trial before the American people.

Mr. President, perhaps the highest honor in the world to which any man can aspire is to become the President of the United States. Perhaps the next highest honor in the gift of our Government is to be Chief Justice of the great Supreme Court of the United States. Except these two offices, there is no place within the gift of the people of any one of the 48 States which surpasses in dignity the position which you and I now occupy because our States have thus favored us. There is only one way by which the honor of the Senate can be preserved, and that is that those who seek a seat here shall not do it by trying to evade the provisions of the law of the Federal Government or of the several States.

Mr. President, it so happens that there can be only two Senators from each sovereign State at one time—only two. When the voters of a State go to their wardrobe and take from it the senatorial toga and drape it around the shoulders of one of their favorite sons, he is indeed honored; but when some rich man who aspires to that honor builds out of gold dollars a stairway leading into that wardrobe and takes from it the senatorial toga, whether it is done by himself or by his millionaire friends, the toga is no longer a robe of honor; it is a dirty rag that disgraces him who wears it.

Mr. President, I thank the Senators for their kindness in thus listening to me.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harris	McNary	Spencer
Broussard	Harrison	Nicholson	Townsend
Bursum	Heflin	Norbeck	Trammell
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Culberson	Kendrick	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Warren
Dial	Keyes	Page	Watson, Ga.
Elkins	King	Pittman	Watson, Ind.
Ernst	Ladd	Pomerene	Willis
France	La Follette	Robinson
Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard
Gooding	McLean	Smith

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] are detained in a committee meeting.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on account of official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. STANLEY and Mr. SWANSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE and Mr. SMOOT entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH of Montana obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me for a moment or two?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has just concluded an able presentation of the facts as disclosed by the record in what is called the "Newberry" case, and has also discussed with ability the law relating thereto. During the discussion but few Senators upon the Republican side have been in the Chamber. The absence of a quorum has just been suggested, and upon the call of the Senate a number of Senators responding to their names came into the Chamber and promptly departed. It has been understood that the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who is a lawyer of ability and a Senator of high repute, was to follow the Senator from Ohio if no other Senator desired to speak in support of the sitting Member. And it was also understood that the Senator from Montana would discuss the facts relating to the pending matter and also present his view of the law touching the same. Notwithstanding the call of the Senate, there is but a handful of Senators upon the majority side of the Chamber, and upon this side the number is somewhat in excess.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him to say that if he thinks his count agrees with mine, he would find that there are 15 Republicans and 14 Democrats in this Chamber at the present time.

Mr. KING. I shall not stop to question the accuracy or debate the inaccuracy of the figures submitted by my friend. I am afraid he has formed the habit of inaccuracy in weighing the testimony in the case before us, that he is carrying the same spirit of inaccuracy into his count in the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I hope in the count the Senator will not include the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and my poor self as being of Democratic persuasion.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Utah will yield, I have just counted, and there are 17 Democrats and 15 Republicans present.

Mr. KING. I should think the Senator from California would regard it as a very great compliment to be allowed to sit upon the Democratic side and, of course, it would be a much greater compliment and an honor of which he and his posterity might be proud if he were, indeed, a Democrat.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I have been oppressed with a sense of obligation in being permitted to sit over here in the "Cherokee Strip." It is true my mind has been perturbed at times lest some of the "Indians" would resort to the bow and arrow, but I do deeply appreciate my surroundings. I would be relieved much, however, if I could escape from the plethora of words and not be disturbed by what has seemed to be a paucity of ideas. If those on this side—not including the learned, thoughtful, and amiable Senator from Utah—would address themselves as advocates, sitting in a tribunal, to the facts and the law, I would be edified and instructed; but, if my friend will permit me to add, the absence of Republican Senators does not argue that they are disinterested or indifferent. The speech made by the learned Senator from Ohio will be preserved in the Record for all time. Republicans are able to read, and it is really easier to read sometimes than it is pleasant to listen and hear. If the Senator from Utah desires to address the Senate—because he has many of the arts of the advocate and an intimate acquaintance with oratory—I shall listen; I shall remain here, and not suffer, but be greatly delighted.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Utah will yield to me to make just one remark, the Senator from California says he is sure our Republican friends will read the Record. What we are troubled about is that they may read the Record after they have voted, and will not have the advantage of having the facts before them when they vote.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from California doubtless intended to speak in a complimentary way concerning myself, although there may be some shafts in his remarks. I have no controversy with my eloquent friend from California. I submit, though, with all due respect, that he is somewhat unjust when he speaks of the "paucity of ideas and the plethora of words" which have characterized the debate upon the Newberry case. As is well known, but two speeches have been made upon this question. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] spoke for a number of hours with great force and eloquence and with characteristic ability in presenting his views of the case. He argued in support of the majority report filed in the Senate and attempted to defend the right of the sitting Member [Mr. NEWBERRY] to his seat in the Senate. Upon this side of the Chamber the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has occupied the floor for a part of three days. He has, however, been subjected to frequent interruptions and has been compelled by reason of the questions propounded to make a more extended review of the testimony than perhaps he otherwise would have made. His address was most illuminating; and anyone who may read it will contend that there was no superfluity of words. He has reviewed in an admirable and forceful way the testimony covering substantially 2,000 pages, and has also discussed the law relating to elections and covering the question before us.

But, Mr. President, I did not seek the floor for the purpose of making an address. I arose only for the purpose of challenging attention to the fact that notwithstanding we have before us one of the most important questions that has come to the Senate in years, but few Senators are giving attention to the discussion and I fear a less number are examining the very voluminous record in the case. The question involved in this contest is not a mere personal one, nor is it a mere economic or political one. If the matter under consideration involved only the rights of an individual, of course it would be important; but where the rights of the public are involved, and indeed the very foundations of our form of government are concerned, then the matter assumes an entirely different aspect and reaches a height of transcendent importance.

As I view the case, the matter before us goes to the very foundations of the Republic. It is directly related to the preservation of our Government and of the institutions under which we live. The question is not merely whether Truman H. Newberry shall sit in the Senate of the United States; that question, I concede, is important to him, but it sinks into insignificance when measured by other questions inseparably connected therewith. A representative democracy can only endure so long as not only the form but the spirit of the Government shall be preserved. Rather it is more important the spirit shall influence and control than mere adherence to form be sought.

The will of the people in our Republic is supreme. It is not their will if it is a coerced or a purchased will. There must be a free and intelligent expression upon the part of the people in connection with elections and questions submitted for their determination. If the electorate of a State and of the Nation become debased or corrupt or so flaccid and enemic as to possess no interest in the fate of their country, then our form of government will perish from the earth.

Citizenship implies heavy responsibility. Monarchies and benevolent despotisms may exist and give to those living under them a reasonable degree of liberty and opportunity for culture and development, but a republic can only endure and serve the beneficent purpose for which it is established when the people within its borders are intelligent, patriotic, honest, and inspired by high ideals and noble aspirations. A republican form of government may be degraded into a tyrannous and reactionary government. Factions and groups actuated by sectional and class consciousness may destroy the government founded upon principles of liberty. Wealth may corrupt and corrode the conscience of the people so that their government will be perverted and in the end overthrown.

With practically universal suffrage in the United States, it is important that the electorate be uncorrupted not only by incorruptible, that wealth and vested interests and sinister forces shall not by bribery or other corrupt methods interfere with the full and free exercise by the people of their sovereign powers. Many persons possessing great wealth seek political positions and utilize their wealth to secure them.

In the case before us it is charged that the electorate of a great State was debauched, and that large sums of money were expended to corrupt the electorate and to secure the nomination of the sitting Member from that State. The issue, it will therefore be perceived, is one which vitally affects not only the sitting Member but a sovereign State; and not only one sovereign State but all States of the Union and the National Government itself. If elections may be controlled by the illegal use of money or by promises of positions, if the conscience of the people may be narcotized by the deadening influence of wealth and its concomitants, then the integrity of the Government itself is attacked and its perpetuity menaced.

So, a great question is before the Senate. The Senate are the judges of the facts and the law. I submit that a matter fraught with such grave consequences should command the most serious attention of every Senator. We are sitting as a solemn court passing upon a vital matter—one which, as I have stated, affects not only the rights of an individual and the honor of the Senate but the very foundations of our republican institutions.

Under our judicial system we bring into the jury box 12 men. It has been said that the whole purpose of government is to establish a tribunal which will fairly and justly determine controversies and the rights of individuals. If an important controversy involving personal property receives the protection and consideration which our States and Nation provide, obviously the matter before us now should command the highest qualities of devotion and service and all of our faculties for its adjudication. How can we pass upon these important questions without the most scrupulous and minute examination of all the facts in the case? How can we apply the law to the facts without a consistent investigation of the legal principles involved? I submit with all deference to Senators that with these responsibilities resting upon us no Senator should absent himself from the Chamber during the discussion of the issues before us. As honest and impartial judges we should read the record, ascertain the facts, acquaint ourselves with the law, seek its application to the facts, and then decide the issue as our conscience and our judgment and our sense of duty under the solemn oaths which we have taken demand.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in view of the startling revelations of this record as disclosed by the splendid argument and address of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I offer the following as a substitute for the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. As a substitute for the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], the Senator from Montana offers the following:

Resolved, That Henry Ford, contesting the election of Truman H. Newberry as United States Senator from the State of Michigan for the term commencing March 4, 1919, not having received a majority of the votes cast at the election, is not entitled to a seat in this body.

Resolved further, That on account of acts in gross and flagrant violation of the law of the State of Michigan on the part of the said Truman H. Newberry, his agents, and supporters, intended to encompass his election, he is not entitled to a seat in this body.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in the orderly conduct of a controversy of this character, and in view of the splendid review of the testimony taken before the committee as presented to the Senate by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], it would be quite appropriate that the debate be continued by some one who is supporting the claims of Mr. Newberry to a seat in this body. I should be glad to yield to any of the Senators who care to say anything in his behalf or in answer to the argument of the Senator from Ohio. [Applause.] No one, Mr. President, appearing to be able to say anything or caring to say anything at this time, I address myself to the subject before the Senate.

When the judgment in the case brought against Truman H. Newberry and his associates, in the campaign for election to a seat in the United States Senate, eventually came before the Supreme Court of the United States and was determined by that body an effort was made, industriously, to inculcate in the public mind that the decision of the Supreme Court had disposed of the whole controversy, and particularly the contest before this body, and his apologists and supporters here have endeavored to give to the public the same view of the matter. The majority report almost at its outset recites the trial at Grand Rapids and the reversal of the judgment eventually by the Supreme Court. I read:

An investigation of both the primary and the general election has been made with a detail and perseverance and to an extent almost inconceivable. In the Federal court of the United States at Grand Rapids, Mich., at the instance of the Department of Justice of the United States, Truman H. Newberry and 134 other men were, in the fall of 1919, indicted on a charge of conspiring to have Truman H. Newberry pay and expend, or cause to be paid and expended, more than $3,750, the charge itself being a charge of conspiracy in violation of section 8 of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (ch. 392, 36 Stat., 822-824), as amended by act of Congress of August 19, 1911 (ch. 33, 37 Stat., 25-29).

As a result of this trial Truman H. Newberry and 16 others were convicted of conspiracy. On appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States the conviction was set aside, and the case was reversed.

The record of this trial at Grand Rapids shows that every detail of expenditure, of conduct, and of plan in the campaign, and every activity in behalf of Mr. Truman H. Newberry in connection with both the primary and the general election was most minutely inquired into and carefully examined.

The inference to be drawn is that the whole matter having thus been carefully inquired into and a judgment rendered, which was eventually reversed by the Supreme Court, the matter is finally determined.

Now, it may be that the strictures made upon this side of the Chamber because of the absence of Republican Senators while this discussion is progressing are due, to some extent at least, to a belief current among them that the whole contest was thus disposed of and that this is an effort upon the part of Senators on this side in some way or other to overcome the adjudication of the Supreme Court.

Really, Mr. President, one can hardly imagine that there is very much basis for that belief, although I am willing to indulge it. It seems altogether likely, regretful as it may be, that this cause is going to be determined not upon the merits of the controversy at all but in accordance with the political predilections of the Members of this body, and the continued and persistent absence from the Chamber of Members of the majority discloses a purpose upon their part not to learn the truth, lest the truth might make them free from the thralldom of devotion to party.

My esteemed friend the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] has said that though they are absent the exhaustive discussion of the subject by the distinguished Senator from Ohio is found in the Record, and Senators can read his argument. Doubtless they can, Mr. President. I am reminded that when the controversy between Lord Northcliffe and Lloyd-George was at its height the former petulantly said of Lloyd-George that it was rumored around Paris that he could read, but that he never did. Undoubtedly Senators can read in the Record the arguments of the Senator from Ohio, but in all reasonable probability they will not.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. I wonder if it would be interesting to the Senator to note that there are just 12 Democratic Senators besides himself now present and that there are fully as many, if not more Republican Senators on the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. There are 15 Democrats and 9 Republicans.

Mr. SPENCER. I think there are 11 Republicans and 13 Democrats present.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I wish to inquire exactly what force, what significance, what importance, is to be attached at the outset here to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I wish Senators to bear in mind exactly what the charge was upon which these people were tried in Grand Rapids, and I call attention to the statute upon which they were tried, there being a very widespread error in regard to its scope and effect. It is generally believed that statute simply prohibits the contribution by a candidate of a sum in excess of $10,000, or any other sum limited by State statute, in this particular case limited by the statute of the State of Michigan to $3,750. But that is not all of the statute, because it condemns the expenditure by the candidate of more than that amount, as well as contributions. Reading from the opinion of Mr. Justice Pitney:

It limits the amount of money that may be given, contributed, expended, used, or promised, or caused to be given, contributed, expended, used, or promised, by a candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States in procuring his nomination and election.

The indictment in the case charged that the defendant not only contributed but expended, used, and so forth, these various items.

When the case went to the Supreme Court, it was disposed of thus: The illegal expenditures there referred to, as here, were expenditures made in connection with the primary election. The charge was made that illegal expenditures were made in connection with the general election also, but one of the charges was that expenditures were made in connection with the primary election. The Supreme Court, by a majority, held that the statute of the United States, so far as it referred to expenditures made at the primary election, was unconstitutional and void, and that therefore no prosecution could be founded upon the charge of illegal expenditures made at the primaries; that is to say, that it was no crime against the laws of the United States.

Bear in mind, they did not determine that it was not a crime against the laws of the State of Michigan, which is the subject which we are going to inquire into in this contest. The court held, five justices concurring, that the statute was unconstitutional so far as it related to contributions of expenditures in connection with the primary campaign. That is all that those judges decided.

Mr. Justice Pitney filed a separate opinion, in which he contested the contention that the statute was unconstitutional. In that opinion Mr. Justice Clark and Mr. Justice Brandeis concurred, as did Mr. Justice White, who filed a separate opinion. But in the opinion of Mr. Justice White, he said that, conceding that the statute was constitutional, the court was entirely justified in submitting to the jury the question as to whether Truman H. Newberry conspired with other parties to contribute and expend more than $3,750 in the conduct of the campaign.

Bear in mind he said there was evidence enough, conceding the statute to be constitutional, to submit that question to the jury; in other words, there was testimony to establish that Truman H. Newberry was guilty of contributing to and expending more than $3,750. The five justices who held that the statute was unconstitutional gave no expression upon that subject at all; but it is a well-established rule of law, that could be supported by reference to abundant authorities, that a court will never hold a statute to be unconstitutional until it is actually faced by that question and can not get away from it; in other words, if these five members of the court believed that there was no testimony in the record upon which the jury could legitimately find that Truman H. Newberry was guilty as charged, they never would have reached the question of the constitutionality of this statute. So we are bound to believe that these five justices concurred with Mr. Justice Pitney that, conceding the statute to have been constitutional, a case had been made that ought to have been submitted to the jury.

Moreover, Mr. Chief Justice White concurs in the judgment expressed by Mr. Justice Pitney and the other two associate justices to whom I have referred, that the statute is a constitutional one. He also confronted the question of the constitutionality of the statute, and under the established rule he could not reach that conclusion unless he also had arrived at the determination that a case had been made to be submitted to the jury. So, Mr. President, as I interpret this decision, every member of the court held that there was enough evidence in the case, if the statute had been a constitutional one, upon which Mr. Newberry could have been convicted; or, in other words, they practically held that if he was being tried under a valid State statute for contributing to or aiding in the expenditure of more than $3,750 a case was made out upon which the jury would be warranted in finding him guilty.

That is the state of the record so far as the Supreme Court of the United States is concerned. I again call attention to the fact that the court did not undertake to determine at all whether or not Mr. Newberry had violated the State statute; they were simply concerned with the question of the Federal statute. We, Mr. President, are to direct our inquiry to the question not as to whether he violated a Federal statute, except so far as to determine whether he contributed more or assisted in the expenditure of more than $3,750; our attention is to be directed, except in that one particular, to the question of how far he violated the statutes of the State of Michigan or how far the statutes of that State were violated in order to encompass his election.

The Senate will bear in mind that the Constitution provides that "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members"; and section 4 of Article I provides that "The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof," except where Congress may make or alter those regulations; in other words, any man claiming a seat in this body must claim it by virtue of an election conducted in accordance with the laws of the State from which he comes. That is the basis of his title. So, Mr. President, it concerns us not so much in this matter to determine whether Truman H. Newberry violated the law of Congress as to determine whether he violated the law or the laws of the State of Michigan.

Over and over again we are told that he had nothing to do with the campaign; that it was conducted by a voluntary committee of his friends and associates in that State. The brief filed before the committee in his behalf says, at page 19, that his campaign was voluntarily conducted by friends in Michigan.

Mr. President, I intend to devote some time to the consideration of that question. I intend to demonstrate upon this record to the satisfaction of any man with an open mind that there was not any committee of his friends and business associates in the State of Michigan, but that the campaign was conducted by an organization called the Newberry senatorial committee—the agents of Truman H. Newberry and of no one else.

Senators understand what is meant by a committee. A committee is a body with delegated power from some other body. Thus we have our committees which are charged with certain duties; they are our agents; they are, in a way, doing our work by our authority. So, Mr. President, in the ordinary political organization the voters of a particular party in some precinct get together; they are the source of power; they appoint a precinct committee which is charged with certain duties. The precinct committees get together and constitute what is ordinarily known as a county committee. The county committees and other State committeemen assemble; they constitute the State committee; and the State committee ordinarily carries on a State campaign. So it is with a national organization. Similarly, Mr. President, when a man desires to procure the nomination for a public office either his friends and admirers and supporters voluntarily come together, or he calls them together, and they confer about the matter and appoint a committee, delegating to that committee the power to carry on the campaign. That committee would ordinarily go out and solicit funds with which to conduct the campaign. The candidate himself might be in a remote portion of the country; he might be totally ignorant of the entire affair; and it is intended here, Mr. President, to convey the idea that some such process as that occurred in connection with the campaign of Mr. Newberry. Thus, the majority report distinctly says:

Truman H. Newberry was absent from the State of Michigan continuously during the entire campaign and until long after the election had been held. He took no part whatever either in the financial or other features of the primary campaign or its direction or control. Nor did he take any part in the general election.

I propose now, Mr. President, to consider the composition of that so-called Newberry senatorial committee for the purpose of finding out what its origin was, who created it, whom that committee represented, and by whom it was authorized to do the acts which it did. The record gives us no catalogue whatever of the members of that committee; we do not know who they are; but one, Allan Templeton, was chairman of the committee. Upon the letterheads of the committee are listed certain gentlemen said to be members of the committee. I propose to follow the matter down and find out from the record who were the members of the committee, and by whom they were constituted as such, and in doing so I propose to read from the record so that there will be no controversy about the matter at all. I say that because my discussion of this feature of the case, as perhaps will be the case generally, will be somewhat tedious.

Mr. Templeton was chairman of that committee, so called. How he came to be connected with the matter is disclosed in his testimony at page 414 of the record from which I read:

MR. TEMPLETON. . . . If I may explain, I will try to do so briefly. I had been going to New York every few weeks to see Mr. Newberry in connection with our business. We were the two largest stockholders, and we were doing a great deal of Government work at that time, and it was customary for me to go at least once a week to New York. On one of my visits he said to me—

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN. When was this?

MR. TEMPLETON. I can not remember the date. It was along in the winter or the early spring.

THE ACTING CHAIRMAN. Of 1917 and 1918?

MR. TEMPLETON. I presume so.

SENATOR POMERENE. The winter or spring before the primary?

MR. TEMPLETON. Yes, sir. He said to me, "A number of my friends have asked me to run for the United States Senate." That was the first I had heard of it. I said, "Well, that is nice if you want it." He said, "If I should decide to go I hope you will interest yourself in my candidacy." I said, "I do not know anything about politics. I would not know what to do. If you decide to run and there is anything that I can do to assist you I would be glad to do it, as a business associate and a friend." He said if he decided to run he hoped I would help, and I said, "In what way am I to be of assistance?" He said he was very anxious that if he should run to have a business man's campaign, and that perhaps I would be willing to have a business man's committee in Detroit. I said if that was all there was to it, I saw no objection. That ended the conversation.

What did Mr. Templeton next know about it? The next thing he knew about it he was chairman of the Newberry senatorial committee, and he has not any kind of an idea as to how he happened to be chairman. I read from his testimony at page 413 of the record:

MR. ALFRED LUCKING. How did you come to get into the committee? Who got you into it?

MR. TEMPLETON. I think Mr. King made me general chairman.

Senators will bear in mind that I am going to take Mr. King up directly, and I am going to trace him just exactly in the same way as to how he came to be interested in this campaign and acted in it—

I never knew how it happened. The first I knew of it I saw my name in the letter book.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you not have something to do with getting him in?

Mr. TEMPLETON. I think I suggested that he would be a good man for the job.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you not see him in connection with it?

Mr. TEMPLETON. I saw him once in connection with it.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. With whom?

Mr. TEMPLETON. With Mr. Cody?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Fred Cody, of New York?

Mr. TEMPLETON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who suggested to you that Paul King would be a good man?

Mr. TEMPLETON. I think Mr. Cody.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You personally did not know Mr. King before that, did you?

Mr. TEMPLETON. I had met him two or three times when he was receiver for the Pere Marquette.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Had you had anything to do with him in a political way at all?

Mr. TEMPLETON. Not at all.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who arranged the meeting with Mr. King, Mr. Cody, and yourself?

Mr. TEMPLETON. As I recall it, Mr. Cody did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Where was the meeting?

Mr. TEMPLETON. At the Statler Hotel.

Bear in mind, Mr. President, that Templeton never contributed a dollar to this campaign. He says, and that is practically corroborated by the record, except for some immaterial matters, that he was a mere figurehead.

Now, let us find out who King was, and whom he represented; what body of citizens gathered together and deputed King to do the things which he did.

Page 662 of the bill of exceptions contains the story of King, as to how he came to get into this work. I read it. It is somewhat lengthy.

I was first approached in connection with the Newberry senatorial campaign in February, 1918, just as we were closing up the work of the charter commission. I can not remember the exact date; it seems to me it was some time after the 20th of the month, in the twenties. One afternoon just before the adjournment of the commission, ex-State Senator George Scott, of Detroit, called me one side and said that some friends of his wished to meet me that evening at the Hotel Statler, and asked me if I would be good enough to go to the hotel to meet them; I told him I would. I went to the Hotel Statler that evening. I think Mr. Scott and the respondent Fred Cody were there. The respondent Templeton came in while we were there, as I remember it. I think Mr. Templeton was at that time the president of the Detroit Board of Commerce. We had dinner in Mr. Cody's room. I can not remember just the dialogue or the conversation, but it was substantially that the friends of the then Commander Truman H. Newberry were considering taking up the work of a campaign in his behalf for the United States Senate. I had had previous experience in handling a campaign. I had been secretary and one of the managers of the so-called Townsend senatorial committee in Michigan in the year beginning in October, 1909, and extending through to the primary in 1910. I had also been secretary of the Republican State central committee in 1910. We visited at some length, possibly a couple of hours. It was stated that if this candidacy should be launched that it would be promoted by business associates and friends of Mr. Newberry. At that time I had no acquaintanceship with Commander Newberry; I think I had met him. I did not on that occasion give these gentlemen any answer to their suggestion that I undertake the management of the Newberry campaign. I stated to them that I had just entered upon the practice of law in Detroit. I think I told them that back in 1909, when I opened my law office in Lansing, I had promised myself and family that I would not take any further active part in politics. Then followed the Townsend campaign. At the earnest solicitation of Congressman Townsend, I embarked upon his campaign, and that was followed by the secretaryship of the State central committee and the clerkship of the house of representatives, so that my law office really did not get started in Lansing, and I was determined not to have that happen again, and so told these gentlemen that the Townsend campaign had been a very strenuous campaign, that I had really impaired my health, and I had no inclination or desire to get into another State-wide campaign of any kind. I had been through a State-wide campaign just the year before as director of the first Red Cross war fund drive, which, while short, had been also strenuous, and yet they urged me to take the place if they should have a committee and go ahead.

Bear in mind, they urged him to take the place "if they should have a committee and go ahead."

They wanted me to take an active part in it out of my acquaintance and familiarity with conditions in Michigan. I finally said, "Well, I will talk it over with my wife." I had promised her I would never go into another campaign, and would talk it over with my business associate, Mr. McKee, and I think I said I would mention the matter to Arthur T. Tuttle, the United States district judge who for years had been my warm personal friend, and to Judge Clyde I. Webster, now of the Wayne circuit bench, and see what my family and business associate and friends thought about it. I afterwards discussed the matter with my family and with my partner and with my friends, Judge Webster and Judge Tuttle. After that discussion there was one other matter that I was not sure about. I had been secretary of the State central committee and had a considerable active part in the Bay City convention of 1912.

Because of the difference of opinion that had arisen at the Bay City convention, I expressed a desire to confer with the commander himself before I would give an answer to the suggestion that I would manage this campaign. I wanted to know before I started out on any such enterprise how he personally felt toward myself. I did not know. I had not seen the commander since the episode at the Bay City convention. As a result, I went to New York to see him. When I got to New York I saw Commander Newberry and had a short conference with him at his apartment in the Hotel Gotham. Later he went to the Biltmore. Mr. Fred Cody, the commander, and I were present at the conference. Mr. Newberry met us at the door and shook hands and he said, "Well, young man, I have not seen you since the day over in Bay City when you made me sit on the church steps across the street from the Armory." I said, "Well that is quite a while ago; I had forgotten about it myself"—something of that kind. The conference, if you might call it that, was very brief. He was about to leave for the hospital to see Col. Roosevelt, who was ill. We discussed generalities, political conditions generally in Michigan, and Mr. Cody said that some of Commander Newberry's friends were anxious that he should be a candidate for United States Senate and that the matter had been mentioned to me, and that I was considering whether or not I would take an active part in the campaign, but that I wanted to know what Commander Newberry's personal feeling was toward myself individually before I decided the matter. I think there was some general conversation about the expenses of the campaign at that time. I think Commander Newberry made a general inquiry as to what would be the expenses of a State-wide campaign, and I said that in the Townsend campaign that it had cost Senator Townsend's friends approximately $20,000 to meet the expenses of that campaign, but on account of changed conditions in Michigan and throughout the State, that it would cost his friends probably considerably more than that, possibly $50,000 to conduct the kind of a campaign, the publicity campaign that would have to be conducted if it were to be successful; that Mr. Townsend had been very active in Michigan politics; had been a Congressman for a number of years; that he was very well known, while Commander Newberry had been a Cabinet officer, he was not so well known in Michigan, and it would entail a greater degree of publicity and would probably for that reason cost more; that I did not know how much a campaign would cost, nobody could tell that; that if his friends decided to go ahead with his candidacy, it would probably cost at least that much. From that time on money or expenses were never discussed with Commander Newberry at any other time. I did not on that occasion tell either the commander or Mr. Cody while I was there at New York whether or not I would take the management. I returned to Detroit and talked the matter over further with my wife, and spoke to Mr. McKee about it, and asked if he had any objection. He said he had not. Finally, after a day or two—I do not remember how long it was—I told Mr. Templeton that I would accept the position of State executive chairman or manager of Mr. Newberry's committee of friends.

You will observe that of the three who met—Scott, Templeton, and Cody—it was Cody who proposed that King become active in the campaign.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. I gather from what the Senator has said that he is under the impression that Mr. Templeton, the chairman, had no substantial part at all in the campaign.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why, Mr. President, I understand the Senator. I told just exactly what the situation was. Mr. Templeton himself said that he was a mere figurehead. The fact about the matter is that the record discloses that he was about the headquarters of the so-called Newberry senatorial committee on a number of occasions.

Mr. SPENCER. The testimony shows, on page 328, that he was in the headquarters a part of each day or every other day, and that while he did not have as active connection with the campaign as Mr. King, by any means, he was keeping in close touch with it. The Senator perhaps will see that in the record.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; he says he was in the campaign headquarters from time to time. I gave the Senate his own testimony that he was a mere figurehead.

Who was Cody, who proposed that King become the manager of this campaign? The brief to which I have heretofore adverted, filed with the committee on behalf of Mr. Newberry, at page 29, says:

It does appear that through some past favor rendered by Commander Newberry to Mr. Cody, Mr. Cody at times acted as a voluntary messenger boy.

He was an errand boy. That is the contention on behalf of Mr. Newberry.

Mr. Cody was an employee of the American Book Co. The American Book Co. is run by Victor Barnes, president thereof, and a brother of Mrs. Truman Newberry. The Newberry estate and the Newberrys are large stockholders in the American Book Co. His business, according to his own statement, was to place the books of the American Book Co. in the schools by seeking contracts and making other arrangements with State authorities, and with county authorities, and with school district authorities, and so on. It may or may not be significant, but the American Book Co. has been involved in scandals in connection with this kind of work in a number of States, as perhaps Senators will be able to testify from their own knowledge. However, the business of Cody was to place, as he says, the books of the American Book Co. in various places. I read, in support of this, from the record at page 374, Mr. Victor Barnes being on the stand:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Do you know Fred Cody?

Mr. BARNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How long have you known him?

Mr. BARNES. I do not know. I can not recall.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Has he been in the employment of your company?

Mr. BARNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He has been in your employment. In what way—regularly or on a salary, or for jobs that he does?

Mr. MURFIN. I object to this inquiry. The fact appears that he is in the employ of Mr. Barnes's company.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Let him answer the question.

Mr. BARNES. I am not thoroughly familiar with that part of my business, as I am the head of the manufacturing branch.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What is that part?

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Cody has done agency work for the firm.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How many years?

Mr. BARNES. For a number of years, I think.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What is the character of his agency work?

Mr. MURFIN. I object to that. It is totally immaterial to any issue involved here.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Let him answer the question.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Cody is what in our business is a salesman. They are referred to as agents. I know that he is in the employ of the American Book Co., but the details of it I do not know. I never had anything to do with that end of the business.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He has been engaged in promoting the sales of your books before different school boards and in State institutions all over the country, has he not?

Mr. BARNES. I do not know to what extent. I say, I have nothing to do with and know nothing of the direction of those agents. I do not know what Mr. Cody does.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You are vice president?

Mr. BARNES. I am a vice president in charge of manufacturing.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Do you know him personally?

Mr. BARNES. I do. I have met him.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You have met him a great many times, have you not?

Mr. BARNES. Probably so.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator read the next question and answer?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did he talk with you about this?

Mr. BARNES. No. So far as I recall, I did not see Mr. Cody during that entire time. I was not in my office and he was not in Washington that I saw.

Mr. President, let us see exactly the character of the errand-boy's services which were being performed by Mr. Cody in the matter of this campaign. Mr. Jay G. Hayden was the Washington correspondent of the Detroit News, a man of wide experience as a newspaper man and in the political activities in the State of Michigan. Mr. Cody came down here to Washington in the fall of 1917 for the purpose of securing Mr. Hayden to take the place which was eventually taken by Mr. King. I read from the bill of exceptions at page 58 the testimony of Mr. Hayden:

I was located at Lansing in connection with reporting the session of 1911, the special session of 1912, and the session of 1913. I know the defendants, Truman H. Newberry, Paul King, Allan Templeton, and Frederick Cody. I have known Mr. Cody for seven or eight years. In December, 1917, when I was located at Washington as correspondent of the Detroit News, I had seen Mr. Newberry several times; I do not know that I ever had met him before that time. During the same month, just before Christmas, I had a conversation with Mr. Cody in the press gallery of the United States Senate. Mr. Cody said that he came representing Truman H. Newberry. He said that Mr. Newberry was considering becoming a candidate for United States Senator. He said that he had told Mr. Newberry that I was the man that he should secure as campaign manager. He said Mr. Newberry told him that he did not know me, but that he would like to have him come and talk with George Miller, and if George Miller agreed with him to go and see him. Mr. Miller was at that time the Washington correspondent of the Detroit News and I was his associate in the office. Mr. Cody said that he had been to see Mr. Miller, and that Mr. Miller had agreed that if they could get me I would be a good man for the job. I told him that I did not want the job; that I had been offered campaign jobs before, and that I did not think they were worth much; that for a newspaper man they filled a very short period of time; that particularly for a political reporter he got identified with one faction in politics, and it always hurt him with every other faction afterwards when he tried to return to the newspaper-reporting game, and further than that, just at that time the United States was at war and we were entering upon some of the greatest events that had ever been reported by a newspaper reporter in the history of the world, and I was not particularly anxious to leave the newspaper business just then. He said that he thought it might be arranged so that I would be taken care of after the campaign was over, if I wanted it that way. We talked at some length about the possibilities of Mr. Newberry as a candidate. He mentioned to me that they had been in communication with certain men in Michigan. I can not remember whether he said they had been to New York, or that he had talked with them in Michigan, or they had written or what, but I remember the four names that were mentioned—Mr. Burt Cady, Mr. Clark, Mr. Peterman, of Calumet, who is Gov. Sleeper's banking partner at Bad Axe, and Mr. Roger Andrews, of Menominee. He said that those gentlemen were all for Mr. Newberry and had urged him to become a candidate for Senator; that they had also had some talk with Gov. Sleeper, but that there was some doubt as to whether Gov. Sleeper was going to support Mr. Newberry. Mr. Cody at some time in the conversation mentioned the sum of $500 a month as compensation that might be paid me. In this same conversation he said that he thought the matter of compensation could be satisfactorily arranged if I saw fit to take the job. Mr. Cody came up about 2 o'clock in the afternoon and he stayed until he just had time to catch his train, shortly after 4 o'clock. I don't know that Mr. Cody said anything specifically about money in the campaign during the conversation. He mentioned the fact that Mr. Newberry was very wealthy. He stated Mr. Newberry wanted me to come to New York to see him. I told him that I didn't have time to go to New York; that we were very busy in Washington, and I said to him, "Mr. Newberry probably will be in Washington some of these days in connection with his Navy job. I would be glad to talk with him." He said that Mr. Newberry wanted to advise with me respecting the campaign, whether I took the job or not; that they were not going to take no for an answer, and that I would hear from him again.

After that, on the last Friday of 1917, Mr. Cody called me on the telephone. He said that Mr. Newberry was tied up in his Navy job in New York and it was absolutely impossible for him to come to Washington, and that he was very anxious to see me, and asked me if I could not come over the following afternoon, Saturday afternoon, and see Mr. Newberry on Sunday. I finally told him I would come. He said he would reserve a room for me at the Biltmore Hotel. I left Saturday afternoon and got into New York at 1 o'clock on Sunday morning and went to the Biltmore Hotel, where a room had been reserved for me. Mr. Cody came to the hotel 10 or 11 o'clock the next morning. I met him in the lobby. Afterwards we went up to my room, where we had a conversation. Mr. Cody said that they were still very anxious that I take the position of campaign manager.

This was the errand boy, Senators will remember, about whom we were told.

We talked at some length again about the campaign in a general way. I can not distinguish at this time very clearly the exact conversations that occurred in Washington and New York with Mr. Cody. I can not recollect anything particular. Mr. Cody said several times that he thought the matter of compensation could be arranged. I can not remember that there was anything more said about the question of money in the campaign. After this conversation at the Biltmore Hotel we went out to Mr. Cody's residence to dinner. After that we drove to the Gotham Hotel, where Mr. Newberry had his residence. There we saw Mr. Newberry. A conversation ensued in his apartment, in the course of which Mr. Newberry said that he had been urged to run for United States Senator. He said that I had been suggested to him as a man who should be associated with the campaign. He said he realized that the position for the mere term of the campaign was not very desirable, but that he expected that Theodore Roosevelt would be a candidate for President in 1920, and that he wanted to take a greater interest in politics than he had in the past for a period to and including that campaign, and that he needed a political secretary to look after his interests. I told him, as I had told Mr. Cody, that I could not consider the proposition. Then Mr. Newberry said that in any event he was anxious that I apprise him with respect to the campaign. I told him that I was not in a position to advise him as to whether or not he should run for United States Senator, but that so far as I had any information on the Michigan situation, I would be very glad to give it to him. He talked about various phases of the campaign. I remember, for one thing, that I called his attention to the fact that all the candidates for leading State offices in recent years had been nominated on the Republican ticket by less than 60,000 votes, and that the Republican registration of the city of Detroit was a great deal more than that number. I said that there was no question but that a Detroit candidate could be elected Senator almost from Detroit support alone, if he could only get that support from Detroit; that no man had ever had the united support of the Detroit people that I knew of, and I suggested to him that if I was going to run for Senator, the first thing I would do would be to try to get the united support of all of the various factions in Detroit. He asked me how that could be done, and I told him he should see the various political leaders.

Bear in mind that this was the man who is said to have had no part in the campaign at all.

I mentioned particularly Mayor Marx as the head of the city Republican organization, and Milton Oakman, who was at that time county clerk and the head of the county Republican organization, and I mentioned these two men as the two most potent political factors in the Republican Party in Detroit. I mentioned a great many other men in the course of the conversation. I said to Mr. Newberry that one of the great obstacles to his candidacy would be the fact that he was little known in the State of Michigan. I remarked to him that I doubted if a thousand people in the State had ever seen him. I said that the only way that I could see that that could be overcome would be by a personal campaign. He said that was utterly out of the question; that he could not make a personal campaign; that he was tied up on his Navy job. We had quite an extended discussion of that phase of the matter, Mr. Cody saying that he thought the fact that Mr. Newberry was in New York in the Government service would serve to overcome any disadvantage he might have from not being in the State. I said to Mr. Newberry, "If you permit me to offer one word of personal advice, do not attempt to make a barrel campaign in Michigan. In the first place, I think it is against the law; in the second place, I think it is against the spirit of the times." It had been my observation in politics that most of the money which is spent in campaigns is wasted; that a man who sells his vote very rarely delivers. Mr. Newberry said he agreed with that entirely; that if he could not get the senatorship without a large expenditure of money he did not want it. He mentioned specifically the Mitchell campaign in New York and the Herrick campaign in Ohio as two campaigns in which he said large sums of money had been spent and, he thought, most of it wasted.

Mr. Cody said he did not expect to take an active part in the campaign in Michigan; that he, of course, would be connected with the campaign, but working from New York. I left Mr. Newberry's residence to catch the 4 or 4:30 train for Washington; something like that. After that time I was never spoken to about the management of the campaign by either Mr. Cody or Newberry—that is, no request was made to me to manage the campaign. Mr. Cody told me that if I took this position, they wanted a man to go to Detroit and establish headquarters and take charge of the campaign in Michigan.

Bear in mind, "they wanted a man."

Mr. Cody said they wanted to pay my expenses. He had engaged a room at the Biltmore Hotel, and, as I remember it, paid for it. He also arranged with the porter to get me a ticket for the return journey, and I think he gave me in cash the amount of the fare over.

During the conversation at the Gotham, either Mr. Newberry, or Mr. Cody in Mr. Newberry's presence, said that he had communicated with Messrs. Cady, Clark, Peterman, and Andrews, and some circumstances of the negotiation they had had with these men and with Gov. Sleeper were repeated. I can not say whether it was in Washington or in New York that Mr. Cody stated that Mr. Newberry was very wealthy; he related to me the important interests Mr. Newberry had, and he said Mrs. Newberry was with her husband. He said Mrs. Newberry was the daughter of Mr. Barnes who had been the head of the Barnes School Book Co. which had been consolidated into the American School Book Co., and that Mrs. Newberry and her brother controlled the American School Book Co. I do not think there was anything further in that connection.

Let us trace a little further the activities of this messenger boy. He went out to Michigan shortly after that and was present at a meeting at Port Huron, the details of which are reported in the record, as appears from the testimony of Mr. Andrews, beginning on page 478, as follows:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Andrews, did you have some connection with the senatorial primary contest in 1918?

Mr. ANDREWS. I did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who got you to interest yourself in that?

Mr. ANDREWS. I think the matter was first called to my attention by either Gov. Sleeper or Mr. Cady, of Port Huron, early in 1917.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is not the man who has been referred to here as Cady, is it?

Mr. MURFIN. No. Mr. Cady is the State chairman.

Mr. ANDREWS. He was a member of the governor's staff, and the governor came up there, I think, in August.

Senator POMERENE. Who was the governor?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Sleeper. There was some trouble in Gogebic County with Socialists, and some of the members of the staff went up there with the State militia. My recollection is that that was the first time it was called to my attention.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Newberry was not a candidate at that time?

Mr. ANDREWS. No; but his name was discussed.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I mean who got you to interest yourself in Mr. Newberry's candidacy?

Mr. ANDREWS. I think possibly I got myself. The first talk was on this trip up to the upper peninsula, which is almost a State of its own, and in conferring about the coming candidacy for senatorial contests I became interested in the candidacy of Senator Newberry.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Now, Mr. Andrews, you went either to Chicago or Detroit or New York with these people in connection with this candidacy, did you not?

Mr. ANDREWS. Later on; yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. When was that?

Mr. ANDREWS. I first went to a meeting at Port Huron.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who was present at that meeting?

Mr. ANDREWS. The governor and members of his staff, with the exception of Col. Fred Green.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. They were not any of them out for Newberry at that time?

Mr. ANDREWS. They were all out for Newberry, except the governor.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. All out for Newberry?

Mr. ANDREWS. They were all favorable to Newberry. I do not know whether they were out for him.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. What date was that?

Mr. ANDREWS. Early in October.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. 1917?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Newberry was not publicly mentioned as a candidate at that time at all, was he?

Mr. ANDREWS. I do not know, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You do not know?

Mr. ANDREWS. No, sir.

Senator POMERENE. What date was that?

Mr. ANDREWS. I think it was October 3, 1917.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. When was the first time that any person got you to go in for Newberry personally, not to discuss generally whom you would have for Senator, but for Newberry?

Mr. ANDREWS. Well, I think the date of this Port Huron meeting. The governor had already tendered Mr. Newberry his support, the report was, and the members of his staff were favorable at that time to the candidacy of Senator Newberry.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. In October, 1917?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes; October 3, I think it was.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. When did you first meet Fred Cady in respect to this candidacy?

Mr. ANDREWS. At that meeting.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He was at that meeting?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That is the gentleman from New York, Fred Cady.

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did he organize that meeting?

Mr. ANDREWS. No; he did not. He was not at the first part of the meeting. The governor bucked on the proposition, so Mr. Cady was not called in until after the governor had left.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Where was Cady then?

Mr. ANDREWS. I do not know.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How long did the meeting last?

Mr. ANDREWS. Probably 15 minutes; maybe longer.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. When was he called in?

Mr. ANDREWS. After the governor had left.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The same day?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Cady was waiting there in Port Huron, then?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. That was in October, 1917?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You kept Cady outside to see what the governor would say first? Is that the idea?

Mr. ANDREWS. I did not keep him anywhere.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I mean the meeting kept him outside to see what the governor would say about it?

Mr. ANDREWS. The matter was discussed as to who the friends of the governor would favor for Senator, on the presumption that the governor had already declared himself in favor of Commander Newberry. At that meeting the governor stated that he thought best to keep out of the contest, and on that account Mr. Cady, who had, I understood, invited Mr. Cady there, did not call him in.

That was October, 1917. On the following page we find Mr. Cady again active in this matter. I read:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. When did you next meet Mr. Cady about the matter?

Mr. ANDREWS. I think—

It will be borne in mind that it was in the month of December he was endeavoring to get Hayden to act as manager of the campaign.

Mr. ANDREWS. I think it was in December or January. I am not sure.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Whereabouts?

Mr. ANDREWS. Either in Chicago or Detroit.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who arranged that meeting?

Mr. ANDREWS. I do not know. There was correspondence going forward with Cady and Cady and myself.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was Cady present?

Mr. ANDREWS. I think not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was Cady present?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did he telegraph you to meet him in Chicago or Detroit, as the case might be?

Mr. ANDREWS. It seems to me that the meeting was in Detroit. I am not clear on that.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You have no recollection of Mr. Cady being there?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Cady? No.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Nobody but Mr. Cady and you?

Mr. ANDREWS. That is all.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You two?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That was relating to the candidacy of Mr. Newberry, was it?

Mr. ANDREWS. We discussed the candidacy of Mr. Newberry.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Devising ways and means?

Mr. ANDREWS. No; I would not say that.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I do not mean raising money, but putting you forward as a candidate.

Mr. ANDREWS. I presume that was what we discussed.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Had he at that time declared himself as a candidate at all?

Mr. ANDREWS. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you have a meeting at Chicago before he announced himself as a candidate?

Mr. ANDREWS. Well, I had been in correspondence with Senator Newberry; in fact, I wrote Senator Newberry after the Port Huron meeting and explained what I thought was a fiasco with reference to the governor and gave him the best opinion I could of what his friends thought in the Upper Peninsula.

Senator POMERENE. I missed that statement.

Mr. ANDREWS. I wrote Senator Newberry a letter giving him the best information I had with reference to the situation in the Upper Peninsula, which is removed from the Lower Peninsula. We had to go through three States to get to Detroit.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. The date of the letter is what we want.

Mr. MURFIN. Have you a copy of the letter?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MURFIN. Let the committee have it.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. If either side wants it; if not, we will just take the date of it.

Mr. ANDREWS. The date is November 17, 1917.

Then Mr. Cady had another meeting with those people out in Michigan, recorded, as I have already called to your attention, at page 413 of the record in the testimony of Mr. Templeton when Mr. Templeton first met him.

That these were not barely casual or accidental meetings, Mr. Cady being around in the discharge of his duties as agent for the American Book Co., but that they were specifically arranged is disclosed by the following telegram from Mr. Cady to Mr. Andrews:

New York, January 11, 1918.

ROGER ANDREWS,
Menominee, Mich.:

Can you possibly arrange to meet me in Detroit any time week of January 21 instead of the Chicago appointment? All the clippings and information you want is at parties' Detroit office. Talked with Burt last night. He will be out January 15, and thinks we should all meet in Detroit. The Detroit people will be here Saturday and Sunday, and we can bring them in Detroit conference. You could probably meet Clark at that time. Teddy received two very appealing letters this week, one from a distinguished Northern Peninsula man, one from your honorable Senator, both hailing him as the great savior. Nothing doing, however. Treat this information very confidential.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Where is that telegram found?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is found at page 372 of the bill of exceptions. This telegram from Cady to Roger Andrews needs a little explanation. The "distinguished Northern Peninsula man," of course, was Gov. Osborn, and "your honorable Senator" was, of course, the Hon. William Alden Smith, both of whom were candidates or prospective candidates against Mr. Newberry at the primaries. Both of those gentlemen, it appeared, had written appealing letters to Col. Roosevelt asking his aid in their campaigns. Of course, Mr. Roosevelt must have communicated that information to Commander Newberry, and Commander Newberry must have communicated that confidential information to Mr. Cady, and Mr. Cady writes that, so far as Col. Roosevelt is concerned, there is nothing doing, and he arranges for the Detroit meeting.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, in order to identify this man, may I inquire of the Senator if this is the same Cady referred to in the brief as the messenger boy?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The same man; the errand boy. Let us pursue further the activities of Mr. Cady, the messenger boy. He had an important meeting in New York, of course, on the occasion of Mr. King's interview with Commander Newberry. He was there to receive Mr. King; he made all the arrangements for accommodating him at the hotel, he paid his hotel bill, he procured his transportation for him, and he ac-accompanied him to Senator Newberry's quarters and there participated in all the discussions, the story of which has already been read.

But he had a meeting in New York a little later on, the importance of which is so signal that I again turn to the bill of exceptions, at page 66, where I read from the testimony of James Sweinhart. We are following Cody down to the time that eventually Mr. Templeton became active in the committee through the instigation of Mr. Cody, and Mr. King became the manager of the so-called committee in much the same way. Mr. Sweinhart testified:

In January, 1918, I had a conversation with Mr. Cody in reference to Mr. Hayden. Mr. Cody first told me that Mr. Newberry had invited Mr. Hayden over and that they were going to employ Mr. Hayden as the manager in Michigan. He asked me what chance I thought that they would get Mr. Hayden to be their manager. I told them that I thought he had very little chance and stated my reasons therefor; then he said that Mr. Newberry would make Mr. Hayden such a financially advantageous offer that he could not afford to reject it.

I am acquainted with Mr. Robert Oakman, of Detroit. Mr. Oscar Marx, who was former mayor of Detroit, and Edward T. Fitzgerald, also of Detroit. I saw these men in New York in January, 1918, at the Hotel Biltmore. At the time I saw them they were seated at a table in the lounging room next to the bar, together with the defendant Cody and two other men.

Here are the distinguished politicians of the State of Michigan down in the city of New York at the bar and Mr. Cody with them.

I had a talk with Mr. Cody at that time. This was the first time I had ever met Mr. Cody, and he expressed some delight in meeting me because of my newspaper work in Michigan. After we had chatted about half an hour on things in general they stood up to go, and as they stood up to go Mr. Cody sort of took me by the arm and led me back through the room to where there is a kind of a cushioned seat, where we seated ourselves, the others remaining at the table. After some conversation we saw the other people were moving away, so we got up to go down the hall, and he said to me, "What do you think about Truman Newberry as a senatorial candidate?" I said, "He would make a mighty good candidate, very good candidate," and we went on down to the table, and he called the attention of the gentlemen there present to the fact that I thought Mr. Newberry would make a splendid candidate, and something was said there to the effect that they thought so too; and that was all the political conversation we had that day. Before we moved out to where the other gentlemen were sitting, and as we moved down toward these others, he said—

That is, Cody said—

"It will be a great time for the boys in Michigan, because they will spend a barrel of money."

Subsequently, on the Sunday before he sailed for Europe, I saw Mr. Fitzgerald upstairs in the Biltmore, in the room occupied by Mayor Marx and Mr. Robert Oakman. After being there a little while he and I left. On our return, about half an hour later, as we stepped out of the elevator we met Commander Newberry face to face coming away from the room of Mayor Marx and Mr. Oakman, which was near the elevator. Mr. Newberry was in naval uniform and Mr. Robert Oakman and Mr. Marx were saying good-by to him, and then we got out and said good day, or something like that. My newspaper work took me to Mr. Newberry's office at 280 Broadway very frequently from the time he came from the Brooklyn Navy Yard and opened the office there until the 10th of September following. After I met the defendant Cody my visits to Mr. Newberry's office were frequent, but they were not at all regular; some days I would be there twice, sometimes two or three times a week, and then there might be 10 days or 2 weeks when I was not there at all. It all depended upon the instructions of my office to go and get some particular information. On the occasion of those visits I saw the defendant Cody very frequently in Mr. Newberry's office. Sometimes other people were there, sometimes not. Very often when I went Mr. Cody would be there, or possibly I might have gone there and while I was there he would come in. There was an opening there, a sort of a gate that you had to pass through, as you could not go through until you had permission from the inner office. There were several occasions when I went there with Mr. Cody, and on those occasions we went right through. I would not say I found Mr. Cody present with Mr. Newberry every time I was there, but the majority of times that I went to the office Mr. Cody was there or came in while I was there. Mr. Newberry and I frequently discussed the senatorial campaign in Michigan, regardless of the business I went there on. I inquired about the campaign, how it was going. He said, from time to time, speaking generally, that he had had communications from Mr. King telling him the campaign was going very well indeed; that prominent men in all parts of the State were coming out for him, and he had an impression that the campaign was going very good. I remember once that he mentioned that almost daily he got either a telephone message or a night letter. I remember he showed me one night letter in which something was said about some prominent politician coming down to New York and he should show him whatever courtesies he thought fitting because of his influence in the State. I do not remember who the telegram was from; it seems to me it was from Mr. King. When Mr. Newberry told me that he got the communications almost daily I do not remember that he named anyone specifically or the party from whom he received communications. I should say that he said that he was kept posted almost daily either by telephone message or letter or telegram, night lettergram, something like that, and that he knew that prominent men all over the State were coming out for him, because the organization in Detroit had told him so. Mr. Cody was sometimes present at these conversations that I had with Mr. Newberry. I remember one specific conversation I had with Mr. Cody in the office of Mr. Newberry. It related to money. It would be early springtime; I can not say when—probably April. There were quite a number of gentlemen present in the office at the time of this conversation, but the conversation was between Mr. Cody and myself, because we stood at some distance from the other parties in the room. As I remember, Mr. Cody said he had been out there and he understood that the lid was off and the sky was the limit as far as expenditures were concerned.

Let me read just another passage from the testimony of Mr. Sweinhart:

During this period I am talking about Mr. Cody once escorted Mr. Stage, of the Grand Rapids Press, to Mr. Newberry's office. Mr. Cody came to my office one day about the 1st of February and he told me that they were hoping to get Mr. Paul King as manager of the campaign, and they hoped to have Mr. Allan Templeton head what they were going to call a representative citizens' committee, that would sort of give a prestige to the campaign, and then they also hoped to get Mr. Frank W. Blair as the treasurer; and I should say it was about a week, possibly two weeks, later than that that he was at my office again, and he told me definitely that these men had been secured, Mr. King as manager, Mr. Blair as the treasurer, and Mr. Templeton as the executive, or as the head, of this representative committee, and that these men had been specifically appointed by Mr. Newberry; that is, that they had been secured at his personal request.

I invite your attention to this language:

Mr. Cody came to my office one day about the 1st of February, and he told me that they were hoping to get Mr. Paul King as manager of the campaign, and they hoped to have Mr. Allan Templeton head what they were going to call a representative citizens' committee, that would sort of give a prestige to the campaign.

Who are "they" about whom Mr. Cody, the errand boy, is talking?

Mr. President, Mr. Cody had prior to this time made a trip all over the State of Michigan and canvassed the entire State, as disclosed by the testimony appearing in the record at page 556, from which I read as follows:

[Western Union telegram.]

DETROIT, MICH., 13.

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY,
Hotel Gotham, New York, N. Y.:

Have spent past two days in conference with Cody men from out in the State and city. Everyone thinks, including Frank Blair, that Paul King quite necessary. King will be in New York Saturday and Sunday this week; Mr. Blair next week. Report satisfactory progress.

A. A. TEMPLETON.

Observe, Mr. President, he says "have spent past two days in conference with Cody men from out in the State." What is meant by "Cody men"? "Cody men" evidently means men who, in Mr. Cody's campaign through the State, have pledged themselves in one way or another to support the candidacy of Mr. Newberry.

Bear in mind before King goes to New York at all Templeton wires Newberry that they all think King necessary in order to conduct the campaign; but why should they say that to Newberry, except for the purpose of getting Mr. Newberry's approval of the selection of King? Otherwise the telegram is utterly meaningless.

Mr. President, it is a matter of no consequence as to whether Mr. Templeton was a mere errand boy, such as you might hire to throw dodgers into the doors of the citizens telling about a public meeting or that you might hire to hand out cards to people promiscuously on the streets, or whether he was the agent of Truman H. Newberry carrying on this campaign, as all of the testimony and correspondence disclosed beyond a question of doubt; it does not make any difference whether he is one thing or the other; if he was an errand boy, whose errand boy was he other than Truman H. Newberry's errand boy?

Mr. President, I have discussed how Templeton came to be chairman. He does not say how it happened. King just put his name to letterheads as chairman of the committee; nobody ever elected him to that place; nobody otherwise ever appointed him to that place.

The next man was Blair, the treasurer. Blair was asked by Templeton to act as treasurer, as disclosed by the record at page 388. This was the testimony given by him before the grand jury, and read at the hearing of the Grand Rapids case:

Q. Mr. Blair was a witness—Mr. Frank Blair was a witness before the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The same question was propounded to him and the same answer made that you have spoken of with reference to the others?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then he was sworn, and did he testify?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Please read your notes of Mr. Blair's testimony.—A. Frank W. Blair said that he resided in the city of Detroit and was president of the Union Trust Co., of that city. He stated that Truman H. Newberry was a large stockholder in the Union Trust Co. He said that in the spring of 1918 he was asked by Allen Templeton to become treasurer of the Newberry senatorial committee, and that he did become treasurer.

He, too, Mr. President, acted perfunctorily; the fact about the matter is that he contributed but $100 to Newberry's campaign fund, and that was the extent of his interest in it as measured upon a financial basis.

Now, who are the other members of this so-called committee? There was a man by the name of Floyd who was a member. Every other member of the committee was a hired and paid agent working on a salary. I have referred to Floyd. King secured him, as appears by the bill of exceptions at page 686.

He writes to Commander Newberry under date of March 7, 1918, as follows:

MARCH 7, 1918.

DEAR MR. NEWBERRY: This has been another busy day. I have secured the services of Mr. Charles A. Floyd, a former business associate in Grand Rapids, an A No. 1 young man, well acquainted throughout the State and very popular in handling the work of field secretary. I am sending him out in the State to-night, and he will confer with leaders in Ottawa County to-morrow, Ionia County Friday, Kent County Saturday and Sunday, reporting here Monday. I think we are very fortunate in getting him, as he is just the type of young man we need. He has had to make some sacrifice in a business way, but the people with whom he is connected were good enough to let us have him for the campaign.

I have also dispatched a man to go to the largest cities of the State and talk with the labor people. My idea is to form this month in each county the nucleus of a Newberry committee. These people will be asked to circulate the petitions next month, and we will use the names of signers as new members of our organization. I want to get thorough township and ward organizations in each county. Before we get through I am sure we will get them.

I find that the clipping was inadvertently omitted from my last letter last evening and am inclosing it herewith. Please pardon the oversight.

Sincerely, yours,

PAUL H. KING.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. To whom is King writing the letter which the Senator from Montana has just read?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That letter was written from Detroit to Commander Newberry in New York, telling him that he is going to get Floyd to associate himself in the campaign.

Mr. KING. Why did he ask pardon for an oversight if he was running the campaign and Mr. Newberry knew nothing about it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. He was writing for the approval of Mr. Newberry, and Mr. Newberry gave the approval as appears from the record at page 514. I continue the quotation from Mr. King's testimony:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. King, we were calling your attention to Mr. Newberry's activities in his own campaign when you last were testifying. You reported to him your employment of Mr. Floyd, did you not?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. As secretary?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And he approved of it?

Mr. KING. I believe he did.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you tell him the compensation you were paying Mr. Floyd?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or that you were not paying him anything, or anything about it?

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you report to him that you were sending field men over the State?

Mr. KING. I think I did. I think the record shows it.

The fact about the matter is that Mr. Floyd got no compensation, at least so far as the record discloses; in fact, it says that he did not; but it is also a fact that immediately after the campaign he went over to Detroit and accepted a position paying $10,000 with Henry B. Joy, the brother-in-law of Truman H. Newberry. All of the other members of this so-called committee were merely paid employees under King. I read in reference to one Hopkins, said to be a member of this committee, from the bill of exceptions, at page 667, of the record of the testimony of Mr. King given in the Grand Rapids trial:

I think Mr. Hopkins and I discussed in a general way what could be done in the way of publicity—making Mr. Newberry acquainted with the voters of the State. As a result of that conference, I engaged Mr. Hopkins to go to work for this committee; he was to be director of publicity, as we called it, and I arranged to give him a salary. I think it was $500 a month. He stated to me that he had received that amount in the previous national campaign under Mr. Frank Hitchcock, and that he thought he ought to have as much in the State campaign, with which I agreed. He started to work within a few days.

Mr. Phillips was another man said to be a member of the committee, likewise a paid employee, as will appear from the next page of the bill of exceptions—page 668:

The next man that became connected with the publicity department was Mr. Thomas P. Phillips, whom I have known for a number of years. He had been connected with the Detroit News. I think, as you might say, the assistant to Mr. E. G. Pipp, then the editor of the News, and I had talked with him a number of times about helping me. I think his salary was $100 a week. These three were the publicity men at the headquarters. I saw all of their advertisements, and I wrote some of them. Most of them were blue penciled, more or less, by me, and some I wrote myself. I mean I would blue pencil their advertisements or O. K. their suggestions, or occasionally write advertisements myself. I would write them wherever I might happen to be. I remember one was written in an automobile going from Hastings to Battle Creek to catch a train, about 40 miles an hour, and finished on a big truck on the platform at Battle Creek. That advertisement was afterwards used. These advertisements were run in practically every newspaper in Michigan.

Mr. President, that is the committee; those are the business associates and friends of Mr. Newberry who organized and conducted this campaign, and that is the way they were chosen.

Now I address myself as a lawyer to a body of lawyers, and ask whose agent was Paul H. King? Who was the principal back of Paul H. King when he contracted these large items of indebtedness out through the State? Who was obligated to pay if he was unable or unwilling to do so? I submit, Mr. President, to the learned Senator from Missouri, who has an honorable and creditable career as a judge in his State, if a lawsuit were pending before him by one of the newspapers that had carried this advertising matter and not been paid for it and Truman H. Newberry was sued as having authorized the contracting of that indebtedness, how could he escape the obligation to pay it?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. The question of the Senator from Montana is a fair one. If Truman H. Newberry was responsible or could have been responsible for any item of expense in connection with the campaign, if it had not been paid, his liability is clear; but I call the attention of the Senator, whose mind is made up upon this matter and who is trying to prove his side of the case, I call his attention as a lawyer, if I may further trespass upon his time, that when he starts out with evidence he says Mr. Hayden said that Mr. Cody said that Mr. Miller said that Hayden would be a good man, and then attempts to connect that three-ply hearsay evidence with Truman H. Newberry. He starts out with Cody and he tells here and there a thing that Cody did, but he does not bring home by any competent evidence a single thing that was done wrongfully or improperly to the door of Truman H. Newberry.

I submit to the Senator from Montana that if he were on the bench he would have to find that the only men liable for any expenditures in that campaign were the voluntary committee who incurred them, who hired King, who were back of him, and who, according to their own testimony, if it is to be believed—and every one of them was a man of honor and character and integrity—did not have the source of their appointment in Truman H. Newberry, nor had he any control over their action.

I call the attention of the Senator from Montana for a moment. There were two striking instances of control. Paul H. King said, "We must get back of a Democratic candidate in the Democratic primary." The testimony shows that when in some way the attention of Truman H. Newberry was called to that matter he said, "We must keep out of it. Nothing ought to be done in it." What was done in it? Whose voice controlled? Whose hand guided? From the beginning to the end of it the guiding mind was that of Paul H. King, and the control of it was his; and Newberry, in New York, had nothing to do with it, except that information was given to him from time to time of the state of the campaign and as to what was going on; for he was, after all, the candidate himself.

Senators can make up their minds, if they like, and support them by inferences and suspicions; but you can not put your finger on this record to a single witness who under oath testifies that a dollar of Truman H. Newberry's money was spent.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there? Has the Senator, in the fervor of his eulogy of his own witnesses, forgotten that the record shows that Truman H. Newberry wrote a letter and said, "Publicity! Full speed ahead with your publicity, and you will drive out the opponents"? Has the Senator forgotten that letter?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not recall it.

Mr. ASHURST. It is in the record.

Mr. SPENCER. I have no doubt it is, if the Senator from Arizona says so.

Mr. ASHURST. How can a man order "full speed ahead," "publicity to drive out my opponents," and then say "I had nothing to do with it"? How would the Senator, as a judge, get around that letter? Let him answer the question of the Senator from Montana, rather than eulogize his witnesses.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator from Arizona, who is a fair man, will look at that list of contributors—

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will look at Truman Newberry's letter, I will look at the list of witnesses.

Mr. SPENCER. I have looked at the letter. I will read it again if it pleases the Senator from Arizona; but here was the list of every man who gave to that campaign. It was all the money that was raised, and we brought before us the men who gave by far the larger amount in the aggregate. We brought every one of them before us. They were men of the highest standing. They were men with whom any Senator on this floor would have been glad to associate, socially or financially or industrially, and every man of them gave his testimony, and he told exactly why he gave the money, and how he gave it; and in the face of the most careful examination upon the other side every one of them testified that the gift arose without any solicitation, knowledge, or participation of Truman H. Newberry.

With those facts before Senators, acting under oath as judges, how can you substitute for those facts what is at the best nothing but an inference, because there is not a word in that letter that says that he either did give or that he did solicit? It is an inference which the Senator from Arizona draws; and I submit—

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SPENCER. May I finish this sentence?—and I submit that it is an unfair thing, when a man's honor and life, so far as honor is concerned, are at stake, to substitute a suspicion and an inference for a sworn fact about which there is no contradiction in the testimony.

Mr. ASHURST. I am neither substituting inferences for facts nor attempting to do so, and the man who in a case of this kind on either side would attempt to do so should be scourged from this Chamber. Let the Senator prove that the letter urging "full speed ahead," "publicity to drive out my opponents," is a forgery; then he can appeal to us.

Do honest men write letters like this? This is not what somebody said Newberry said, not what somebody said Paul King said Newberry said, but what Newberry said. He is charged with having spent too much money. In writing, he writes back and says: "Here is a copy of my noncommittal reply. How do you think I have evaded this question? Have I not done it pretty well?"

Do honest men write letters like that? "Do you think I have evaded the question well? What do you think of my noncommittal reply, where I am charged with having spent too much money?"

Do honest men say that? That is a letter that he sent. "What do you think of my noncommittal and flimsy reply?"

Ah, do not talk about insinuations, do not talk about substituting insinuations for facts, until you explain or excuse this attempt to excuse their own noncommittal and flimsy replies.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not deny the letter. It is nothing more than I have done in my own campaign.

Mr. ASHURST. No, no, no, Mr. President.

Mr. SPENCER. Just a moment.

Mr. ASHURST. I deny it. The Senator from Missouri was never charged with illegal expenditure of money, and if he were so charged he would not make a noncommittal reply.

Mr. SPENCER. May I answer the Senator now? Of course, a candidate was interested in his campaign. Of course, a candidate wanted them to go "full steam ahead." Of course, a candidate wanted everything done that could be honestly done to promote his candidacy. If there was any man in Michigan to whom such a letter could have been sent, he would have been a fool if he did not send it. Of course, he wanted everything to be done to promote his candidacy. I admit the letter. We were talking about who gave the money.

The Senator from Montana asked me if any man who had performed any service or made any publication in that campaign had not been paid, whom could he hold liable? The Senator from Montana reached the conclusion in his question, "Could he not have held Senator Newberry liable?" I admit that the test was a fair one. If Senator Newberry was back of that money, of course he was liable; and then I proceeded to show how every dollar of the amount had been contributed independently and voluntarily by others, eliminating any liability on the part of Senator Newberry.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. If Mr. Newberry had no interest in the financing of his campaign, what has been the explanation of his telephone conversation with Smith, testified to by Smith under oath, that he was vigorously protesting against the repeated transfer of funds from other Newberry accounts to the account of his brother John?

Mr. SPENCER. There was no telegram.

Mr. GLASS. I said "telephone conversation."

Mr. SPENCER. No; there was no telegram from Senator Newberry to Smith.

Mr. GLASS. I did not say "telegram"; I said "telephone conversation."

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. Smith did testify that he had had a telephone conversation with Senator Newberry, precisely as the Senator says—it has been repeated over and over again in this debate—

Mr. GLASS. I am asking for an explanation of it.

Mr. SPENCER. And that Senator Newberry, so Mr. Smith said, was concerned about the question of balances in his office. Of course, he was interested in the campaign; and I am perfectly free to admit to the Senator that any man who knew that a campaign as extended in publicity as he must have known was being carried on in Michigan must have known that it was costing a great deal of money. There can not be any doubt about that. The point that we were discussing with the Senator from Montana was, who gave the money? If Truman Newberry gave a dollar of it, may I say to the Senator, or if he solicited a dollar of it from the men who gave it, then Truman Newberry is a perjurer, and every man who testified before the committee on that point is a perjurer, for every one of them, under oath, denied any such fact. How can the Senator get away from that?

Mr. GLASS. The point about which I am inquiring is this: If Mr. Newberry had no interest in the financing of his campaign, if he had no knowledge of it and no pecuniary interest in it, why should he have exercised himself to protest over the long-distance telephone to his confidential agent against the repeated transfers of money from the various Newberry accounts to that particular account which was financing the campaign?

Mr. SPENCER. It is a perfectly fair inference, and if it stood alone it would need full explanation. We have not now got what that telephone conversation was.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; we have.

Mr. SPENCER. No; because Mr. Smith said, if the Senator has it before him, that he could not remember definitely.

Mr. GLASS. But Mr. Smith says very explicitly that Mr. Newberry was raising a row at the repeated transfer of funds from the other Newberry accounts to the particular account which was responsible for the financing of the campaign.

Mr. SPENCER. The general idea of the quotation which the Senator makes is undoubtedly true.

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not dispute it at all, and I should not dispute the weight of it if it stood alone. As a matter of fact—I may say to the Senator, as a lawyer, the Senator will know I perhaps have no right to say it—

Mr. GLASS. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. SPENCER. As a matter of fact, Mr. Smith was mistaken in his recollection of that telephone conversation. If we had him now before us, he would state so; but the record does not so state, and we must stand upon the record just as it is, and the record just as it is needs explanation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Probably Mr. Newberry could correct him if he had testified.

Mr. SPENCER. He had forgotten it entirely. If there had been any light he could have given to the committee, undoubtedly it would have been given.

Mr. GLASS. The very definite statement is made here in the testimony of Mr. Smith, under oath, that Mr. Newberry over the long-distance telephone was vigorously complaining about the transfer of funds from the other Newberry accounts to the account of his brother, John S. Newberry, who under oath testified that he was largely financing his brother's campaign.

Mr. SPENCER. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. Now let me ask the Senator a question. He has been a candidate for public office. If he had no pecuniary interest in the expenditures that were being made by his friends exclusively in his behalf, can he conceive that there would be any obligation upon him over a long-distance telephone to a bank official to protest against the transfer of funds from one account to another account? What would be the purpose of any such protest?

Mr. SPENCER. It was not to a bank official; it was to his own confidential man.

Mr. GLASS. Well, to his confidential man. Would the Senator feel any obligation resting upon him to do a thing of that kind if he had no sort of connection with the financing of a campaign?

Mr. SPENCER. I should not say there was any obligation upon him. I should say that without any financial interest in the matter, so far as obligation was concerned, I might well have an interest in what was going on in my own office, in an office in which my accounts were had; and yet I am quite free to say to the Senator that if that were the only testimony, if it stood alone, I am not disputing the inference that the Senator seeks to draw from it. I am asking the Senator as a fair man to put his mind in the shape of a balance, and weigh with all the weight he likes to give it the inference from that fact as it appears in the testimony—

Mr. GLASS. No; I can not—

Mr. SPENCER. Let me finish, please—though I say to him now that the record is not full upon it, to give it all the weight the Senator likes, and then put upon the other side of the balance the sworn testimony of every man connected with it directly and positively, and which way do the scales lean?

Mr. GLASS. And yet, significantly, the evidence disappears, and the man who chiefly could testify disappears.

Mr. SPENCER. Oh, there was no disappearance of evidence. Now, the Senator is not exercising that judicial fairness which has characterized him all his life. There is no evidence that disappeared that was not available for this committee, either through the grand jury or through the petit jury.

Mr. GLASS. Did not the accounts disappear?

Mr. SPENCER. Yes; but they had all been previously subject to examination.

Mr. GLASS. Precisely; and upon the basis of that examination the grand jury acted, and the petit jury acted, and found guilty those charged with the offense.

Mr. SPENCER. What did the petit jury find? First, when the case came before that jury, the judge himself, with all his unfairness and partiality, at the close of it said:

There is no evidence to sustain corruption or bribery or fraud. The fifth count of this indictment shall be stricken out.

And it was. What did that leave to the jury? It left to the jury only two things to decide. One of them was as to whether Truman Newberry, together with 134 other men, had conspired together, to do what? To spend more than $3,750. That was the whole charge.

Mr. GLASS. Then what was the—

Mr. SPENCER. Let me finish the answer, because I am glad the Senator asked me the question. First, the court itself took out of that trial anything which had to do with any wrongdoing by way of bribery or corruption or fraud of any kind, and left to the jury, first, the question which I have just stated to the Senator from Virginia, as to whether or not Truman Newberry was a party to any conspiracy to spend more than $3,750; and, second, as to whether they had used the mails for an illegal or fraudulent purpose. When the jury took the case, they came back and said, "There is not the slightest evidence of any fraud or wrong in connection with the use of the mails." So when the case at Grand Rapids was finished, all that had to be determined, in the minds of that jury, under the guidance and instruction of that judge, who compelled them, was that "Truman H. Newberry and others together did spend, or conspire to spend, more than $3,750 in the senatorial campaign in Michigan." The Senator from Virginia knows, and I do not need to repeat—

Mr. GLASS. The Senator knows perfectly well that the admission of Mr. Newberry himself—

Mr. SPENCER. May I be permitted to finish the sentence, please? The Senator from Virginia knows that when the result of that judge's instructions, which compelled that verdict, came before the Supreme Court of the United States for determination, the Supreme Court held, in language as severe as I have ever seen written in any decision of the Supreme Court, that the interpretation of the law by the judge was wrong.

Mr. GLASS. Other lawyers here say that the Supreme Court held nothing of the kind. I am not a lawyer, and I do not know whether it did or not.

Mr. SPENCER. No lawyer will dispute that the Supreme Court decided as I have stated.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator stresses $3,750. We know perfectly well, by the admission of Newberry himself, that he spent $176,000.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. GLASS. Then why does the Senator stress the $3,750? The fact of the case is that the jury brought in a verdict of guilty.

Mr. SPENCER. Of what?

Mr. GLASS. Guilty of spending money.

Mr. SPENCER. How much?

Mr. GLASS. The Senator himself admits that $176,000 was spent.

Mr. SPENCER. How much did the jury decide that he spent over $3,750?

Mr. GLASS. Why do we deal with the matter in that trivial way? It is not a question of $3,700. The Senator knows that the testimony reveals the fact that it is admitted by the Newberrys that they spent $176,000.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. GLASS. What I am trying to focus attention upon right now is the fact that the jury found the defendant guilty, and it found the defendant guilty upon testimony which has since disappeared and was not available to the Senate committee.

Mr. SPENCER. It was available. That is where the Senator is mistaken, and there is the gist of the whole thing.

Mr. GLASS. I heard the testimony of Smith read yesterday by the Senator from Ohio, and Smith testified that the accounts had disappeared.

Mr. SPENCER. Yes; but everything which transpired in the trial at Grand Rapids, or before the grand jury, was available to our committee, and pages of it were incorporated in our report.

Mr. GLASS. Was the witness who went to Canada available to the committee?

Mr. SPENCER. No; he was not—

Mr. GLASS. Was Senator Newberry available to the committee?

Mr. SPENCER. Let me finish. No; he was not, because the witness to whom the Senator from Virginia is pleased to refer as having gone to Canada was tried, convicted, and sentenced in Michigan while he himself was unconscious in a hospital from the injuries which he had suffered. Take comfort out of that if you like.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; but he occupied no different relation to the case from that of the many other defendants who were not unconscious.

Mr. OVERMAN. Newberry was not unconscious.

Mr. GLASS. Senator Newberry was not unconscious when he declined to come before the committee.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Montana yield for a moment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. KING. In discussing the contributions, or the obligations for the payments of money, by Mr. Newberry, let me call attention to the record, which contains the bill of exceptions, page 651, and I ask the attention of the Senator from Montana to it, where it is stated:

Neither Mr. Templeton, Mr. King, nor Mr. Oakman have ever, or expect ever, to receive one cent (except actual travel and publicity costs) from me.

This is a confidential letter written on April 6, 1918, by Mr. Newberry to George E. Miller, addressed "Dear George," and in this letter he confesses a liability upon his part for all publicity. We know from the statement of the Senator from Missouri, as well as from the record, that a very large sum, perhaps $140,000, was expended for publicity, and Mr. Truman Newberry's own letter, a confidential letter, admits his liability for the publicity campaign.

In connection with that he wrote a letter to Mr. King, on April 4, as follows:

When you have impressed these papers and the public with the certain knowledge that I will continue in the race to a finish, they will then have to decide whether they can beat Mr. Osborn better by urging another candidate to enter beside myself, or whether their best opportunity to beat Osborn would be to concentrate and cooperate with all the most satisfactory publicity that you have already given to me. It seems most probable from what I hear and from what you must know that you have already covered so much ground, that any investigation by those who want to back some one beside myself will certainly show that a division of the opposition to Osborn will certainly result in his election. At the present writing I feel that you have secured for my candidacy what might be described as the inside track for the nomination.

First, we find the statement in which he acknowledges his liability and his promise, direct or implied, to pay the costs of the publicity. We have admissions from the representative of Mr. Newberry that the amount expended for publicity was in excess of $140,000. We find a confidential letter by Mr. Newberry to Mr. King, in which he refers to this most satisfactory publicity, which he had authorized, and the expenses of which he had agreed to pay.

So when it is stated by my friend from Missouri that there is no evidence of the payment of any money, or the assumption of any obligation to pay money by Mr. Newberry, he is not speaking in harmony with the record, but he flies in the teeth of the record.

I thank the Senator from Montana for permitting me to call his attention to this part of the record.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. I doubt the propriety of making a point of no quorum, but I think the fact that there are none so blind as those who will not see, and none so deaf as those who will not hear, is manifest from the attendance of three or four Senators on the other side.

Mr. KING. Let the RECORD show that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is in his seat, that the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] is in his seat, and no other Senator upon the Republican side.

Mr. STANLEY. Two Senators.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is present.

Mr. KING. Yes; I observe the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES].

Mr. WARREN. The Senator should look around a little before he makes such a statement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I recognize the force of the criticism which is indulged so frequently on the other side as to the absence of Senators; but I ask Senators in good faith if there was any better attendance in the Senate when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] addressed the Senate, or if they can remember a time when Senators could be kept in their seats during a speech which consumes hours? I have never known it to be the case since I have been in the Senate. Senators will not remain here during long speeches.

I am not complaining about any speech, however long, made on this subject, but there was quite as good an attendance during the speech of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] as there was during the four or five hours when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] spoke. It may be deplorable, and I think it is, that Senators do not feel it incumbent upon them to remain in their seats, but it is a criticism which does not apply especially to this particular matter.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I had the honor to hear and to enjoy the very ingenious address of the very able Senator from Missouri, and the RECORD will show, if I am not much mistaken, as indicated by interruptions by Democratic Senators on this side, that there were five times as many Democratic Senators actively participating in that debate while the Senator from Missouri was making his defense of Senator Newberry as are now on the other side of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I hope the Senate understands perfectly the reply made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri to the very plain question I addressed to him, as to whether, in the light of evidence to which I have invited the attention of the Senate, if a suit were brought against Truman H. Newberry for any of the advertising placed by King in practically every newspaper in the State of Michigan, there would be any possibility of his escaping the obligation to pay upon the ground that King was his agent.

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator want a reply?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would be very glad to understand the answer of the Senator. Perhaps somebody does; I do not. I have had no reply to the question, so far as I can gather. I would be very glad, however, to try out before any jury in the State of Missouri the question I submitted to the Senator.

Mr. SPENCER. I am very sure the fault must be my own if the Senator did not clearly understand my answer.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think the fault is in the facts.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I will not repeat what may seem clearer to the Senator when he reads it, which doubtless was not made plain through the fault of my own expression, but I do repeat to the Senator and to the Senate that there could have been no liability of any kind, manner, or description on the part of Truman H. Newberry for any indebtedness which Paul King might have incurred; that nothing could have been collected through any court of law from Truman H. Newberry, as the facts set forth in the record conclusively establish.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me for a moment to make a reply to that?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my learned friend the Senator from Missouri says there is no evidence appearing in the record under and by which any person who had an unpaid account for publicity could have recovered a judgment in a court against Truman H. Newberry. Let me read to the Senator a part of a letter dated April 14, 1918, not signed by Truman H. Newberry's agent or attorney, but signed by Truman H. Newberry, in which he said to Mr. King:

I am glad Mr. Warner . . . is scared out for the present, and as long as we keep up our publicity work at full pressure it will be harder and harder for any new man to get any kind of a start that will make it seem worth while for him to be a serious candidate.

That is not signed by Paul King, it is not what somebody said, but it is what Truman H. Newberry wrote. Let me read it again:

I am glad Mr. Warner (three times governor of Michigan) is scared out for the present, and as long as we keep up our publicity work at full pressure it will be harder and harder for any new man to get any kind of a start that will make it seem worth while for him to be a serious candidate.

Does the Senator from Missouri, who graces the annals of the Senate by his presence, mean to tell an intelligent people that when a man signs a letter like that he can say in a court of law, "I am not responsible for the publicity which you subsequently ordered, because I knew nothing about it"? Does the Senator mean to say that after signing a letter like that he will not be liable to pay for the publicity? Does my friend contend that?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

Mr. ASHURST. You either contend that or you do not.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I do not—

Mr. ASHURST. Answer yes or no. Do not enter into a eulogy of your witness. Say yes or no.

Mr. SPENCER. I may say immediately, without any eulogy of witnesses, that the proposition of the Senator from Arizona is to my mind ridiculous; there is no liability either direct or indirect. I will paraphrase it to the Senator from Arizona, if I may—

Mr. ASHURST. All right, but just a moment—

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator from Arizona will permit me—

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Missouri has said—

Mr. SPENCER. May I answer the Senator?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator from Arizona were to write to me a letter and say, as he might well say, "I am glad no Senator can compete with me in appearance; there is no man in the Senate so handsome or well dressed as am I—be sure to do everything you can to add to my wardrobe and beauty, our efforts will keep away any competitor."

Mr. ASHURST. Again the eulogy!

Mr. SPENCER. It is a well-deserved eulogy in this case. Having written that letter to me and signed it, not by his secretary or by his wife, but by himself, does the Senator mean to intimate that I could go to a jewelry store, or a clothing store, and incur on behalf of the Senator any amount of bills I might like, and make the Senator from Arizona legally responsible therefor?

There is not one word in that letter of Mr. Newberry which creates even the shadow of a liability.

Mr. ASHURST. I will read the letter again, then. It is signed by Truman H. Newberry, to his agent Paul H. King. It is dated April 14, 1918:

I am glad that Mr. Warner—

Three times governor of the State of Michigan—is scared out for the present, and as long as we keep up our publicity work at full pressure, it will be harder and harder for any new man to get any kind of a start that will make it seem worth while for him to be a serious candidate.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. I have not the floor, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, on the evidence in this record there is no escaping the conclusion that Paul King was the agent of Truman H. Newberry. Let me follow the inquiry a little further. He was some one's agent. He was not acting on his own responsibility. There was somebody back of him. He did not pretend to be acting upon his own responsibility. He was Paul King, chairman. Now, suppose he were sued personally in a court of law on one of those contracts which he placed for advertising, he might very properly defend upon the ground that it was not his obligation at all, that he was a mere agent; but, of course, if he made a defense of that kind he would have to disclose who his principal was. Whom could he say? Upon whom could he cast the responsibility other than Truman H. Newberry?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Is there any evidence whatever in the record to show that King made any report of the progress of the campaign and what was going on except to Mr. Newberry himself?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Absolutely not.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, not wishing to interrupt unduly, the statement made by the Senator from Montana is absolutely conclusive to my mind, but, to cinch it further, these debts were incurred either by the principal or by the agent. Does not the record show that none of these so-called agents ever paid for any of this publicity out of their own personal funds or out of any other funds than the Newberry funds, which came through King?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is true. When the question of agency arises the direct evidence, of course, goes to the question of the authority conferred. Take Cody, for instance—

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment to answer the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. I am sure the Senator from Montana will bear me out that there is not a word in the record of a single report or reference or statement, verbal or written, between Paul H. King and Truman H. Newberry that had one word to do either with the needs of the campaign, the amount contributed, the contributors, or the purposes for which the money was spent. Only once was a mention of money ever made and that was long before the campaign occurred, when Mr. King said to Mr. Newberry in New York, "The friends of Senator Townsend spent some $20,000. I think it will be necessary for your friends to spend $50,000, because you are not so well known."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Florida asked me no such question. He asked me to whom did King report. He reported to Truman H. Newberry. He reported repeatedly to Truman H. Newberry. He reported all his activities to Truman H. Newberry. He reported daily to Truman H. Newberry. He reported regularly to Truman H. Newberry. Not content with reporting by telephone and telegraph, he also sent regular form reports upon the progress of the campaign in every county.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Now, just wait a moment. We are talking about whether King was the agent for Truman H. Newberry. Let us agree that he never wrote him about expenses, let us agree that he did not; but that is not the question addressed to me by the Senator from Florida. We are trying to find out whether he was the agent, not whether he was handling moneys for Truman H. Newberry. I am coming to that later on. I am going to discuss finances when I have disposed of this question of agency. Just now I will ask the Senator to confine himself to that question as I desire to do. The Senator from Florida asked me if he reported to anybody and I answered that he did not report to anybody except Truman H. Newberry.

Mr. SPENCER. Would he not be a strange agent, if he had full control of the campaign, if he was in fact the agent reporting to his principal, who never said a word about its needs, about money, its source, its contribution, or its use?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is a matter the Senator can argue in his own time.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not care to argue about it. I submit it to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The question of money has absolutely nothing to do with the phase of the question which I am discussing. I am discussing the question whether he made this man his agent or not.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. King testified very specifically that he reported regularly to Mr. Newberry, sometimes every day, as to the progress of the campaign and what he was doing.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. He even submitted a formal report of the condition of the campaign in each county in the State of Michigan.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield while I read just a sample report? Here is a sample of many, many reports. This is on August 15 from Mr. King to Mr. Newberry:

Our only weakness is with the labor vote, and my reports indicate that we are getting stronger there. The Flint Labor News, which has been strongly Osborn, is weakening, and I am sending a man there to-day with a page advertisement for insertion just before the primaries.

That is a sample of his reports.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I remind the Senator that in one instance he said, "I am sending you a copy of an advertisement which appears in foreign papers for your perusal."

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. King, in one of his letters to Mr. Newberry, in speaking of 500 newspapers in which they had advertisements, congratulates himself—I do not recall the exact words—that 201 of those newspapers are actively supporting him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I was referring to the witness Cody. I insist upon all of the testimony here, and it is all but conclusive, that Fred Cody was the personal representative and agent of Truman H. Newberry. If he was not, how can the fact be established? Truman H. Newberry can come forward and contradict it. He can say he never authorized Cody to do anything, but he has not done that. We are bound upon the record in this case to draw the necessary inference that he was the personal representative and spokesman.

But when a question of whether one is an agent for another or not is up for consideration the testimony is directed to two features. In the first place there was testimony going to show whether he was authorized or was not. We might speak of that as the direct testimony. To that feature of the matter I have heretofore directed the attention of the Senate. The next thing is to show whether the principal, so called, has approved of, knows of, and works with the agent in the doing of the things which it is charged he did in a representative capacity. Accordingly, Mr. President, I am now going to invite attention to the testimony, which discloses the activities of Truman H. Newberry in the conduct of this campaign jointly with King for the purpose of adding a further prohibitive consideration to the question of whether King was or was not his agent.

It will be borne in mind that King did not assume the duties of this position before Mr. Templeton sent a telegram to Mr. Newberry for the purpose of securing his approbation of the selection of King for this place. Then King went to New York from time to time, according to the testimony, half a dozen times during the campaign to consult with Newberry concerning policies which they were to pursue. I read from the bill of exceptions, at page 669, as follows:

During the progress of this campaign I went to New York and conferred there with Commander Newberry a number of times; I do not know how many; I should say possibly half a dozen times—five or six times. Sometimes I went down to get away from the grind in the campaign; sometimes when some particular State-wide situation developed I would go down and discuss that. I remember one time I went—I think it was the second time—I tried to urge Commander Newberry to make a public statement of his views upon what we conceived to be the issues in the campaign, and the conferences or visits were as much social as anything. I sometimes went alone; sometimes Mrs. King went with me. I think Mr. Sibben went with me most times. I can not remember whether he did every time or not; I rather think he did. I was there with Mr. Templeton. He went down frequently to see Commander Newberry. He went to see Commander Newberry, as I recall, on business usually. I think almost without exception. They are interested in a common business—Detroit Seamless Steel. On one occasion Mr. and Mrs. Templeton, Mr. and Mrs. Roger Andrews, and Mrs. King and myself went down, and on another occasion I wanted the commander to meet some of the people who were active in the organization to get acquainted with them. I think Mr. Floyd was there at one time. Mr. Emery went down one time, too, when I did not go; I saw him there, I believe, afterwards. I think it was after the primaries that Mr. Emery was down there. I can not recall any others.

In other words, Mr. Newberry had down there in New York not only Mr. King, but he had Mr. Floyd and Mr. Emery and other men in connection with the campaign. Then it will be discovered a little later on that he had another gentleman who went down there to fix up the famous battleship film.

As has been said, reports were made regularly to Mr. Newberry. He was communicated with almost daily by telephone and by telegraph and communicated with by letter and, as has been shown, they went there personally.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has called attention to a letter appearing at page 704 of the bill of exceptions in which Mr. Newberry recognized that this is his committee and he is participating in its work. I read again under date of April 13, 1918, addressing "My dear Paul":

I am delighted to know that you have met Mr. Currie and that you will work closely together. He is an intimate, devoted friend of mine, and I hope you will persuade him to come down with you—as my guest, of course—and take part in our next conference. He is responsible for Mr. Warner's retirement and friendly attitude toward my candidacy.

I am glad Mr. Warner is scared out for the present, and as long as we keep up our publicity work at full pressure, it will be harder and harder for any new man to get any kind of a start that will make it seem worth while for him to be a serious candidate.

Mr. President, I desire again to call attention to the Federal statute which forbids, as I have said, not only contributing to the campaign more than the sum stipulated but expending in the campaign more than the amount allowed. It does not make any difference so far as this case is concerned whether Mr. Newberry ever contributed a dollar or not; the question is did he participate in the expenditure of more than $3,750. On page 741 of the bill of exceptions he again recognizes his participation in the work of this committee. Under date of May 23, 1918, he writes:

MY DEAR PAUL: I return herewith the draft letters with a few notations. Please be assured that these were made with no intent to criticize, and only as a suggestion.

He edited the forms of letters that the committee was sending out over the State of Michigan.

When you finally settle on the forms, please send me an index descriptive of the people to whom the various letters are intended to be sent, together with clean copies of the forms you finally decide to use.

If in your opinion I should, by the use of these letters, now declare myself to be a candidate under the primary law, would it not terminate our present plan of publicity?

Sincerely, yours,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

MR. PAUL H. KING,
310 Ford Building, Detroit, Mich.

How can we get away from the proposition that he was participating in the expenditure of the enormous sum of money scattered over the State of Michigan by this committee? Moreover, Mr. President, how can one escape the conclusion that Paul King was acting as his agent? Mr. Newberry himself had conferences with a vast number of people in the city of New York coming there from the State of Michigan. I read from page 689 of the bill of exceptions, as follows:

(Confidential.)

MARCH 13, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. KING: When Oakman was here the other day I mentioned a luncheon I had with Mr. John Mitchell, who you may recall is very well known in labor circles, having been head of the miners' organization at the time of the great strike. He is also one of the constant advisers of Mr. Gompers.

I am inclosing herewith a copy of a letter received from him this morning, so that you may keep the matter in mind in case he came to Detroit, as he thought he might have to do before very long.

I shall probably see him again, or at least communicate with him, so that when he goes out there you will be able to make any suggestions to him that you think would be helpful.

Yours, sincerely,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

Mr. Newberry got active, Mr. President, with the Steel Trust officials, who seemed to have had more or less influence with the political condition in the State of Michigan. From page 709 I read from another letter written by Mr. Newberry to Mr. King:

I agree with you about the ridiculousness of my joining the Loyal Order of Moose. Goodness knows what they are organized to do, but I will see Mr. Price or Mr. Dice whenever they come and try to get myself into the frame of mind to become one of the brethren.

Your reference to Mr. O. C. Davidson, of Iron Mountain, interests me very much, but I do not know anything about Tom Cole or his difficulty with the Duluth people. Do you mean the United States Steel Co. people in Duluth? In this connection I am inclosing a copy of a letter received to-day from Mr. Duncan, and a copy of my reply thereto. I think it necessary that I should have more detailed information concerning Mr. Davidson and his exact connection with the United States Steel Co. before I undertake to talk to any of my friends here who are in intimate touch with that organization. You may be sure that I will leave nothing undone to accomplish the desirable result you indicate in this particular matter.

I am returning Mr. Grant M. Hudson's letter, as you probably need it for your records. You may be interested to know that I have renewed the subscription of my brother and myself to the Antislavery League, which I made last year through Mr. Kresge, for $10,000—that is, $5,000 each for my brother and myself.

He seemed to feel as if he were able to accomplish something with the great mining magnates of the State of Michigan, for, as appears at page 698, he writes:

(Private.)

MARCH 30, 1918.

DEAR MR. KING AND MR. TEMPLETON: This morning a high official of the Cleveland Cliffs Co. called me on the telephone from Cleveland, and requested that I not use his name, so I must ask you not even to guess at it, but to know that I have every confidence in the gentleman and that his advice is worthy of our careful and immediate consideration. As nearly as I can recall it, his part of the conversation was as follows:

"I have just had a full report from the Northern Peninsula and am surprised to find the strong sentiment in favor of your nomination. I have never known the Northern Peninsula to be so unanimous on any one candidacy before. I was surprised because your strength was unexpected, but we are all delighted and everyone will do their utmost to secure your success. I want to strongly advise, however, that you write personal letters as soon as possible to Mr. McNaughton and Mr. Duncan, who control the mine situation. They desire to act in your interests, but the mining people are very peculiar, and I hope that Mr. Andrews will not be named to handle the mining situation, as these gentlemen resent outside interference. I know Mr. Andrews has done excellent work in your interests and his assistance is of the highest value. Please tell this to Mr. Paul King, for whom I have a very high opinion, and I congratulate you on having him interested with you. If you will communicate with McN. and D. along these lines, I am sure it would work out greatly to your advantage and insure a remarkably successful result in the Northern Peninsula. I will keep you in touch with the situation and call you on the telephone when I hear anything that will assist your campaign. I prefer to do that rather than write letters."

That is the end of the quotation purporting to give the conversation which he had with this mining official. Then Commander Newberry writes King:

I am writing Mr. McNaughton and Mr. Duncan as he suggests, but before saying anything to Mr. Roger Andrews I would like to have the advice of Mr. Templeton and yourself as to whether you and Mr.

Templeton should handle this matter or leave it to my amateur efforts. Personally, I think you can do it better, and I hope you will reach the same conclusion.

Sincerely, yours,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

In view of what is here disclosed, what kind of justification is there for the statement made in the majority report which I now read:

Truman H. Newberry was absent from the State of Michigan continuously during the entire campaign and until long after the election had been held. He took no part whatever either in the financial or other features of the primary campaign or its direction or control. Nor did he take any part in the general election.

Mr. President, something has been said here to the effect that Mr. Newberry never controlled Paul H. King. Why should he control him? Senators have all been engaged in political campaigns.

You have ordinarily something to say about the selection of the man who is going to run your campaign. He is selected by the committee or by yourself if you are running in a primary campaign. He is a man in whom you have every confidence; you repose the utmost trust not only in his fidelity but in his good judgment. You give him carte blanche to go on, and whenever he does anything that does not exactly please you do you bring him on the carpet and say, "Here, you must quit this"? No; you talk with him about the matter, and eventually you agree about it and go on. Of course, you do not want to continue interfering with his transactions every day when he is conducting the campaign and you are out in the State making speeches, and you leave it to his entire discretion. So was entire discretion in the first place intrusted in Mr. Paul H. King. That is all there is to that.

Mr. President, so much for the question of the agency of Paul H. King, for Paul H. King was the entire committee; that is all there was to it; there was no one else who was exercising any kind of direction or control over the campaign in any way. There was not any committee. Again, I ask the Senator from Missouri if a lawsuit such as that I have suggested was brought and Paul King endeavored to escape responsibility by saying that he was the agent for somebody, upon whom could he throw the responsibility? It was either his responsibility or that of some one else; he was acting simply as a citizen of Michigan, or he was acting as a representative of somebody. He did not pretend to be acting merely as a citizen of Michigan and constituted as chairman by nobody. The real principal is at hand; we can not find him anywhere except we find him down in New York in Mr. Newberry's office.

Mr. President, this question of agency is all important, because the statute condemns the expenditure of money by a candidate through himself or through his agent as well as the contribution of money; and I submit, therefore, that whether he contributed a dollar or not, he is responsible for the expenditure of every dollar that was paid out by Paul H. King.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to address the Senate upon the subject of the financing of the campaign, to which the Senator from Missouri always turns. As I have said, it is a matter of no consequence at all, as I view this case, whether Mr. Newberry contributed a dollar or not; the important question is, Did he spend the money through himself or his agent? Let us see about where the money came from. Of course, Paul H. King, skilled politician as he was, experienced in the conduct of campaigns, recognized that this was going to be a campaign that would cost money. He estimated to Mr. Newberry himself, as is conceded upon the record, that at least $50,000 must be forthcoming in order to carry it on in the manner in which he intended to prosecute the campaign; and, of course, he was not going to undertake the campaign unless he knew that the money was forthcoming to meet the expenses that would be incurred. Let us understand, then, how the campaign was to be financed which King was thus going to conduct.

King says that he thinks Templeton—bear in mind, "he thinks Templeton"—assured him that it would be financed by the friends and business associates of Commander Newberry. I read from the record on page 329:

MR. ALFRED LUCKING. Now, I think in that conversation with Senator Newberry you told him that the campaign would cost at least $50,000?

MR. KING. Some such remarks as that was made; yes, sir.

MR. ALFRED LUCKING. By you?

MR. KING. Yes, sir.

MR. ALFRED LUCKING. He asked the question, did he not?

MR. KING. He asked, as I remember, what the campaign would cost, campaign for United States Senator, and I said I did not know. I said that I conducted one campaign for Senator Townsend, and that campaign cost the friends of Senator Townsend approximately $20,000; that I thought in view of the changed conditions, and the fact that he was not so well known in Michigan as Senator Townsend had been, and that it would be necessary to conduct a more extensive publicity campaign, it would probably cost his friends around $50,000.

MR. ALFRED LUCKING. Why do you say, "his friends"?

MR. KING. His friends had spoken to me about acting as chairman.

MR. ALFRED LUCKING. You mean Templeton and Cody?

Mr. KING. And Scott; yes, sir; those three.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did it cost those friends anything?
 Mr. KING. Did it?
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did it; yes?
 Mr. KING. I don't know as they did contribute to the campaign.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did they contribute a cent outwardly so that your committee knew anything about it?
 Mr. KING. Mr. Templeton contributed his services.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You were talking about money, $50,000. Did they contribute anything?
 Mr. KING. Any money?
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Yes.
 Mr. KING. I don't think they did.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Then, it must have been somebody else. Did you make any arrangements with anyone to contribute?
 Mr. KING. No, sir; I think it was stated to me that friends and business associates of Commander Newberry would finance the campaign.

Now, note, Mr. President, Mr. King says:

I think it was stated to me that friends and business associates of Commander Newberry would finance the campaign.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who stated that to you?

Mr. KING. Mr. Templeton, as I remember.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Where?

Mr. KING. I think that was at our conference in Detroit.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. At the Statler Hotel?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. Templeton says he does not know anything about it; that if King says so, he would not dispute his word, but he has no recollection of ever having made the statement at all; and, moreover, that he never was authorized by anybody to make the statement. I read from the record, page 415, as follows:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you give assurances to Mr. King that the friends and business associates of Mr. Newberry would finance the campaign?

Mr. TEMPLETON. He made such a statement, and if he made it, I would not question his word. I must have said it at some time or other. I do not remember when or where or anything about it.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You have no recollection of any such thing being discussed at that interview?

Mr. TEMPLETON. No.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Is it your best recollection that it was not talked of?

Mr. TEMPLETON. It is.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Had you any authority from anybody else for saying that it would be financed?

Mr. TEMPLETON. I had not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Had you any knowledge of anybody going to finance it?

Mr. TEMPLETON. I had not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Had you any authority that John Newberry or anybody else would do it?

Mr. TEMPLETON. I had not at that time.

Mr. John S. Newberry, who contributed every dollar that was spent in this campaign—at least, so the record shows—until about the 10th day of August, 1918, when his total contributions summed up a matter of nearly $80,000—$86,000, as my recollection now serves me—says that he never spoke to anybody about it except to Fred P. Smith.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Did he not also state that he had not even talked with his brother about it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. TRAMMELL. And that he had no information from his brother about his being a candidate, and that he had not talked to any member of his family? He talked to no one. It just seemed that in some mysterious way he got a wireless that his brother was probably going to be a candidate, and he went and made this request upon his financial secretary. He denies having had any knowledge whatever of his brother becoming a candidate until he saw something in the newspapers about it. That is all he had to say in regard to his information regarding his brother's candidacy, when he claims to have authorized his confidential agent, Smith, to use funds to finance the campaign.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. How did King go on with his campaign under these circumstances? He never talked to John S. Newberry. He has no information that John S. Newberry was going to contribute anything; and even Fred P. Smith does not testify that he gave any information to King that John S. Newberry or anybody else was going to finance the campaign. How did Paul King, experienced politician as he was, start in on the management of this campaign and incur unusual expenses without any assurance from anybody, as the record here practically establishes, that the money with which the expenses were to be paid would be forthcoming?

But, Mr. President, that is not all. John S. Newberry, as I said, contributed up to about the 10th of August, when the scandal of this enormous expenditure became rife, and Gov. Osborn had written the letter which has been read in the Senate here this morning, which was published broadcast in the State of Michigan. Then some contributions came in, and he went around and solicited some friends to give some money to the campaign. I will speak of that directly; but, understand, up to that time every dollar, as far as it has been traced, came from John S. Newberry, through checks executed by his attorney in fact, Fred P. Smith.

Fred Smith was the private and confidential man for all of the Newberry interests. He had some 10 or 12 accounts—one of them for Truman H. Newberry, one for John S. Newberry, one for Mrs. John S. Newberry, one for Mrs. Truman H. Newberry, one for the sons of these persons, one for the Newberry estate, and so on. You have heard the testimony read to the effect that whenever the funds in the John S. Newberry account were not sufficient to meet the drafts which Smith was making upon his account for the purpose of keeping alive the senatorial campaign committee account in the bank, drafts were made upon the other funds. That is to say, money was taken from the Truman H. Newberry account, for instance, and put into the John S. Newberry account, upon which the checks were drawn. You have also heard read the testimony, and I am not going to take the time to go into it, about a conversation over the telephone between Truman H. Newberry and Fred P. Smith, in which we are told that Truman H. Newberry was "kicking" about the draft that was being made upon these funds, and the exhaustion that was taking place by reason of the expenses of the campaign; but I want to call your attention to a most significant circumstance in connection with the financing of this campaign.

John S. Newberry testified that he left the State of Michigan for Chicago some time during the latter part of the month of March or the first part of the month of April, and that just before he went away—just before he went away—he talked with Fred P. Smith, and said to him, "I expect that my brother is going to have a campaign for the United States Senate, and I want to finance it," and that was the authority upon which Fred Smith, acting under his power of attorney, drew upon the funds of John S. Newberry for the purpose of financing this campaign. Bear in mind, now, this was immediately before he went away, in the latter part of the month of March or the first of April. I want to read the record.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator let me correct him as to the record? If he has it before him, it will correct itself. What Mr. Newberry said was not, "I expect that my brother will have a campaign," but the statement of Mr. Newberry was, in March—for even he did not know about it then—to the effect that "If my brother should run, then I want to finance it." The Senator will bear that out when he gets the record before him.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. You will bear in mind also, in that connection, that it was the latter part of April when he said, "If my brother has a campaign"; and the campaign was already under way, organized and operative, as early as the 7th of March.

I read from the testimony of John S. Newberry at page 306.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you ever have any conversation with him about this campaign?

He is speaking about Mr. Blair.

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or with Mr. Templeton about it?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or with Mr. Paul King?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Fred Cody about it?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Do you know him?

Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How long have you known him?

Mr. NEWBERRY. Since the campaign.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you know him before that?

Mr. NEWBERRY. Very slightly; only by sight. I never had any conversation with him before.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you talk with him at all about this matter?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you talk to Cody at all about his contributing to your brother's campaign?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you to Mr. King?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you to Mr. Templeton?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you to Mr. Charles Floyd?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. A. J. Hopkins was on the committee. Did you know him?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Thomas Phillips, I believe, was also on the committee. Did you know him?

Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You did contribute something, did you not?

Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How much?

Mr. NEWBERRY. Ninety-nine thousand dollars.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Ninety-nine thousand dollars exactly?

Mr. NEWBERRY. I think so, as near as I saw the reports.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. As near as you saw the reports?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. When did you contribute the $99,000?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. At different times during the campaign.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you personally draw the checks for it?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you see that they were made to any person in particular?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. I did not see any checks.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you sign any checks?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you authorize anybody to sign any checks?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. Smith has my power of attorney.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He had your power of attorney?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That is all the authority you gave him?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you talk to him about it, and tell him to make these contributions?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. I told him when I was going away that Mr. Newberry expected to have a campaign, and that I wanted to finance the campaign.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You wanted to finance it?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And what?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. And he signed the checks as they wanted the money, I suppose. I was not at home.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. When was that talk with Mr. Smith?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Before I went away, some time the last end of March.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That is Mr. Fred P. Smith?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The man who keeps your account and your brother's account?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And keeps the office of both of you?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The same office, whatever it is?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. The same office.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. He keeps books for both of you?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes.
 The ACTING CHAIRMAN. He has already testified to that.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You told him you wanted to finance the campaign?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Yes, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I would like you to make that date of that conversation known, as near as you can.
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Sometime the last end of March. The only way I can fix it, I left around the 1st of April.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And it was just before you went away?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. It was just before I went away. It might have been a day or two or a week.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Had you paid out any money before you left?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or authorized any to be paid out?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. As I understand you, none of those persons whose names I have mentioned talked with you about doing this financing?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. No, sir; I did not know them.
 Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Or got you to do this financing?
 Mr. NEWBERRY. Not one.

The first contribution made by Mr. Newberry, as disclosed by the record, was on March 22, as will appear from the bill of exceptions at page 281.

The contributions by Mr. Newberry are listed, as I have indicated, at page 281 of the bill of exceptions. I read the first item:

March 22, John S. Newberry, $1,000.

So that he is entirely corroborated by the actual record, by the actual check, dated March 22, for $1,000; and the campaign had been running since the first part of March. We have had correspondence, to which I have already invited attention, between Paul King and Truman Newberry, dated the 7th day of March.

The account of Paul King, as chairman of the Newberry committee, was opened on the 6th day of March—bill of exceptions, page 117. I read from that page as follows:

Albert R. Moore, being duly sworn as a witness on behalf of the Government, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. Elchorn:

I live in Detroit, Mich., and am vice president of the Commonwealth-Federal Savings Bank. In 1918 I was in charge of the commercial department, paying and receiving teller. I am acquainted with Paul H. King and understand that he was chairman of what was known as the Newberry senatorial committee in 1918. During that year an account was carried in the Commonwealth-Federal Savings Bank under the name of "Paul H. King, Chairman." Referring to the records of that bank before me, that account was opened on March 6, 1918, with a deposit of $2,000. The account was closed on May 4, 1918. The aggregate amount of deposits that was made to that account in that period was $5,083.73. The entire amount was checked out on the date given in May. There had been checking against the account in the interval from March to May, leaving a balance of $10 when the final check was given. There was also an account carried in the bank by the Newberry senatorial committee during the summer of 1918. That account was opened on March 22, 1918, with a deposit of $1,000. The account was checked down until there was a balance of $2.75 on January 15, 1919. The aggregate deposits on September 6 was $53,456. The aggregate of the deposits to the account of the Newberry senatorial committee was $178,857.20. The aggregate amount of withdrawals from that account was $178,854.45, leaving a balance of $2.75.

So that it appears that for some three weeks before John S. Newberry ever contributed a dollar this campaign was in full progress, and an account had been opened in the bank with a deposit of $2,000.

I inquire now, as anticipatory of the consideration of questions of law applicable to the case, the question as to what this committee did. After we find out what they did, financed as they were, we will try to apply the law to the facts.

In the first place, they proceeded to subsidize the entire press of the State of Michigan. I read from page 615 of the record, as follows:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. I call your attention to another sentence out of the same letter, page 827, as follows:

This is from Truman H. Newberry to Paul King—

"It is hard luck that there is no paper in Detroit strongly on our side, but we anticipated that when we started, so we can hardly call it a discouragement. Your statement that there are 201 papers openly supporting me suggests the inclosed clipping, which I cut from this morning's New York Sun, and which ought to be good ammunition for the 201 papers you speak of and any others who are not behind the Hearst-Wilson candidates."

Now, all of those 201 papers had some of your ammunition, did they not, in the way of advertising and money payments?

Mr. KING. Yes; every paper in the State had it, whether they were supporting Senator Newberry or not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Nearly every one?

Mr. KING. I think practically every one. That was my idea.

The term "ammunition" is there used, and in the letter from Newberry to King to which I have adverted it is undoubtedly used to signify newspaper clippings, or something of that sort, which could be used for general publicity purposes. But that was not the limit of the significance of the term as it is used in this correspondence, by any means. I want to make that quite clear. That appears from a letter written by Commander Newberry to Paul King under date of August 9, 1918, appearing in the bill of exceptions at page 881. After discussing the situation at some considerable length, he said:

There is much more information about Osborn's present plight I will tell you when I see you. The statement that he is short of ammunition is an absolute fact. Whether or not this was a feeler I will leave to you to judge when I talk to you about it.

In other words, Commander Newberry was congratulating himself and Mr. King upon the fact that the money resources of Gov. Osborn were practically exhausted, and therefore they might felicitate themselves upon a successful campaign, their supply, of course, being inexhaustible.

As to this advertising campaign, every paper in the State had some of the "ammunition" in the shape of advertising and money payments. Let us see what the effect of that kind of "ammunition" was. I read again the letter to which attention was called this morning by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], a letter from Paul King to Newberry, appearing at page 888 of the bill of exceptions, as follows:

AUGUST 15, 1918.

HON. TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

P. O. Box 908, New York City.

MY DEAR COMMANDER: I am inclosing herewith the proof of an advertisement which will appear next week showing the indorsement of leading farmers and men interested in agricultural matters throughout the State. This should help.

Our only weakness is with the labor vote and my reports indicate that we are getting stronger there. The Flint Labor News, which has been strongly Osborn, is weakening, and I am sending a man there today with a page advertisement for insertion just before the primaries. As is natural, many of the reports that I am getting now indicate "grief" of various kinds and I am straightening out the troubles as fast as they come along.

There is not a doubt in the world that this advertising was placed with the newspapers of the State of Michigan for the purpose of getting their influence in behalf of the candidacy of Mr. Newberry. We are not babes. We are not children. We know the significance of this kind of thing. We know perfectly well that when anybody goes out, in these days of ours, for the purpose of getting editorial support, he puts an advertisement in the paper whose support he seeks and ingratiates himself in that way. We can not close our eyes to the significance of these proceedings.

They then did what they called "organizing the State." They organized the State. In every county of the State of Michigan, with the possible exception of one, they had a chairman and a secretary. In each precinct of each county, 2,100 in all in the State of Michigan, they had a precinct captain. I read from page 334 of the record:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You had a chairman and secretary of your county committee in nearly every county, did you not?

Mr. KING. I think in every county but Chippewa.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What is that county?

Mr. KING. The home county of ex-Gov. Osborn, who was also a candidate for the nomination, and I felt it discourteous to go into his county and try to organize his political opponents against him, and we did not go into that county.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. So that you had an organization in every county outside of that?

Mr. KING. I think so.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was money put into every one of those counties where you had an organization?

Mr. KING. I think so; practically every county.

Every one of these men was salaried, every one of them was paid; errand boys, no doubt. I now want to read from the record at page 426.

Mr. KING. While the Senator is finding that quotation, it might be interesting to let the RECORD show that the attorney for Mr. Newberry et al. in his opening statement to the jury avowed that they had the most perfect and ingenious scheme for organization and publicity that the State of Michigan had ever beheld. He seemed to boast of it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. One Judge Harris was called as a witness, and he testified that he was chairman of Charlevoix County, and his testimony was as follows:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. You also went into these other counties?
Mr. HARRIS. Yes.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And each had their chairman and secretaries?
Mr. HARRIS. Yes.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you selected some of them?
Mr. HARRIS. Yes; I think I did.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And you paid out some of these moneys, did you?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; in our own county.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. How much?
Mr. HARRIS. Well, I think it was $75 or $80.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Out of the $1,200?
Mr. HARRIS. Yes. It was expended by our county committee.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. The $75 or $80?
Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you make a report of that?
Mr. HARRIS. Yes; I did.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. On those expenditures?
Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. To whom?

Mr. HARRIS. Well, to some member of the committee. Now, I do not know whether I sent that to Detroit or whether I sent it to their Grand Rapids office.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. To Mr. Floyd, was it not?
Mr. HARRIS. It may have been. I do not just now recall, Mr. Lucking.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you not have some request to send in a statement of your expenditures?

Mr. HARRIS. I think I did.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What did your report cover?
Mr. HARRIS. It covered the expenses in Charlevoix County. I asked the different members of the committee to furnish me with the amount of the expenses and I handed that in.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Something like $75 or $80?
Mr. HARRIS. Something like that.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Your report did not cover the other $1,100, did it?

Mr. HARRIS. No, sir.
Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was it not by express request of Mr. Floyd that you simply covered in your report the payments out and not the moneys which were received for your own compensation?

Mr. HARRIS. No; I would not say that. As I understood it, it was this: That what Mr. Floyd wanted was the record of the expenditures. Senator POMERENE. Are you giving here your conversation with him now?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Floyd?
Senator POMERENE. Yes.
Mr. HARRIS. No; I am not, Senator.
Senator POMERENE. As a judge you realize the importance of giving a conversation as it occurred, if you can?

Mr. HARRIS. Well, I do not believe that I can, Senator.
Senator POMERENE. Well, the substance of it.
Senator WALSH. He was giving his understanding of the conversation.

Mr. HARRIS. That is all I was giving you; what I understood.
Mr. LUCKING. You are giving the actual expenditures that you paid out of your pocket?

Mr. HARRIS. In the county. I mean not what I paid out, but what the committee paid. Our county is peculiar. We had three sections, and we had three members of the committee. One member of the committee in his section looked after it, and I looked after it in ours. Whatever those boys said and what I had, that is what I reported.
The ACTING CHAIRMAN. You got $1,200 and you reported about how much?

Mr. HARRIS. I think it was between $70 and $80.
The ACTING CHAIRMAN. What was the other $1,100?
Mr. HARRIS. I acted on a salary. I went around and I wrote letters covering the northern part of Michigan.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. That was kept for your expenses and compensation?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.
Senator POMERENE. That is, about $1,120 or $1,125?
Mr. HARRIS. It must have been near that.

A matter of $110 for six weeks' work on the part of Judge Harris. These were not cheap men who were secured. An effort was made, and apparently with some degree of success, to secure only the very best workers that could be employed, as will appear from the bill of exceptions at page 743. Mr. King reported to Mr. Newberry by a letter of May 30, 1918, as follows:

We are making good progress, I think, and the preliminary organizations in the counties are practically complete. * * * Of course, we could find people in these counties to take up the work, but in many cases they would be lesser lights and we want to get the principal workers, if possible.

I read this because a little later on I am going to consider with you the significance of the decision in the Missouri case which was the subject of some discussion yesterday. I want Senators to understand that the contention of the Senator from Missouri is that while it is perhaps improper, perhaps contrary to the statute of the State of Missouri as well as of the State of Michigan, to hire workers to go out and induce or persuade or argue with people to vote for a candidate, it would not be contrary to law to send messenger boys out to circulate dodgers and to pass cards, and that kind of thing.

I wish to call attention to the fact that the men employed in this campaign were not of that character. They were men who were believed to have great influence in their communities and they were hired for the purpose of exercising and exerting that influence. For instance, in one of those counties were some gentlemen by the name of Hanson, who were men of very large influence, apparently very honorable men, as I shall show. It was thought that it was desirable to secure the assistance as well as the influence of the Hansons. In the bill of exceptions, at page 753, is found part of a very complete report of the entire county. I read from that part of the report which refers to Crawford County as follows:

No organization has been perfected in Crawford County, but Mr. Emery, of our office, will go into that section of the State on the third and complete the organization, which we hope to have backed up by the Hansons, who are the big men of this section. In fact, it is absolutely necessary to have their support if we expect to have this county. While the number of votes which Crawford County carries is small it has an influence on adjoining counties. Esbern Hanson, son of one of the elder Hansons, is circulating our petition.

They got the Hansons all right, and we will see how they got them.

I read now from the bill of exceptions at page 305, where Mr. Marius Hanson testified before the trial court in Grand Rapids, as follows:

I live at Grayling, Crawford County, Mich. I have lived in Michigan all my life. My principal business is banking. I was at my home in 1918. I saw Mr. B. F. Emery some time during the year 1918 at my bank in Grayling. He called and informed me that he was out in Mr. Newberry's interest and wanted to know what the sentiment was in our county, and I told him that, so far as I was concerned personally, Mr. Newberry was my candidate, and he said he was very glad to hear it. He told me what Mr. Newberry's qualifications were, and asked me if I would be willing to circulate nominating petitions for him in the village, and I told him I would be very glad to do so. Before he left he picked up a magazine that was lying on the table—

I notice that the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is in the Chamber, and I am very glad to ask his attention to this testimony:

He told me what Mr. Newberry's qualifications were, and asked me if I would be willing to circulate nominating petitions for him in the village, and I told him I would be very glad to do so. Before he left he picked up a magazine that was lying on the table, put it over in front of me, and underneath or in the magazine was a $50 bill. Nothing whatever had been said by me to him about the $50 or any other sum as compensation. When I saw the $50 bill, I asked him what it was for. I told him so far as I was concerned I was not looking for any money; that I was glad to do this without any compensation, and he said, "We would like to have these nominating petitions circulated in the different townships in your county. It may be necessary to hire some one to do that. I realize that you would not be inclined to do it." And he said, if it was necessary to hire anyone to do this, to pay them out of this money. I expended $15 of that money. I did not employ men to circulate the petitions. I called up three men that I was acquainted with in the three different townships, and I knew that they were Republicans and asked them if they would circulate the petitions and they said they would be glad to do so. When they came in with the petitions I offered them $5 for their trouble, and they said it was not necessary, that they did not ask anything for it, and I said, "You might just as well take it; you used your car and spent some money for gasoline and you are entitled to something for your services." The other $35 was not expended nor returned.

Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate again to the advice and information given to the Senate by the majority report, as follows:

The amount of money spent at the primary was large—too large—but there was no concealment whatever with regard to it, and it was spent entirely for legal and proper purposes.

Has the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] been giving his attention to the reading of these letters?

Mr. SPENCER. I did not hear the last one read.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if he thinks that is a legal and proper purpose?

Mr. SPENCER. I did not hear the last remarks which the Senator made.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The information is that certain gentlemen named Hanson were most influential men in their community. Mr. Emery interviewed Mr. Hanson, who told him at once he was for Newberry. Emery then picked up a magazine off the table and placed a $50 bill either in or under the magazine and shoved it over to Hanson. Hanson said he did not want the money. Emery said, "Oh, take it, you may have to hire somebody." He got three good Republicans to go out and circulate petitions and he offered them $5 apiece. They did not want to take it, but he finally pushed it on them, and he kept the rest of it.

Mr. SPENCER. What is the inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to know from the Senator whether that is an entirely legal and proper expenditure of money?

Mr. SPENCER. In the State of Missouri it would be entirely legal.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In the State of Michigan?

Mr. SPENCER. In the State of Michigan I also say it would have been entirely legal, because one of the 11 enumerated purposes for which money can be spent without limit is for the purpose of canvassing voters. If it was intended that these men should canvass voters or get signatures to petitions, and they wanted to pay for that, I should say it was entirely legal. I am not at all enamored of the method of payment of money which the Senator has described. I would prefer to give the money right out.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am merely giving Mr. Hanson's testimony. It is not a question of whether I said it or not, but a question of his testimony.

Mr. SPENCER. The right to hire a man to secure names to a petition or to canvass for voters is unquestioned, in my judgment, in the State of Michigan, as it is in the State of Missouri.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Does the Senator understand from the letter that that is all he expected Hanson to do, just merely to act as a messenger boy, as a bill poster, as a dodger circulator, to go out and lay this paper before people? Is that the interpretation which the Senator from Missouri gives to the letter.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not consider that a man who is a canvasser of voters or securing their names on a petition is a bill-poster or a dodger or—I forget what else the Senator thought he might be. It takes a man of a certain high character and personal appearance and attractive manner to do any of those things, as the Senator well knows, because he has been a candidate himself.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am glad to have the Senator's official morality exposed in that way.

Mr. KENYON. Has the Senator concluded with the Hanson matter?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have.

Mr. KENYON. I am wondering if he is going to refer to the Kern testimony?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am coming to that next.

Mr. KENYON. That is another example of secrecy.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to address another inquiry to the Senator from Missouri, if he will kindly attend to the testimony found in the bill of exceptions at page 133.

Mr. SPENCER. It will give me very great pleasure and profit to hear it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have doubt that it will be a pleasure, but it will be profitable.

Mr. SPENCER. I always listen to the Senator from Montana with pleasure and with profit.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I thank the Senator. I read from the testimony of John E. Kern, who stated as follows:

I reside at Midland, Mich., which is in Midland County, about 135 or 140 miles northwest from Grand Rapids and about 117 miles from Detroit. I am in the real estate business and have lived at Midland about 16 years. The defendant Terry Corliss called on me at Midland about the middle of August, 1918, and wanted me to organize Midland County in the interest of Mr. Newberry, and I agreed to do so. He said he had charge of several other counties. Probably a week or so afterwards and a week or 10 days before the primary Corliss asked me to go to Detroit to meet Paul King, and I went to Detroit and had a conversation with Mr. King at his office, where I was taken by Mr. Corliss. There was another person present when Mr. King and I had this conversation—a man, I think. We discussed the campaign there in Midland County and the conditions there politically, etc. I think we discussed our campaign expenditures to some extent there, too, at the time. That is all I can recall about it. I do not know whether anything was said about other counties having been organized and Mr. King's desire to have that county organized. Finances were discussed. I am not sure whether this other man was in there at the time the conversation started or whether he came in later. I think there was somebody else present at the time, though. While Mr. King and I were talking there, and in the presence of King, a sealed envelope was put on the table right beside me there to take it all right. I do not recall whether my name was on it or not. I put it in my pocket. I did not open it there. I left Detroit to return to Midland on the evening train. I opened the envelope on the train during the course of the trip and found $400 in it.

I would like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether he thinks that money was expended for entirely legal and proper purposes?

Mr. SPENCER. So far as the record goes, unless the Senator wishes to depend entirely upon inference, it was expended for proper purposes. I do not like the particular way of handing out money in an envelope, but does not the Senator see as a lawyer that what he is doing, and what seems to me so monstrously unfair, is to pick out little circumstances from different counties in the State of Michigan, about which Truman H. Newberry knew nothing, and then present them before the Senate of the United States as reasons why Mr. Newberry should be unseated in the Senate.

I should dislike very much to have every detail of the canvass and every act brought to light of every man in the State of Missouri who thought I ought to have been elected and who, in his enthusiasm for me, may have treated or acted or worked in manners that I knew nothing about, and that if I had known about I would have disapproved of. I have no doubt in the world that in the canvass of every candidate his friends do things that ought not to be done. How unfair it is to bring up against the man in the State of New York what men were doing or possibly doing in precincts in Michigan without his knowledge or consent!

But I may say, with regard to these men, if the purpose was, as the record seems to indicate, to send that man back to the county from which he came and have him organize the county; to have men who were reputable, strong men in the county come and favor Senator Newberry's candidacy, and to exert their time and their influence in promoting the interests of Senator Newberry in that county, there was nothing wrong in having them do it or paying them for doing it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the responsibility of Mr. Truman H. Newberry for it will be considered at some other time. I was not asking whether Mr. Truman H. Newberry was responsible or was not responsible; I was asking the Senator from Missouri whether he thought a contract of that character and the expenditure of money in that way was a violation of the Michigan statute, and he has answered that in his judgment it is not. That is good enough. Now, lest I should do Mr. Kern wrong I desire to call attention to the fact that he returned this money. He says:

Of this $400 I expended $96 and a few cents, leaving approximately $304, for which I sent a draft back to Mr. B. Frank Emery.

Mr. SPENCER. That shows that they made no mistake in their man.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.

Mr. SPENCER. It shows that the money that was expended in that county was as much as they needed to spend, and the rest of it was returned.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They made a mistake all right.

Mr. SPENCER. It shows that they were dealing with an honorable man.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; and they thought they had been dealing with a rogue; as they had.

Mr. SPENCER. That is the Senator's inference.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, it is my inference, because if they thought otherwise they would have handed the money to him and not put it in an envelope without disclosing the character of it at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. They would have asked him the amount that would have been necessary.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course.

Mr. ROBINSON. And they would have paid no more than necessary, instead of paying him four times as much.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Everybody knows the significance of slipping a man some cash in between the leaves of a magazine or in a sealed envelope.

I was referring to the organizers whom they had in all the counties; but they were not enough; they employed special men, called field men and workers, to go around from place to place in the State. The general character of their employment is conceded by Mr. Murfin, the representative of Mr. Newberry before the committee, in his brief, as follows:

Advertising men and publicity men were secured at substantial salaries to take charge of and direct this work. As an incident thereto, men in every walk of life were engaged, obviously for purposes of propaganda—one man to talk among the Masons, another man to talk among other fraternal organizations, one man to organize the railroad men, one man to organize the Polish voters, and so on. Every county, save the home of Gov. Osborn, who was an opposition candidate, had its Newberry chairman and Newberry secretary. These county organizations were perfected and kept active through field agents, who traveled from county to county making investigations and reports. Men who distributed buttons, literature, and like political stuff, or who circulated petitions, required by law to be filed before the candidate could have his name put upon the ticket, were paid reasonable sums for their time and expenses.

Mr. President, it will be observed that he refers to men who distributed buttons. Of course, if that is all they did, that would not be a violation of the law. Nor would the fellow who scatters literature, dodgers, and political stuff all around be violating the law; nor would the circulation of petitions, merely laying petitions before people and having them put their names on them be in violation of the law, but he says:

Men who distributed buttons, literature, and like political stuff, or who circulated petitions, required by law to be filed before the candidate could have his name put upon the ticket, were paid reasonable sums for their time and expenses.

That carries the inference that the field workers who traveled around from place to place in the State working for Newberry and endeavoring to induce people to vote for him were not paid. Of course the contrary is the case; they were the highly paid men in the organization. The statement concludes:

The campaign was undoubtedly the most pretentious, the most thoroughly planned, the most far-reaching, and the best organized that had ever been staged in any community.

Let us see about these workers. I quote from page 516 of the record:

Mr. Alfred Lucking, would you consider Glocheski a field man?

I thought I had a reference here to the Glocheski testimony, but I do not find it in my notes, and I am going to ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] if he will have the kindness to find the testimony for me, because I want to read to the Senate the testimony of Glocheski, who was one of these field operators working amongst the Polish voters.

Mr. KING. I will find it for the Senator in a moment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. Lucking asks:

Would you consider Glocheski a field man? He worked over the State.

Mr. KING. I did not call him such.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Briefly, tell us the names of the six, if you can, from memory.

Mr. KING. As I recall, they were Mr. James R. Davis, James F. McGregor, Terry T. Corliss, R. E. Prescott, Ben F. Reed, and Charles Tufts for a short time. That is all I now recall. Mr. William Calnon, who was the publicity man, did some little field work. I think he went over to Kalamazoo County and other counties.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Was Judge Harris a field man?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; he was one I overlooked. I overlooked his name. He had the northwestern section—the Grand Traverse section. Capt. Tufts was more in the classification of Mr. Glocheski. I assigned the sections of the State to these field men, certain counties for them to visit periodically, which they did. Then I assigned other men whom I did not consider field men in the same sections, men like Mr. Glocheski, to work with certain nationalities of people or certain classes of people. Mr. Glocheski did work among the Polish people of the State. He visited the Polish settlements around the State, especially in Presque Isle County and Manistee County, and there are a good many Polish citizens in Kent County. Capt. Tufts visited the fishing communities, the fishermen and the shore counties, primarily.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Were they all under pay?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did you have a man or men to work with the fraternal societies?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Under pay?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What was his name, please?

Mr. KING. I can not recall it. Does the record show it?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was Elmer Smith one of them?

Mr. KING. Elmer Smith did some work; yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What did you call him?

Mr. KING. He did not have any title.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Just a worker?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What was his field?

Mr. KING. What was his field?

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Yes.

Mr. KING. He was connected with a fraternity known as the American Yeoman, I think it was. I think Mr. Gilbert, the grand lecturer, did a little work. He testified yesterday. He was grand lecturer of the Masonic order. Those were the only two.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Did Mr. Newberry know you had these field men at work?

Mr. KING. I think so.

Mr. President, a little later on I am going to advise the Senate about the manner in which the money contributed to the Newberry campaign was handled. From the 1st of March until the 7th day of May bills were paid by checks drawn upon the account, as would be done by any self-respecting and honest business institution. From that time on, however, large payments were made in cash, a subject to which I shall advert a little later on. Mr. Glocheski gives us some valuable information concerning that subject. I read from his testimony, as follows:

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Mr. Glocheski, the foreman of the jury, testified as follows—

Now, his attention is being called to testimony which it is said Glocheski gave before the grand jury:

Mr. Glocheski was recalled and stated that while in Paul King's office at one time he saw a table about 2½ by 3 feet about half covered with bills, currency, with denominations of $20, $50, and $100, and thought at the time there must have been a million dollars there.

It probably looked big to him.

Mr. TOWNSEND. From what is the Senator from Montana reading?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am reading from the record at page 503.

Is there no part of that correct?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was the size of the table about right?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. I think the table size is about right.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. And it was half covered with bills?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. That is correct; and the smallest denomination you saw was a 20?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. No; a 10.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. What was the largest?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. I think, a 50.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Were there many of them?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. Oh, I don't know. I just glanced at the table. They were lying there. They were making up the pay roll.

Senator WOLCOTT. What do you mean by "half covered with money"?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. There were little piles of money on the table, possibly a quarter of an inch thick, or maybe less.

Senator WOLCOTT. You say this table was what size?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. It was about 2½ by 3 feet, a small-sized center table used to put books on.

Senator WOLCOTT. How many piles of money would you say there were?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. I should imagine possibly eight or nine. I did not count them. Senator WOLCOTT.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were they all little piles about a quarter of an inch or different sizes?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. They were different sizes. They were not larger than a quarter of an inch.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know what the pay roll amounted to?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. I do not.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Who gave you your money? Where did you get it from?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. I think Mr. King paid me by check.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. By check or draft, which?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. I will not say whether it was a draft or check.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Was it all at one time?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. No, sir.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. Different times?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. Each month; the 1st of each month Mr. King would send me a check for my expenses and the amount agreed upon.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. What was the amount agreed upon?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. $150 a month and expenses.

Mr. ALFRED LUCKING. For work in Grand Rapids?

Mr. GLOCHESKI. For work in the entire State of Michigan.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has called attention to the workers employed on primary day to have the last word with the voters. I wish to read that again. It will be found on page 854 of the bill of exceptions, being a letter from Mr. Floyd, giving a general review of the conditions in each of the counties over which he was exercising some degree of supervision, as follows:

In addition to the above and in general, I have encouraged all of the organizations to make as wide a distribution of literature as possible during the remaining days of the campaign. I have arranged with them also to provide for representation at each voting precinct the entire day of the primaries so that through this whole district you can be sure that there will be at least one man and in some cases two or three giving their entire time in saying the final word.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], I see, has temporarily left the Chamber. I wanted again to inquire of him if he has any disposition to change the statement in the report to the effect that, though the amount was large, it was spent entirely for legal and proper purposes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri will be back in just a moment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to state here that while that statement was made by Mr. Floyd, that he had made arrangements that they should be there, the fact is that there was not a man in the State of Michigan working at the polls on primary day. They had direct instructions not to employ anyone. That letter was evidently put in, but not a single man in the State of Michigan was employed on primary day.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The important point is that he had arranged to do it and had already hired them to do it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Well, he so says.

Mr. TOWNSEND. He said that he had made arrangements; but that is a statement that is not proven, and it did not occur.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Simmons
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Spencer
Capper	Kendrick	Oddie	Stanley
Caraway	Kenyon	Overman	Swanson
Curtis	Keyes	Page	Townsend
France	King	Phipps	Trammell
Gerry	Ladd	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Glass	La Follette	Poindexter	Warren
Gooding	McCumber	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Hale	McKellar	Ransdell	Watson, Ind.
Harrison	McLean	Robinson	Williams
Heflin	McNary	Sheppard	Willis
Hitchcock	Myers	Shortridge

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, on this outline of the facts—all too inadequate, as I realize—I desire to address myself to the law which I conceive to be applicable and controlling in this controversy.

I lay down these propositions:

(1) If Truman Newberry spent or participated in the spending of more than $3,750 in this campaign, he is not entitled to his seat in this body.

(2) If the committee were his agents, and flagrantly and continuously violated the law for the purity of elections in the State of Michigan, his election is void, and he is not entitled to his seat in this body.

(3) If the committee were not his agents, and yet persistently and continuously violated the law with his knowledge, and he did not protest and seek to compel them to desist, the election, so far as he is concerned, is void, and he is not entitled to his seat in this body.

(4) If the committee even were not his agents but they persistently and flagrantly violated the law of the State of Michigan in the conduct of the campaign, and he did not know anything at all about it, and such illegal conduct probably affected the result, the election is void, and he is not entitled to his seat in this body.

We shall have to inquire and examine into each one of these particular considerations.

Of course, Mr. President, bear in mind again that the statute of the United States—I am speaking now about the Federal statute, the statute that we enacted for the purpose of insuring purity in the election of Senators and Representatives—condemns not only the contributing of an amount in excess of $10,000, or such sum as is fixed by the State statute, but prohibits as well the expenditure by the candidate of such an amount of money, whether he contributes it or whether somebody else contributes it. If, then, the gentlemen who conducted this campaign in the State of Michigan and confessed to have expended $195,000 were the agents of Truman H. Newberry, of course he expended that amount of money. Moreover, even if that is not true, and they were his agents, and they openly and flagrantly and continuously and persistently violated the law of the State of Michigan in the conduct of the campaign, the election is void. But even if they were not his agents, I propose to establish, and I think conclusively, that if they did so violate the law, then it was his duty to call the attention of these people who were thus conducting the campaign to the fact, and to compel them to desist from doing so, and if he did not do so his election is void. And, finally, if he was absolutely ignorant of the whole thing, and yet they did encompass his election by plain and open violation of law, he would not be entitled to his seat.

I discussed with the Senate some time ago this question of agency; but the rule of agency, so far as elections are concerned, is one that is not just exactly the same as the rule in respect to agency concerning ordinary business transactions. A very much more liberal rule, in the interest of the public and in the interest of purity of elections, is laid down by the courts than is the case in civil actions. This is not only the law of this country, but it is the law of Great Britain.

I read from page 548 of Hodgkins's Election Cases for the Province of Ontario, as follows:

The law of agency as regards parliamentary elections is not the ordinary law of agency, but a special law. The usual rule is that where an agent acts contrary to his instructions the principal is not bound; but in parliamentary agency it is different, for there the principal is liable for all acts of the agent whatsoever, even though they be done contrary to his express instructions.

That is, assuming that the agency exists.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, is it not true that under our practice an agent can not do an illegal act within the authority of his agency?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly; but if he is generally clothed with authority in the premises he becomes liable, as a matter of course, and of course if the principal joins with him the principal is liable, just the same as the agent is liable.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator, an agent may commit a tortious act while he is seeking to execute the purpose of his principal and he may commit an illegal act, which may infract the statute in the execution of his principal's purpose and subject himself to criminal prosecution as well as to civil liability.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me make a further explanation to the Senator. Of course, a corporation can act only through its agents, and if the principle suggested by the Senator from Maryland were correct, you never could convict a corporation of a criminal act at all, because it must act through its agents.

The point is this, that if the agent is clothed with such authority as would be understood to be either authorized or approved by the principal, and in the course of his agency he does an illegal act, the principal becomes liable for it, and becomes liable criminally as well as civilly.

Upon the same doctrine, as suggested, the owner of a saloon is liable for the wrongful sale of liquor by his barkeeper, even though he does not know anything about it, because he puts him behind the bar and authorizes him to sell.

In the same volume from which I read before, Hodgkins Election Cases, page 127, I read as follows:

It may be as well here to refer to the reason for the rule why candidates should be made liable for acts done by their agents. Mr. Justice Blackburn refers to it in the Taunton case (1 O.M. & H., 184) in these words: "The rule of parliamentary election law, that a candidate is responsible for the corrupt act of his agent, though he himself not only did not intend it or authorize it, but bona fide did his best to hinder it, is a rule that must at all times fall with great hardship upon particular persons. But I may just mention the considerations which, no doubt, led the common law, as I may call it, of Parliament to establish it. Corruption, as we all know in practice and in fact, is seldom or never done by the hand of the candidate. The two modes in which it was found in practice that corruption was carried on were these: Persons were put forward to do all the work of canvassing and conducting an election, and these persons acted corruptly; but the candidate purposely kept himself out of the knowledge of anything about the matter, so that he might have the full benefit of their services; and were it not for this rule which has been established, he would not suffer for their misdeeds. That is one of the great reasons. Another great reason would be that no doubt people were put forward as to whom the candidate was carefully kept from knowing they were spending any money, or doing anything, with the notion, according to the loose morality that prevailed in election matters, that when the time for petitioning was past, those persons might come to him and say, 'I did spend that £1,000 for you upon the election; of course I did not tell you about it, or say a word about it at the time, but now you are bound in honor to repay me that £1,000 of which you had the benefit'; and which, in point of fact, the candidates did feel themselves bound in honor to pay. This, therefore, was another reason for the parliamentary law declaring that the candidate should be responsible for the act of his agent."

I am not going to have Senators assume the contention made by the supporters of Mr. Newberry, that these people who were running the campaign, Mr. King and his associates, were not the agents of Mr. Newberry. Yet, if they persistently violated the law and he knew it, and did not call upon them to desist, he becomes responsible, so far as his title to the office is concerned, for their violation of the law.

I read from the same volume, at page 247, as follows, the opinion by Draper, chief justice:

It is very satisfactory to me to be able to find that there is no evidence whatever in this case which impugns the personal conduct or character of the respondent. I find not only that he is free from the imputation of any forbidden practice in the course of this election, but that he has endeavored, by earnest advice and caution, to restrain his friends and supporters from doing anything which would enable his opponents to neutralize the success to which he aspired, and render the election in which he confidently anticipated success being open to question through the indiscretion or recklessness of any of them. Unfortunately, his advice was disregarded; the law forbidding the practice of treating and keeping the taverns open during the hours of polling has been wantonly violated, and the principal matter of inquiry is whether any of the leading culprits in these offenses are so far identified with the respondent as in point of law to constitute them his agents and to render him responsible for their illegal acts.

There was a meeting of the electors at Apsley about a week before the polling day. It had been publicly advertised. The respondent, the petitioner, and Maj. Boulton all spoke at it. The respondent had engaged a sleigh, and one Timothy Cavanagh and Maj. Boulton accompanied him to this meeting. They drove first to Holmes's tavern. After the meeting the respondent and Cavanagh returned to Holmes's. The respondent retired almost directly for the night. A number of those electors who attended the meeting went also to Holmes's. Cavanagh treated the people; Holmes says he told him to give the people liquor, and Cavanagh says he treated many times, and that one Boyd, a supporter of Stratton's, the opposing candidate, did so likewise. This continued, as Cavanagh states, from 10 p. m. to 2 a. m. the next morning. The facts are relied upon to show a violation of the sixty-first section of the election law of 1868, by Cavanagh, at the expense of the respondent, or at his own expense, in providing and furnishing drink to a meeting of electors assembled for the purpose of promoting such election. If this be proved, then the question arises, Was Cavanagh the agent for respondent? For if he was, then the latter is answerable for his acts and corrupt practices, though, as in this case, he not only did not authorize them, but actually and in sincerity endeavored to prevent them.

Agency does not necessarily require to be proven by an actual appointment, verbal or written, by the candidate. "It is a result of law to be drawn from the facts of the case and from the acts of the individuals." Every instance in which, with the knowledge of the candidate or his employed agent, say, his expense agent, a person acts at all in furthering the election for him, or in trying to get votes for him, tends to prove that the person so acting was authorized to act as his agent. A repetition of such acts strengthens the conclusion. I found these conclusions upon authorities in the mother country, using to a great extent their very words, but not simply quoting them.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. As it is a national custom to have campaign committees and campaign funds, I would like to know whether the Senator holds that a candidate for President, for instance, is to be held responsible for what his campaign committee does.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Within the law laid down here, beyond question. If he knows that they are conducting the campaign in violation of law, I assert, sir, that the law ought to disqualify him from the discharge of the high duties of President of the United States.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Nothing has been done with regard to the enormous sums of money which have been spent in presidential campaigns.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand now the suggestion is that this thing has been done before, that enormous amounts of money have been spent, that the law has been violated, and consequently we should not do anything about this matter.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Is not that a notorious matter? Does not everybody know it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Assume that it is.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Why not begin with the big men?

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator does not assume that it is usual or customary for Senators to be elected in the manner in which this election was conducted? There is no inference of that kind?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, when the Senator says that Mr. Newberry may be guilty, but there are a lot of other people guilty, and that we ought to begin on them, I can not answer that argument at all.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If the Senator is referring to my statement, he misunderstood me. I have here the decision of Chief Justice White, which is not a dissenting opinion, and Chief Justice White exonerates Mr. Newberry entirely, and the judge who tried him excluded from the jury any accusation of bribery.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I gladly yield to the Senator to read to the Senate the language of Chief Justice White exonerating Mr. Newberry.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I will do that with pleasure.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Was the Senator in the Chamber when I discussed the effect of the decision of the Supreme Court?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I may not have been in at the time. Does the Senator still want me to read the language to which I referred?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator please. I do not want to pass that question at all.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Here is what the court said, on page 18:

At the trial, before the submission of the case to the jury, the court put the fifth count entirely out of the case by instructing the jury to disregard it, as there was no evidence whatever to sustain it. The bribery, therefore, disappeared.

That is what Chief Justice White said.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have not discussed the bribery of voters at all. There was a count that voters had been bribed, and there was no testimony to sustain it, so the Chief Justice said that it was properly dismissed. I have not talked about the bribery of voters at all.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Then I misunderstood the Senator, especially regarding the magazine and the $50—those two incidents.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not contend that they were bribed to vote. I contended that that was to hire them to go out and use their influence, and, at the same time, to get their support of Mr. Newberry. I am not arguing that Mr. Newberry ought to be unseated because any voters were bribed. I am arguing that Mr. Newberry ought to be unseated, first, because the committee who were his agents spent more than $3,750; second, I am arguing that he ought to be unseated because the committee, his agents, grossly and flagrantly violated the statute of the State of Michigan; in other words, hired those men to go to work for Newberry.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Does not the law of Michigan allow just that very thing?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will read that directly, if the Senator will do me the honor to listen to me.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I have listened to the Senator, and always do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I appreciate that. I think the Senator will be convinced that the law of Michigan does not allow that; on the contrary, that the law of Michigan expressly condemns it, very justly, and not only does the law of Michigan condemn it, but the common law condemns it, and the statute of the State of Michigan is nothing more nor less than an expression of the common law.

I read from page 555 of the same volume from which I read a while ago—

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The law is contained on pages 75 and 76 of Mr. Hughes' brief, and the ninth part of the statute certainly does seem to cover the employment of canvassers.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will reach that directly, I will say to the Senator. In this case the court says:

I exonerate the respondent personally from any complicity in the corrupt acts committed; but I think it my duty to say that I can scarcely conceive that Mr. D. B. Maclellan and Mr. H. S. Macdonald would have acted in the manner in which they appear to have acted at this election if they had appreciated the gravity of the acts committed by them.

At page 665 the court says:

I do not doubt that if a candidate, who has appointed no agents, is made aware that some of his supporters are systematically working for him, and by any act (or perhaps even by forbearance to interpose) can be fairly deemed to recognize and adopt their proceedings in order to further his election, he makes them his agents and must take the consequences. A contrary rule would encourage fraud and corruption and facilitate evasions of the law.

Mr. President, I want to discuss the subject of paid workers, but I have now been talking for some time and feel somewhat fatigued, and I would be very glad to have this matter go over until Monday morning before I take up that important phase of the case.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bail	Hitchcock	Oddie	Spencer
Borah	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Stanley
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sterling
Capper	Kendrick	Philpotts	Swanson
Caraway	Keyes	Pittman	Townsend
Curtis	King	Poinsett	Trammell
Dial	Ladd	Pomeroy	Walsh, Mass.
France	La Follette	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Gerry	McCumber	Robinson	Warren
Glass	McKellar	Sheppard	Watson, Ga.
Gooding	McNary	Shortridge	Watson, Ind.
Hale	Myers	Simmons	Willis
Harrison	Nelson	Smith
Heflin	Norris	Smoot

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Montana has the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in connection with the letter to which I invited attention, from Floyd to King, telling that he had employed men to be at the polls all day on election day in order to give the very last word to the voters, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] advised the Senate that no man was at the polls on election day. He evidently overlooked the testimony of Mr. Sherwood appearing in the record at page 884. The witness is telling what Sherwood testified to before the grand jury.

He said, "I employed men to work at the polls on election day in five precincts in our city." I correct that. He said he employed men to work at the polls on election day; that there were five precincts in the city; he had put men in each of the four precincts, but none in the other. He said, "I paid these men $7 per day." He also had a man out over the city reporting the sentiment, and he paid him $50 per month.

Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] whether we might not very properly adjourn at this time?

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator wish to stop now?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like very much to do so.

Mr. CURTIS. May I inquire if there is anyone else who might occupy an hour? We were desirous of remaining in session until 5 o'clock and then having an executive session. However, if the Senator from Montana can not go on and if the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] is willing, it will be perfectly satisfactory to have an executive session now.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator from Montana have any idea about how much more time he will require?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think another hour or two will enable me to conclude.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator withhold that motion a moment? There are a couple of bridge bills which are ready to be reported favorably, which we desire to have passed, if possible.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have three bridge bills to report from the Committee on Commerce, which ought to be passed.

Mr. CURTIS. I withhold the motion for that purpose.

BRIDGES ACROSS WHITE RIVER, ARK.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I report back favorably without amendment, from the Committee on Commerce, the bill (S. 2724) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the White River, in Prairie County, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 318) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Harry E. Bovay, his successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the White River, at a point where the Bankhead Highway now crosses the said river, said point being now designated as just south of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Co.'s bridge, near the city of De Valls Bluff, county of Prairie and State of Arkansas. Said bridge shall be constructed at or near such point as is most suitable to the interests of navigation and in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 23, 1906, entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters."

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. 2722) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the White River at or near the town of Des Arc, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 320) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, in line 7, after the word "extend," to strike out "three years" and to insert "one year"; and, in the same line, before the word "years," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "six" and to insert "three," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved February 19, 1920, to be built across the White River at or near the town of Des Arc, Ark., by Gordon N. Peay, jr., his heirs and assigns, are hereby extended one year and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS TOMBIGBEE RIVER, MISS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I report back favorably without amendment, from the Committee on Commerce, the bill (H. R. 7394) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Ironwood Bluff, in the county of Itawamba, Miss., and I submit a report (No. 319) thereon. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto authorized by the act of Congress approved January 15, 1920, to be constructed by the board of supervisors of Itawamba County, Miss., across the Tombigbee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Ironwood Bluff, in the county of Itawamba, in the State of Mississippi, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented a telegram in the nature of a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Cheyenne, Wyo., praying for the immediate enactment of the supplemental prohibition bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Methodist Episcopal Church of Big Horn, Wyo., favoring the immediate enactment of the supplemental prohibition bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution adopted by the Atlanta (Ga.) Woman's Club, favoring the enactment of legislation granting citizenship to American Indians, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Escanaba (Mich.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the passage of the so-called French-Capper truth in fabric bill, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by the trustees of the Cincinnati (Ohio) Museum Association, favoring the placing of the governmental scientific bureaus at Washington under the jurisdiction of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANSDELL presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Senate concurrent resolution 14. By Mr. Williamson.

Whereas the Federal Government, under the provisions of the flood control act of the United States Congress, has committed itself to a definite program for the construction and completion of the levee system along the Mississippi River; and

Whereas the appropriation on the part of the United States allotted to the several Mississippi River Commission districts is about to be exhausted and there is impending the closing down of all of the levee-building machinery and other work for the prevention of floods; and Whereas the danger of overflow still exists owing to the incompleteness of the levee system; and

Whereas the work of construction can now be continued at an economical cost: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Louisiana (the House of Representatives concurring), That the United States Congress be petitioned and urged to immediately make an emergency appropriation to continue the work now going on and to later continue the appropriation heretofore made for this purpose;

And that a copy of this resolution be immediately sent to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Louisiana in Congress.

DELOS R. JOHNSON,
President Pro Tempore of the Senate.
R. F. WALKER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RANSDELL also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House concurrent resolution 38. By Mr. Teekell.

Whereas through the industry characteristic of Americans on the part of our fellow citizens of Arizona, California, and New Mexico the cotton producers of those States are placing on the markets of the world a quality of cotton which competes with the excellent quality of cotton produced on the Nile and in other English-controlled colonies; and

Whereas since cotton from Arizona, California, and New Mexico has entered the world's markets persistent attempts to depress the prices of that grade of cotton are being made through the influence of spinners and large cotton dealers abroad and at home; and

Whereas the Dial bill now pending in Congress is clearly in the interest of the spinners and large spot-cotton dealers, as said bill endeavors to restrict the delivery of cotton on future contracts to less than 10 grades as now provided by an amendment to the United States cotton futures act; and

Whereas when the United States cotton futures act became a law in 1916 it placed cotton dealings through exchanges under the supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture and provided for the delivery of 20 grades of cotton on contract, and this provision was clearly in the interest of cotton producers, who are powerless to prevent dust and rain from affecting cotton, and tests made by the United States Department of Agriculture proved that the spinning value of cotton outlawed by the 10 grade amendment was not injured, and that the tensile strength of some of this outlawed cotton was about the same as higher grades of cotton; so be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana (the Senate concurring), That we oppose the Dial bill and similar legislation which will have the effect of interfering with the marketing of cotton all over the world for producers, and we memorialize Congress to this end; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to every Member of the Louisiana delegation and a copy to the Clerk of House and Senate in Congress and given to the press.

I hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of House resolution No. 38, adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana.

E. J. TALLIEU,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RANSDELL also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

House concurrent resolution 30. By Mr. De Paoli.

A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to prohibit transmission through the mails or in interstate commerce of information concerning betting on horse races.

Whereas, subsequent to the prohibition of bookmaking on race tracks by Louisiana and other States, handbook betting has become a pernicious and demoralizing form of gambling, tempting young and old of both sexes, exercising a corrupting influence over American youth and manhood, often leading to great crimes and wrecking many homes; and

Whereas the State of Louisiana has enacted legislation denouncing handbook betting as gambling, punishable by fine and imprisonment; and

Whereas enforcement of such legislation is rendered difficult, if not impossible, by reason of the fact that there is no inhibition against the interstate transmission, by telegraph, telephone, express, and Postal Service of information concerning horse racing, including entries, form charts, betting odds, tips, and similar sinister suggestions essential to the successful operation of handbooks; and

Whereas the suppression of this vice is, therefore, a national problem, not one with which the States individually may deal successfully, a problem on all fours with that of the Louisiana lottery, the destruction of which was only made possible by congressional action in 1891, denying it the use of the mails and express service for the transmission of its tickets and the results of its drawings; and

Whereas Louisiana and other States in which this evil has found lodgment and daily increases its ramifications are entitled to the support of the National Government in their effort to suppress it for the protection of the weal of their several communities: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana (the Senate concurring), That the Senate of the United States be memorialized to pass the act which has passed the National House of Representatives, which will forbid and penalize the transmission by telegraph, telephone, mail, or express, or other medium of interstate transportation of form charts, entries, betting odds, tips, and other methods of suggestions, since it has been demonstrated that the only effective method of combating such an evil, as evidenced by Federal laws relative to lotteries, is action taken by the Federal Congress.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state is hereby directed to immediately transmit to the United States Senate and to the Louisiana delegation in Congress certified copies of this resolution.

R. F. WALKER,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

HEWITT BOUANCHAUD,

Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

Approved November 4, 1921.

[SEAL.]

JNO. M. PARKER,

Governor of the State of Louisiana.

A true copy.

JAMES J. BURLEY,

Secretary of State.

AMENDMENT OF RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION BILL.

Mr. RANDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8331) to amend the transportation act, 1920, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

At the end of line 23, page 2, insert the following proviso: "Provided, That no portion of the fund arising from the sale of bonds, notes, and securities authorized herein shall be used by the President for the purpose described in section 202 hereof, to settle with those transportation systems which have preferential contracts with foreign ship companies, so long as the contracts continue in effect."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, November 21, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate November 19 (legislative day of November 16), 1921.

AID IN COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

August Hans Wagener, of Maryland, to be aid, with relative rank of ensign in the Navy, by promotion from deck officer, in the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, in the Department of Commerce, vice H. C. Warwick, promoted.

APPOINTMENT IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

GENERAL OFFICER.

Col. Joseph Compton Castner, Infantry, to be brigadier general from November 14, 1921.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Commander Edward T. Constien to be a captain in the Navy from the 3d day of June, 1921.

Lieut. Commander David Lyons to be a commander in the Navy from the 1st day of January, 1921.

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders in the Navy from the 3d day of June, 1921:

Byron McCandless.	George C. Pegram.
William E. Eberle.	Theodore G. Ellyson.
John W. Wilcox, jr.	Russell Willson.
Leigh Noyes.	Arthur L. Bristol, jr.

Lieut. Commander Frank J. Fletcher to be a commander in the Navy from the 25th day of June, 1921.

Lieut. Commander Walter F. Jacobs to be a commander in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1921.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders in the navy from the 3d day of June, 1921:

Harold T. Smith.	Benjamin V. McCandlish.
Arthur S. Dysart.	Edmund S. R. Brandt.
Wallace L. Lind.	Freeland A. Daubin.
Charles E. Reordan.	Virgil J. Dixon.
Mark C. Bowman.	Clifford E. Van Hook.
Charles M. Elder.	Walter E. Brown.

Harry W. Hosford.

Melville S. Brown.

Henry B. Cecil.

Lieut. Robert T. Young to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1921.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) George E. Maynard to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1920.

Ensign Leonard Doughty, jr., to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 30th day of March, 1920.

Ensign George E. Maynard to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 28th day of June, 1920.

The following-named passed assistant surgeons to be surgeons in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant commander from the 11th day of May, 1921:

Harry E. Jenkins.

Stanley D. Hart.

Robert G. Davis.

Asst. Surg. Joseph H. Durrett to be a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant from the 30th day of January, 1920.

Asst. Surg. William C. Darwin to be a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant from the 6th day of December, 1920.

Asst. Surg. Paul V. Greedy to be a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant from the 6th day of June, 1920.

Passed Asst. Dental Surg. James L. Brown to be a dental surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant commander from the 11th day of May, 1921.

Civil Engineer Reuben E. Bakenhus to be a civil engineer in the Navy with the rank of captain from the 1st day of October, 1921.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Harry F. Newton for temporary service to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1920, in accordance with a provision contained in the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Irwin G. Sooy, United States Naval Reserve Force, to be an ensign in the Navy from the 4th day of June, 1920, in accordance with a provision contained in the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920.

Asst. Paymaster David W. Robinson for temporary service to be an assistant paymaster in the Navy with the rank of ensign from the 6th day of June, 1919, in accordance with a provision contained in the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920.

The following-named officers for temporary service to be chief pharmacists in the Navy to rank with but after ensign from the 5th day of August, 1920, in accordance with a provision contained in the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920:

De Witt C. Allen.

Herman C. Roe.

The following-named officers for temporary service to be chief boatswains in the Navy, to rank with but after ensign, from the 5th day of August, 1920, in accordance with a provision contained in the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920:

Forest E. Frost.

George A. Spedden.

Clarence R. Reed.

Thomas F. Langseth.

The following-named officers for temporary service to be chief gunners in the Navy, to rank with but after ensign, from the 5th day of August, 1920, in accordance with a provision contained in the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920:

Hal W. Barnes.

Edward L. Moyer.

Howard A. Booth.

The following-named officers for temporary service to be chief machinists in the Navy, to rank with but after ensign, from the 5th day of August, 1920, in accordance with a provision contained in the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920:

Emmet L. Bourke.

Leo E. Gray.

Nicholas Keding.

Louis Verbrugge.

Elmer O. Davis.

Emmet C. Thurman.

Shine S. Halliburton.

Alfred Hayes.

The following-named officers for temporary service to be chief carpenters in the Navy, to rank with but after ensign, from the 5th day of August, 1920, in accordance with a provision contained in the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920:

Alfred L. Johnson.

Joseph P. Emms.

Lott C. Newton.

Ellis B. Berkstresser.

Armand Mayville.

John Reid, jr.

Evert O. Smith.

Robert J. Leahy.

Goldsboro Sessions.

Merick A. Beach.

Frederick A. Johnson.

Benjamin B. Britt.

William Tavenner.

Ensign Kenneth G. Clark, United States Naval Reserve Force, to be a chief gunner in the Navy, to rank with but after ensign, from the 5th day of August, 1920, in accordance with a provision contained in the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920.

The following-named officers of the United States Naval Reserve Force to be chief carpenters in the Navy, to rank with but after ensign, from the 5th day of August, 1920, in accordance with a provision contained in the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920:

Clifford J. Lishman.
Chris A. Rodegerdts.

POSTMASTERS. CONNECTICUT.

Joseph Brush to be postmaster at Greenwich, Conn., in place of W. S. Meany, resigned.

GEORGIA.

Forrest C. Berry to be postmaster at Young Harris, Ga. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

ILLINOIS.

Chalon T. Land to be postmaster at Enfield, Ill., in place of J. M. Connery. Incumbent's commission expired September 4, 1920.

Willis J. Huston to be postmaster at Rochelle, Ill., in place of John Coleman, deceased.

William F. Koch to be postmaster at Union, Ill. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

INDIANA.

Charles H. Ruple to be postmaster at Earl Park, Ind., in place of C. C. Leisure. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

Kent A. Brewer to be postmaster at Greenwood, Ind., in place of W. W. Drake, resigned.

Albert W. Bitters to be postmaster at Rochester, Ind., in place of Otto McMahan, resigned.

William F. Kahler to be postmaster at Winamac, Ind., in place of E. S. Rees, resigned.

William D. Crow to be postmaster at Petersburg, Ind., in place of D. D. Corn. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

IOWA.

James E. Carr to be postmaster at Farmington, Iowa, in place of J. S. Forgrave. Incumbent's commission expired August 7, 1921.

Theodore E. Templeton to be postmaster at Paton, Iowa, in place of W. H. Fowler. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Anna A. Gough to be postmaster at Palmer, Iowa. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

MAINE.

Ernest E. Pike to be postmaster at Princeton, Me., in place of G. W. Swan, resigned.

Edmund O. Collins to be postmaster at Bridgewater Center, Me. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Flavie Fournier to be postmaster at Eagle Lake, Me. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Archie D. Clark to be postmaster at East Corinth, Me. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

MARYLAND.

Howard F. Owens to be postmaster at Betterton, Md., in place of K. E. Brice. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1921.

MICHIGAN.

Leonard B. Carter to be postmaster at Fennville, Mich., in place of H. L. Reynolds, declined.

Ettie M. Meyer to be postmaster at Fowler, Mich., in place of G. T. Baldwin. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

MINNESOTA.

Thomas S. Smith to be postmaster at Dilworth, Minn. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

MONTANA.

Mattie C. Donaldson to be postmaster at Froid, Mont., in place of M. C. Donaldson. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

Georgiana C. Wilson to be postmaster at Lehigh, Mont., in place of H. C. Higgins, resigned.

Harry L. Coulter to be postmaster at Plains, Mont., in place of W. P. Willis, resigned.

Luther M. Hoham to be postmaster at Saco, Mont., in place of F. W. Tarwater (named changed by marriage).

Roy C. Stageberg to be postmaster at Westby, Mont., in place of T. R. Reuter. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1920.

George W. Edkins to be postmaster at Glacier Park, Mont. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

NEBRASKA.

Edwin R. Frady to be postmaster at Oakdale, Nebr., in place of E. R. Frady, declined.

Mary E. Hossack to be postmaster at Sutherland, Nebr., in place of Eustis Quinn, resigned.

NEW MEXICO.

William W. Dedman to be postmaster at Hurley, N. Mex., in place of H. S. Boise, resigned.

Ella T. Roberts to be postmaster at Gibson, N. Mex. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Nora A. Keithly to be postmaster at Hot Springs, N. Mex. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

NEW YORK.

Marion L. Lewis to be postmaster at Gilboa, N. Y., in place of Willis Baker. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1920.

Darwin E. Hibbard to be postmaster at North Collins, N. Y., in place of Joseph Thiel. Incumbent's commission expired January 11, 1920.

Wilbur C. Eaton to be postmaster at Youngstown, N. Y., in place of M. G. Wellman. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

OHIO.

Everett W. White to be postmaster at Albany, Ohio, in place of H. W. Reeder. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1921.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Ralph S. Hood to be postmaster at Beaver Falls, Pa., in place of Arthur McKean, resigned.

Thomas G. Wood to be postmaster at Elkland, Pa., in place of Joseph Smith. Incumbent's commission expired June 2, 1920.

Katharyn L. McClellan to be postmaster at Marienville, Pa., in place of K. L. McClellan. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1921.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

S. T. Waldrop to be postmaster at Greer, S. C., in place of W. E. James, resigned.

Cary Smith to be postmaster at Manning, S. C., in place of H. H. Bradham, resigned.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Ollie V. Loughlin to be postmaster at Colman, S. Dak., in place of L. P. Snyder. Incumbent's commission expired August 26, 1920.

TEXAS.

Willie L. Weaver to be postmaster at Cooledge, Tex., in place of J. M. Hill. Incumbent's commission expired September 1, 1920.

UTAH.

Walter Cannon to be postmaster at St. George, Utah, in place of D. R. Forsha. Incumbent's commission expired January 5, 1920.

WASHINGTON.

Lester S. Overholt to be postmaster at Omak, Wash., in place of L. S. Overholt. Incumbent's commission expired August 7, 1920.

WEST VIRGINIA.

James P. Peek to be postmaster at Mabscott, W. Va., in place of J. P. Peek. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1920.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate November 19 (legislative day of November 16), 1921.

PROMOTIONS IN THE CONSULAR SERVICE.

CONSUL GENERAL OF CLASS 2.

Nathaniel B. Stewart.

CONSUL GENERAL OF CLASS 3.

Alexander W. Weddell.

William H. Gale.

CONSUL GENERAL OF CLASS 4.

Douglas Jenkins.
Claude I. Dawson.

CONSULAR INSPECTOR.

William Dawson.

CONSUL OF CLASS 3.

Tracy Lay.
Ezra M. Lawton.
Edwin L. Neville.

CONSUL OF CLASS 4.

Kenneth S. Patton.
Henry H. Balch.
Wilbur Keblinger.

CONSUL OF CLASS 5.

Felix Cole.	Hamilton C. Claiborne.
J. Klahr Huddle.	Leslie E. Reed.
Ernest L. Ives.	Keith Merrill.
Paul Knabenshue.	James P. Davis.
George K. Donald.

CONSUL OF CLASS 6.

Thomas M. Wilson.	Thomas R. Owens.
William C. Burdett.	Joseph E. Jacobs.
Henry S. Waterman.

CONSUL OF CLASS 7.

Samuel H. Wiley.

COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION.

Luther Weedon to be Commissioner of Immigration, port of Seattle, Wash.

POSTMASTERS.

ILLINOIS.

Charles A. Jean, Anna.
James E. Harley, Aurora.
James F. Mill, Hillsdale.
Emma H. Howe, Ravinia.

INDIANA.

Priscilla M. McDole, Clarks Hill.
Marion L. Medcalf, Dale.
Roy L. McCullough, New Palestine.

KANSAS.

Leslie Fitts, Reading.

MAINE.

William R. Elliott, Skowhegan.
Nellie O. Gardner, Smyrna Mills.
Maybelle Medeiros, Vanceboro.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Harold E. Cairns, Bernardston.
Harry D. Whitney, Milford.
George T. McLaughlin, Sandwich.
Harriette L. Smith, West Newbury.

MISSOURI.

Margaret E. Matson, Barnard.
Henry C. Oehler, Bismarck.
Arthur F. Goetz, Canton.
Oral G. Brown, Fair Play.
Frederick D. Williams, Fulton.
Chester D. Green, Hume.
Edward Baumgartner, Linn.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Sarah J. Moore, Alstead.
Thomas J. Donovan, Ashuelot.
Ambrose P. McLaughlin, Bretton Woods.
Arthur H. Wilcomb, Chester.
Ernest L. Abbott, Derry.
Charles E. Beede, Fremont.
Arthur K. Merrill, Haverhill.
James A. Reed, Union.

NEW MEXICO.

Guy Miner, Des Moines.

NORTH CAROLINA.

William S. Carawan, Columbia.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Henry C. Boyd, Finleyville.

TENNESSEE.

Willard J. Springfield, Chattanooga.
Carus S. Hicks, Clinton.
Peyton B. Anderson, Greenback.
Fred S. Pipkin, Lafayette.
Adam W. Meek, Mascot.
James M. Antwine, Middleton.
Evan D. Phillips, Oliver Springs.

WISCONSIN.

Clarence Nelson, Boyd.
Frank J. Duquaine, Crivitz.
Albert C. Wagner, Edgar.
Roy L. Thompson, Hancock.
Charles E. Juza, Haugen.
Amasa J. Edminster, Holcombe.
Amund J. Amundson, New Auburn.
Julia D. Knappmiller, Pound.
John H. Bunker, jr., Turtle Lake.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, November 19, 1921.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by Hon. William Tyler Page, its Clerk, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM,
November 19, 1921.

To the CLERK OF THE HOUSE:

I hereby designate Mr. WALSH to act as Speaker to-day.

F. H. GILLET.

Mr. WALSH assumed the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chaplain will offer prayer.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, according to Thy infinite love we have found satisfaction at Thy table and peace of mind in Thy truth. May all that is best in us rise up to give Thee grateful answer. O bless the old in their wisdom, the young in their opening dream, the busy man in his honest labor, and the patient mother in her beautiful ministry. Grant that in Thee all may find the index to character and the way to the highest attainment. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum and move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Thirty-one Members are present—not a quorum. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Fish	Kreider	Rossdale
Andrew, Mass.	Fitzgerald	Langley	Rucker
Anthony	Flood	Larson, Minn.	Sabath
Bell	Focht	Linthicum	Sanders, N. Y.
Blakeney	Fordney	Longworth	Schall
Bland, Ind.	Frear	Lyon	Scott, Mich.
Bowers	Freeman	McSwain	Sears
Brand	Frithingham	Madden	Shelton
Britten	Gahn	Mann	Shreve
Browne, Wis.	Gallivan	Mansfield	Siegel
Burke	Garrett, Tex.	Merritt	Slomp
Campbell, Pa.	Goodykoontz	Michaelson	Smith, Idaho
Cantrill	Gorman	Mills	Smithwick
Carter	Gould	Moores, Ind.	Snell
Chandler, Okla.	Graham, Pa.	Morin	Snyder
Christopherson	Green, Iowa	Mott	Steagall
Clarke, N. Y.	Griest	Mudd	Stiness
Classon	Haugen	Nolan	Stoll
Codd	Hawes	O'Brien	Sullivan
Collier	Herrick	O'Connor	Summers, Wash.
Connally, Tex.	Himes	Oliver	Taylor, Ark.
Connell	Hogan	Overstreet	Taylor, Colo.
Connolly, Pa.	Houghton	Padgett	Ten Eyck
Copley	Hukriede	Paige	Thomas
Coughlin	Humphreys	Parker, N. Y.	Thompson
Cramton	Ireland	Parks, Ark.	Tilson
Curry	Jefferis, Nebr.	Patterson, N. J.	Tinkham
Dale	Johnson, Ky.	Perlman	Treadway
Dallinger	Kahn	Peters	Tyson
Davis, Minn.	Keller	Petersen	Vare
Davis, Tenn.	Kelley, Mich.	Pou	Voigt
Dempsey	Kindred	Purnell	Ward, N. Y.
Dickinson	Kinkaid	Rainey, Ala.	Wason
Drane	Kitchin	Rainey, Ill.	Wingo
Driver	Klecka	Ransley	Woodyard
Echols	Kline, N. Y.	Riordan
Elston	Knight	Roach
Fenn	Kopp	Rogers

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 283 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KINDRED, by unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. LEA of California), was granted leave of absence for six days, on account of illness in his family.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

Mr. LONDON rose.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1039.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that motion for a moment?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. I desire to present a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold his motion?

Mr. WINSLOW. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that I be allowed 20 minutes in my own time to address the House on the subject of the bill. I ask that I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on the subject of the so-called maternity bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the House has not gone into committee yet.

Mr. LONDON. Can I make that request in the committee? I thought the committee had no control of its time. I thought the request should be made to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to address the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration of the bill S. 1039, for 20 minutes, the time not to be taken out of the time already agreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. WINSLOW. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 1039) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York, Mr. HUSTED, will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 1039) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States, with Mr. HUSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 1039.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, will you kindly announce the time left over from yesterday?

The CHAIRMAN. On yesterday evening a unanimous-consent agreement was reached limiting the time of this debate, and under that agreement the gentleman from Massachusetts, Col. WINSLOW, controlled two hours and thirty-three minutes, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] two hours, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] 10 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] use his time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] was called away. He was excused just a few moments ago, and in my presence he said to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] that he could have his time.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Just before the close of the session last night the Chairman recognized me for one hour, and I used some of my time. I believe the Chair stated that I had used 25 minutes of my time. I reserved the remainder of my time. Under the arrangements made yesterday allotting the time for debate to-day I will not be deprived of my 35 minutes remaining of my hour, will I?

The CHAIRMAN. The parliamentary clerk advised the Chair that the gentleman reserved the remainder of his time, and that the record so states.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. And I have 35 minutes of my hour still remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 35 minutes still remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. How much general debate does that make in all?

The CHAIRMAN. That makes 4 hours and 43 minutes plus 35 minutes, or 5 hours and 18 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINSLOW. I should like to inquire if the Chair recognizes the gentleman from California, Judge RAKER, to represent the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] to use the 10 minutes allotted to him?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that he will do so if it is entirely agreeable to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED], who has control of that time.

Mr. RAKER. In the presence of Members here last night the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] agreed to yield time to me, but the business of the House was such that he could not yield to me then, and he told me I could have that time this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Under that statement the Chair will be glad to recognize the gentleman.

Mr. RAYBURN. If I understand, Mr. Chairman, the time is to run 5 hours and 18 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, what is the regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, a great deal has been said in regard to this legislation. The matter has been up for a number of years. Full hearings were had before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The various women's organizations of the country from one end of it to the other have not casually or superficially but earnestly and fully considered it with a view to determining what the legislation is and what is desired by these various organizations, and there has been a general consensus of opinion that this legislation will accomplish great good.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I never refuse my distinguished friend from Delaware, although he has had a great deal of time; but knowing his great interest in the matter, and knowing that he will throw some light in favor of the bill although he will speak against it, I will yield for a question.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman stated that some and implied that all of the women of the country were behind this bill. Are there any women's organizations in the country against it?

Mr. RAKER. Well always, without possibly any exceptions, you will find a few scattering outsiders—

Mr. LAYTON. Then it is not unanimous?

Mr. RAKER. From the few who have not looked into it.

Mr. LAYTON. Oh!

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment—and some who have received the advice of some of their medical friends, telling them that it possibly would be better—and by that I mean no personal reflection—

Mr. LAYTON. How does the great medical profession—not myself, but the great medical profession—stand on this question?

Mr. RAKER. I suppose the greater part of them stand for it.

Mr. LAYTON. No; the gentleman does not suppose that if he is well informed.

Mr. RAKER. Of course, there are bound to be some against it, but undoubtedly the great body of the medical profession, if their hearts are in the right place—

Mr. LAYTON. Oh, that is an assumption.

Mr. RAKER. Why, no; the assumption is that their hearts are in the right place.

Mr. LAYTON. It is an assumption that the gentleman knows better than a trained physician knows about a matter of this kind.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, well now, a trained physician or untrained, with medical ability or without medical ability, with experience or without experience, with his usual interest in favor of humanity can not help being in favor of advancing the cause of maternity and child birth and child life.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for just one other question?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAYTON. I belong to the medical profession.

Mr. RAKER. And the gentleman is a good and distinguished member of it.

Mr. LAYTON. And the gentleman belongs to the legal profession. I leave it to the conscience of the legal profession as to which of those professions does the most charity.

Mr. RAKER. Undoubtedly it is the legal profession. [Laughter.] Now, that does not apply generally, but we know it does apply to some.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is it not a well-known fact that members of the medical profession charge the rich for anything they may do for the poor?

Mr. RAKER. Now, let us get down to this bill. The purpose and the only purpose of the bill is to promote the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy as provided in the bill. All our schools and all our efforts in the line of education from the primary schools to the college, all the money spent for schools and for education is to better the condition of the human race. This bill has for its object like education on a specific and on special lines. No one has raised the constitutional question, no one has gone into hysteria over the study of animal life or money expended by the Federal Government for those purposes; no one has gone into hysteria over spending money in order to see that we might have better plant life; no one has gone into hysteria over a thousand and one other things that we are spending money on to better plant and animal life. I have the total sum expended in the last 60 years for information regarding these various subjects to give people an opportunity to raise more horses, cattle, sheep, and hogs, and varieties of plant life. But when it comes down to spending a little money for the purpose of studying human life, human conditions, for the purpose of its betterment, the constitutional question is raised and the cry of economy—for everyone is strong for economy—and therefore no money should be expended for that purpose. That kind of an argument will not suffice as against this bill.

If the great American people through their representatives and through this bureau that is to have charge of it can alleviate the situation, can better the lives of the mothers of America, can save the lives of the children of her children, which according to the statistics run into the thousands of both mother and child each year, is not the country advancing, have we not improved our condition? For after all the whole climax, the very acme of government, is for the purpose of bettering the conditions of human life and making it such that every man in the confines of the Government may have a better opportunity to advance, not only in their mental and physical condition, but in the family condition and the condition of the State and the Nation of which he is a part.

That appears unquestionably to be the object of this bill, and when carried into execution and the work has gone forth and the results have been obtained we will be able to receive a report in two or five years of the splendid results that have been accomplished and the great saving of human life that has come thereby. Therefore I feel justified in voting for this legislation and helping to place it on the statute books. [Applause.]

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. If I have any time.

Mr. KEARNS. How, under the terms of this bill, are you going to organize to carry out its provisions? How are these things going to be accomplished?

Mr. RAKER. These good women, assisted by the Children's Bureau now organized, have a method and will carry it out beyond all question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the lady from Oklahoma [Miss ROBERTSON]. [Applause.]

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, it may seem ungracious to speak of a little incident that occurred once when a Cherokee girl—and very few of our beautiful half-breed Cherokee girls can talk in Cherokee—was suddenly called upon to speak in her own language for the benefit of an assembled audience. But she quickly arose to the occasion and repeated over and over, with different inflections of voice and gesture, the alphabet and counted up to 25. [Laughter.] We have heard the arguments about pigs, and they mean just about as much as the Cherokee alphabet and counting up to 25. [Laughter.]

The committee in reporting out this bill remind me a little of the spoiled child traveling with its mother and nursery governess; mother was absorbed in a novel; young hopeful crying very petulantly; mother said to the nursery governess without looking up from her novel, "Why don't you give him what he wants? I've told you he is too high strung to be crossed in anything." There was a moment's silence, and then a frightened and angry howl. Mother said, "Why don't you give him what he wants?" Poor nursery governess replying, "I did let him have it. It was a bumblebee and it stung him." [Laughter.] The House has been given the bill that it has been crying for; it may prove to have a sting to it. It should be remembered that this bill leads a procession of other hyphenated-title bills. Many of you remember childhood days on the farm. Do you remember when the calves and lambs came thirstily up to the pasture gate; how they crowded each other? Did you ever try to let just one through? Were not all the rest pushing and crowding from the rear, breaking through, till you sought safety behind the gate? I wonder how many of you have seen the numerous little folders that flood the mails, going out from various headquarters to the women's clubs all over the country, calling for club action on the hyphenates that are following this. Have you noticed the duplication of demands and the personal urge in each of them? Sometimes the senders have not consulted each other enough? For instance, their statistics of the number of babies the American Congress is murdering every year vary from 12,000 to 25,000 mothers and from 100,000 to 300,000 babies; but then, as long as you are killing babies, why not kill a plenty? Like the little boy who came in all excited, "Mother, there's more than a million cats fighting out in our back yard." Mother quieted him and insisted that there could not be so many, until finally he admitted, "Well, mother, there's our cat and another fighting and they're making more noise than a million." [Laughter.] More than 10,000,000 club women making a noise over this bill! I think all of you must be rather tired of the infant mortality thermometers that we have had sent to us to look at. I for one am mortally sick of New Zealand in capitals with the notation that her death rate is less than that of any other country. New Zealand statistics, where birth control is legally taught, are based on her white population only and therefore worthless. But her per capita debt is four times ours in spite of not having unwanted babies. Also the whole thermometer, to use plain English, lies, because there is nothing to tell the year for which these statistics were compared; dates are not given. In one of these thermometers it says that the United States lost over 23,000 mothers in 1918. Anybody who remembers the "flu" epidemic of 1918 knows how unfair giving such statistics is. In my judgment, so long as only 23 out of 48 States are in registration areas there are no statistics worth considering.

There are no statistics upon which any but a misleading statement can be based except where there is registration. It is admitted that it is comparatively easy to obtain death statistics because of the death certificate the undertaker must record even where no record is kept of the babies that are born. The 21st of last December Mrs. Florence Kelly, general secretary of the National Consumers League, in a hearing before the House Committee, said:

Every day since the bill was introduced (and we had that hearing on the 7th of January, 1919), six times as many children on an average have died every day—on Sundays, Christmas, and holidays, every day—as there are men in the United States Senate. On each of those days, according to our annual average, 680 little children died. Then, in July, we read in the campaign textbook of the Republican Party these words [reading]:

"The present Congress has appropriated generously for the disabled of the World War. The amounts already applied and authorized for the fiscal year 1920-21 for this purpose reached the stupendous sum of $1,180,571,893. This legislation is significant of the party's purpose in generously caring for the maimed and disabled men of the recent war."

It is hard for a woman's mind to grasp a sum of money like that. I meditated over it from July until December, and then I met one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, who has to do with the disbursing of the funds under the appropriations of Congress. I said to him, "Is that to be taken literally, do you think, Mr. Secretary?" And he said, "Yes; I think so. I think that if you totaled all the items that Congress has appropriated for the disabled soldiers they would amount to $1,180,000,000. Perhaps a little more."

These quotations are from the hearing a year ago; if the lady who made the statement believed them it is difficult to understand how with 10,000,000 club women demanding the passage of this bill when it failed of speedy action, had there been any real affection for the mothers and babies in their hearts they would not have made it merely a matter of resolutions in their clubs, of circulars, of lobbying visits to Congressmen;

they would have cured by their own power this condition themselves. Ten million club women, well-to-do women, women who sit at ease in their comfortable homes or thrill at the woes of the world told over the teacups. [Applause and laughter.] And I belong to six of these clubs. Would they let babies die so waiting for Congress to do what they had power to do in one day of concerted effort? As a matter of fact, the bill as originally introduced, as it now stands, is insignificant in its scope. No unprejudiced mind could for a moment believe that $1,480,000 a year could reach 20,000,000 mothers in the United States. I assume that there are 20,000,000—probably this is an overestimate—but even supposing that there are 10,000,000 only, figure for yourselves the fraction of a dollar this would allow each mother. In listening with the greatest interest to the testimony of Dr. Baker before the committee, my one predominant feeling was that her entire evidence was strongly against this bill. Through her we learn that the city of New York is spending $900,000 a year upon its own welfare work of this kind. New York is sufficient unto its own needs, and upon interrogation, Dr. Baker hastily disclaimed any desire to come under Government direction and control through the Children's Bureau. Doubtless if we could have the evidence of the great army of workers along these lines who are busy all over the United States we would find them also repugnant to the idea of being placed under Federal control. To my mind, in its present form, the greatest danger in this bill is that it will have the effect of interference with far more work that is now being cared for. In the event of its passage good women all over the United States will feel that there is no need longer of effort upon their part, as the Government will do it all. In my home town of Muskogee, Okla., our charity budget calls for $30,000. By this we care for a visiting nurse, day nursery, a friendly visitor, and a health center. We have a county Red Cross nurse who at this time is visiting the rural communities, who takes to the meetings she holds all the necessary equipment for practical demonstration for the care of babies, distributing such literature as may be most helpful in individual cases.

The munificent sum of $18,679 which would be allowed under this bill to the State of Oklahoma would be $242 to each county. The only apology I have to make for my State of Oklahoma is that she has not yet risen above her environment, following the lead of her neighbors, Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, and Colorado, all nonregistration States, instead of her next neighbor on the north, Kansas, a registration State. Not one of these States but is able to care for its own people, not one but has a legislature capable of providing all the financial aid, the plan of work, and the personnel required. It might seem an invidious suggestion to add that if, as suggested by my colleague [Mr. GREENE of Vermont], there are to be, as in the times of King George, "multitudes of new offices and swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out our substance."

If we are to be taxed for them we would rather fix our own rate and personally supervise it through officers of whom we have entire control. [Applause.]

When this bill first was before me as reported out by the committee it seemed to me to have become "denatured" [laughter and applause], to have had eliminated through a wiser and more careful wording its former unlimited autocracy, which placed absolute power in the hands of individuals who—with no unkindness but simply a statement of cold fact—there was every reason to feel were absolutely unsafe because of their constant association with un-American people and un-American principles. You remember that—

Vice is a monster of so frightful mien
As to be hated needs but to be seen;
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

Not yet has the great American people reached the stage of endurance even, and I believed the bill as now pending would make it impossible for conditions to continue with their undermining attacks upon American home life.

There are Members upon this floor who believe in birth control—they have told me so—they were for the bill in its original form. They must surely believe in a revision of the Scriptures, so that instead of the text our mothers used to teach us—we all of us remember it, when we were told that some little child that had gone away to a beautiful home, never to come back—"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," they would have it read, "Suffer not the little children to come unto me."

In a luxurious hotel in a great city, not long since, I saw a dog carefully wrapped in embroidered flannels and costly furs, carried by a white-capped maid for its limousine outing. Let us stop talking about hogs for a little while and talk a little about dogs. [Laughter and applause.]

Birth control for the avenue, while over on the crowded streets we find the children playing. Scripture tells us of the golden streets of the heavenly city, that they will be filled with angel children, but that without are dogs and sorcerers and whoremongers and whoever doeth or maketh a lie.

I have known the confidence of many people. I am not a mother as you know, but God has given me more or less of a mother's heart. [Applause.] I have tried to be a comforter in sorrow, in many instances. I have seen wives torn from the arms of husbands who have been for decades all the world to them. I have been with children. I have been with soldiers going out from home to battle. One time I had an opportunity of looking away down into the human heart, such as I never had before nor since. It was when a boy went off to the Spanish-American War. He asked me then to write to his mother and said that he had run away, that he would not go back to her, but that he did not tell her good-by, and he said, "I know that I am going to die," and he was killed. I have never told all of the things that that boy said, because there are some things so sacred that like the relationship between husband and wife in its beauty none of us may ever know who have not had it. In this case it was a man to whom I went with words of sympathy. I simply held out my hand and said nothing, because the most wonderful boy I had almost ever known had gone away from him, an only child, and there was a petulant, peevish mother at home. The man was trying to bear the burden alone. We stood there a minute in quiet, and never, as long as life lasts shall I forget the look on his face as he said, "Do you think God would punish a man and woman who did not want the care of little children, who did not want the struggle, who wanted only one when they really could have had more, if they had been willing—do you think that is the reason God took that one away from us?"

Mr. Chairman, as long as I live, birth control must always bring up to me the horror of that man's grief. Is the birth control yet in the bill as it was? I am not certain whether it be eliminated, as it is, but I believe and hope it is. The originators of the bill certainly favored it, judging by the membership that they hold in various societies.

All of these propaganda magazines have had upon them many pictures like the one I show you. Is not that wonderful? Surely that will appeal to you men—I shall send it around and let you see it—this picture of a very lively baseball boy. That picture is on the wrapper of a magazine which undertakes to instruct the woman voter.

Mr. YATES. What is the name of the magazine?

Miss ROBERTSON. The Pictorial Review for August, 1921. Here are 50 questions for the woman voter, a test of intelligent citizenship. The article says:

Let no woman citizen be discouraged if she fails in the test suggested in the questions below. There is probably not a man in the House or the Senate of the United States who could score 80 per cent on this test.

The truthfulness of my fellow Members would not tolerate the answers as given.

There are a great many of these questions, part of which, with your permission, I shall insert in the RECORD.

My colleagues on reading them may judge their accuracy, comment on my part being superfluous.

[From the Pictorial Review for August, 1921.]

FIFTY QUESTIONS FOR THE WOMAN VOTER—A TEST OF INTELLIGENT CITIZENSHIP.

[By Ida Clyde Clarke.]

HERE ARE THE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS—STUDY THEM—THEY'RE WORTH IT.

Question. Has the addition of the votes of 25,000,000 women in the United States had any effect on national legislation?

Answer. No. Every bill backed by the organized women of America was sidetracked or killed by the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Question. What bill left to die by that Congress had the unanimous support of the 10,000,000 organized women?

Answer. The Sheppard-Towner bill, known wherever "American" is spoken as the maternity and infancy bill. Never before have Senators and Congressmen received so many letters in support of a measure. This bill was reintroduced in April.

Question. What are the provisions of the maternity and infancy bill?

Answer. It provides Federal aid to the States to promote the care of maternity and infancy. Administration for the Government to be by the Children's Bureau; for the States by the child-hygiene division of State boards of health.

Question. What appropriation does the bill call for?

Answer. From the Government $1,480,000. Of this, $10,000 goes as a free gift to each State. The remaining million is to be divided among the States in proportion to their population on condition that each State appropriate from its treasury an equal sum. Only 5 per cent may be spent by the Children's Bureau. Remainder must go to State.

Question. How does the United States rank in infant mortality?

Answer. Tenth among 20 leading countries, the rate being 124 per 1,000—higher than any European countries except Germany, Austria, Russia, and Italy.

Question. What would be a direct result of the passage of the bill?

Answer. The lives of 200,000 babies and 20,000 mothers who die needlessly would be saved annually.

Question. What American woman said during the war, "It is three times as safe to be a soldier in the trenches as to be an American baby in a cradle"?

Answer. Dr. S. Josephine Baker, head of the department of child hygiene in New York City. Casualties in the allied armies were 4 in a hundred, while the baby deaths in this country are over 12 in a hundred. In 65 cities of the United States the death rate is from 100 to 182 under 1 year of age for every 1,000 born alive. Stillbirths likewise disclose a shocking figure. The black list of 65 cities may be secured from the Voluntary Parenthood League, 206 Broadway, New York City.

Question. What other bill backed by a number of influential organizations failed of passage in the last Congress?

Answer. The Smith-Towner educational bill.

Question. What were the provisions of the Smith-Towner bill?

Answer. The bill provided for the creation of a department of education with a secretary in the President's Cabinet; and for Federal aid for education in the States, but prohibited Federal control.

Question. What new department in the Federal Government is now being widely discussed?

Answer. A department of public welfare with a woman as head.

WHO WILL BE THE FIRST WOMAN CABINET MEMBER?

Question. Who is likely to be the first woman in the President's Cabinet because of her brilliant attainments in public life, her wide popularity, and her achievements in the field of practical politics?

Answer. Mrs. Harriet Taylor Upton, Ohio, mother of the suffrage movement in Ohio, vice-chairman Republican National Committee for Harding campaign. She captivates every audience she addresses. If a new welfare department is created, she may be its head.

Question. Why are organized women, standing solidly for certain national legislation, unable to make their votes effective?

Answer. Because the laws of the Nation are made and administered by a Congress of men, who work under a system that is highly inefficient and extravagant. Under this system—for which Democrats and Republicans are alike responsible—politics has become an end in itself.

Question. How can women voters become articulate in national affairs?

Answer. By changing this system, which is now at its lowest point of efficiency.

Question. How can this system be reformed?

Answer. By electing at least 25 women to Congress who will think straight and who will have courage to stand for what they believe, no matter what their party affiliations. In order to elect 25 women 100 should be nominated.

Question. There have been many honest-minded, conscientious men in Congress; why have they been unable to bring about this reform?

Answer. One man, or a small group of men, is powerless against the system. Daring to oppose it, they are ridiculed, persecuted, and usually eliminated. Unless Members of Congress abuse the franking and the leave-to-print privileges, they have no means of keeping themselves before their constituents. They use the system or they suffer political extinction.

Question. How can women in Congress expect any different treatment from that accorded to men?

Answer. That success of the woman in Congress movement depends on the clean-mindedness of the women chosen. Events that go unnoticed in a Congress of men would be dramatized by them. While women are in the minority they will be "copy" to the newspapers. Because Miss Rankin was reported to have sobbed when she voted on the war question she was "played up" in the papers of the world. There were sobbing men voters on that question, but they were unnoticed. When women refuse to work under a demoralized and a demoralizing system the world will know it. Publicity works miracles.

Question. How many men and how many women have been elected to Congress?

Answer. Twenty-five thousand men and two women—Jeanette Rankin and ALICE ROBERTSON.

DO WOMEN NEED SPECIAL TRAINING?

Question. Is special training needed for women congressional candidates?

Answer. No. The training that average women get managing households, bearing and rearing children, and carrying on the general business of being women, is the best possible training for public life. The problems the country is now facing are human problems. Women act and react from distinctly human motives. If men do not need training for Congress, women do not need it.

Question. What general type of women would be most effective in Congress?

Answer. Middle-aged women who have gone up against the average problems of average life by the simple means of living through them; women of broad human experience, general intelligence, and, above all, fair minded. They may be of any political party, and they should be able to answer the majority of the questions herein propounded.

Question. Should young women be encouraged to enter politics and become conspicuous in public affairs?

Answer. No. Young women should attend strictly to the business of being young. While young they should enjoy the blessings that only youth gives. Young women should spend their time loving and learning and living.

Question. Should candidates be politically wise?

Answer. Not at all. We need in Congress fresh-minded women—"political virgins"—not 10 but three times 10 of them, for some will forget to put oil in their lamps. And they must be watchful lest "political vamps" be lying in wait for the "political virgins."

Question. Did the national political parties include in their platforms the planks insisted upon by the organized women voters?

Answer. No. All of the parties indulged only in deceptive phraseology. The platforms, like the traditional Mother Hubbard, covered everything and touched nothing.

Question. Did women voters realize the deception?

Answer. No. The men pacified them with "foolery." We women were so busy sucking away at the hollow phrases they gave us we never dreamed we were sucking wind.

Question. Have any women been candidates for the United States Senate?

Answer. Yes. Anne Martin of Nevada has twice been a candidate. Of approximately 26,000 votes she captured about 5,000 on an independent ticket. In New York, Rose Schneiderman, Farm Labor Party, received 28,000 votes out of about 3,000,000.

Question. What congressional reform has been inaugurated in Congress after years of agitation on the part of a few interested people?

Answer. The Senate has buried 40 of its useless committees. One of these, the "committee on transportation routes to the seaboard," had not met for more than 40 years. Yet its chairman was allowed the usual complement of clerks, printing privileges, etc. The "committee on the university of the United States" had existed for 30 years, although there is not now and never has been such an institution. The House has done nothing toward burying its dead committees.

Question. Name four of the most glaring extravagances of our National Government.

Answer. (1) The abuse of the franking privilege. One Congressman sent out 640,000 parcels of books in one day—

I wonder where he got them? Is there any woman or man so absolutely credulous as to believe such a statement?

The postage would have cost average citizens 45 cents each. Uncle Sam spent $300,000 for postage that day. If every Congressman abused the privilege to this extent only once each term, it would make a total of $130,000,000. (2) The free-seed habit, which costs the taxpayers $250,000 a year. (3) The leave-to-print privilege. Many speeches that have been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD have never been spoken at all, but are written for campaign purposes. During the recent shortage of print paper the "speechless speeches" printed and sent postage free from Washington cost $442,798.73. They weighed $49,110 pounds. (4) The captured German cannon bills. One Congressman recently introduced bills authorizing the Secretary of War to donate German cannon for 44 towns in his district. If all similar bills introduced in Congress were passed, it would be necessary to start up the Krupp works in Germany to supply the towns.

Question. How much did the war cost us?

Answer. The direct cost was $22,000,000,000, nearly enough to pay the entire cost of running the United States Government from 1791 to 1914. For over two years this country spent more than $1,000,000 an hour. Our expenditures in this war were sufficient to have carried on the Revolutionary War continuously for more than 1,000 years. The pay of the Army during the war cost more than the combined salaries of all the public-school teachers and principals in the United States for the five years of 1912-1916, inclusive.

Question. What is the attitude of women toward war?

Answer. The women of the world are unqualifiedly for peace.

Question. How can peace be secured?

Answer. By the limitation of armaments of all nations.

Question. Is limitation of armaments among the great nations of the earth practicable?

Answer. Leading men of the world seem to have thought so. The preamble to the peace terms with Germany made at Versailles says that Germany shall be disarmed "in order to render possible the initiation of a general limitation of the armament of all nations."

Question. What have the great powers done to carry out the intention stated in the peace terms?

Answer. Nothing. All are planning to increase their armaments to the extreme limit of capacity.

Question. Do men live up to the terms of the peace treaties they make?

Answer. No. Men said, in solemn conclave assembled, long before the European war, that in future wars the use of toxic gases would be prohibited. They ruled out the ruthless use of submarines, and put limitations on the ruthless blockade. Yet all of these restrictions were freely violated during the recent war.

Question. What do women believe is the proper method of settling international disputes?

Answer. The method of arbitration.

Question. Has this method been tried?

Answer. Yes. Because of an agreement between England and the United States we have a transcontinental boundary between the United States and Canada nearly 4,000 miles long, in which there has been for many years not a single fort, a single soldier, or a single gun. Argentina and Chile at one end of the world and Norway and Sweden at the other, have settled their disputes by arbitration. Denmark's three treaties with Italy, Portugal, and the Netherlands withhold no cause, however vital, from reason's peaceful sway.

Question. What can women do to prevent war?

Answer. Women can stand unitedly against the stupendous appropriation bills in Congress. The only hope to prevent future wars lies in an agreement between the three great naval powers—England, Japan, and the United States—to limit their armaments.

Question. Does any nation want war?

Answer. No. Every nation has stated through its official spokesman that it is ready to limit armaments as soon as an agreement can be reached among the great powers.

Question. What nation is the logical one to take the initiative?

Answer. The United States.

Question. Has the United States officially approached either Japan or England on the subject?

Answer. No. Although just as we go to press the Senate has passed a resolution authorizing the President to take such action.

Question. What proportion of our national expenditures is used for war?

Answer. Ninety-three per cent in 1920; 88 per cent in 1921.

Question. How much does our Government spend to establish social justice, develop our farms and forests, our roads and schools, to fight disease, and prevent needless destruction?

Answer. Only 12 cents of every dollar spent is used for all of the national constructive nonmilitary activities.

Question. How much does Uncle Sam owe?

Answer. We have a vast load of unpaid bills for this year amounting to over $2,838,000,000, besides an extra burden of over $855,000,000 for large military and naval establishments.

Question. What is the average cost of war to us as individuals?

Answer. $40 each, or $200 for each family of five—enough to pay the fees of one child at the university for a year.

Question. How does America show its lack of recognition of the importance of education?

Answer. By spending more money for luxuries than we spend for education. The amount paid for jewelry is nearly $100,000,000 more than that spent for salaries of teachers in the elementary and high schools. The total sum we spend for jewelry is more than the total productive funds of all endowed colleges and universities in the United States.

Question. Do we spend as much for teachers' salaries as we do for cigarettes?

Answer. No. The cost of cigarettes in 1921 is twice as much as the salaries of teachers in elementary and high schools. In 1920 we blew away in smoke of cigars and cigarettes $300,000,000 more than the total cost of all education in 1918.

Question. What 12 national organizations of women have united in formation of a woman's joint congressional committee in Washington, and who are the members of this committee?

Answer. American Association of University Women, Mrs. Raymond Morgan; American Home Economics Association, Miss Gertrude Van Hoesen; General Federation of Women's Clubs, Miss Lida Haford; Girls' Friendly Society in America, Mrs. Graham Powell; National Board of the Y. W. C. A., Miss McArthur; National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teachers' Association, Mrs. Milton P. Higgins; National Consumers' League, Mrs. Florence Kelley; National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Miss Mary Stewart; National League of Women Voters, Mrs. Maud Wood Park; National Society Daughters of the American Revolution; National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. Ellis Yost; National Women's Trade Union League, Miss Ethel Smith; The Council of Jewish Women, Mrs. Alexander Wolf.

Question. What is the approximate cost of running women's organizations?

Answer. The National League of Voters, mainly women of leisure, membership 2,000,000, expended last year $38,000, including cost of legislative headquarters at Washington. The National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs maintains headquarters on Fifth Avenue, New York, pays its secretary $5,000 a year, does organization work, and has an official organ. Its budget is approximately $30,000, about 50 cents per capita.

Question. Why was the Woman's Bureau established in the Department of Labor?

Answer. To serve as a "policy forming and advisory body" during the war emergency. The words were carefully chosen to avoid any remote possibility of power or authority in the hands of women.

Question. What are the functions of the Woman's Bureau?

Answer. Congress appropriated the niggardly sum of $40,000 "to enable the Secretary of Labor"—note the careful evasion of any credit or authority for women—"to continue the investigations touching women in industry." The bureau is not a "special activity"; is not on a statutory basis; is not permanent.

Question. How is the Woman's Bureau financed?

Answer. It is dependent on the whims of a Congress of men for its support. The last Congress reduced and limited the salaries of experts in this bureau. Furthermore, the situation was aggravated because of the refusal of Congress to allow these workers the so-called bonus or flat salary increase of $240 a year granted to other employees. Miss Mary Anderson is director of the bureau.

Question. Name one bureau researching and dealing with vocations for business and professional women.

Answer. The Bureau of Vocational Education, 2 West Forty-third Street, New York City. This bureau cooperates with the Young Women's Christian Association.

Wonderful instruction, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the lady from Oklahoma has expired.

Miss ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts kindly yield me three minutes more?

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield three minutes more to the lady from Oklahoma.

Miss ROBERTSON. I want now to call the attention of every one of you gentlemen here to this statement of figures, and if you look at it you will see the absolute absurdity from those figures of believing that $1,480,000 apportioned out as it will be can get anywhere.

Explanatory of section 2 of S. 1039, entitled "An act for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States" (as reported Nov. 14, 1921, by Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce) in respect to annual distribution of "additional appropriations" (to be matched by States) for 5-year period.

	Population.	Fixed amount to each State.	Apportionment to each State on basis of population.	Total amount to each State.	Per cent of additional appropriation to each State.	Pro-gressive percent.
1. New York.....	10,385,227	$5,000	$70,042	$75,042	7.9	.....
2. Pennsylvania.....	8,720,017	5,000	58,811	63,811	6.7	14.6
3. Illinois.....	6,485,280	5,000	43,739	48,739	5.1	19.7
4. Ohio.....	5,759,394	5,000	38,843	43,843	4.6	24.3
5. Texas.....	4,663,228	5,000	31,450	36,450	3.8	28.1
6. Massachusetts.....	3,532,356	5,000	25,982	30,982	3.3	31.4
7. Michigan.....	3,698,412	5,000	24,741	29,741	3.1	34.5
8. California.....	3,426,861	5,000	23,112	28,112	3.0	37.5
9. Missouri.....	3,404,055	5,000	22,958	27,958	2.9	40.4
10. New Jersey.....	3,155,900	5,000	21,284	26,284	2.8	43.2
11. Indiana.....	2,930,390	5,000	19,764	24,764	2.6	45.8
12. Georgia.....	2,895,832	5,000	19,531	24,531	2.6	48.4
13. Wisconsin.....	2,632,067	5,000	17,752	22,752	2.4	50.8
14. North Carolina.....	2,539,123	5,000	17,260	22,260	2.3	53.1
15. Kentucky.....	2,416,630	5,000	16,290	21,290	2.2	55.3
16. Iowa.....	2,404,021	5,000	16,214	21,214	2.2	57.5
17. Minnesota.....	2,387,125	5,000	16,100	21,100	2.2	59.7
18. Alabama.....	2,348,174	5,000	15,837	20,837	2.2	61.9
19. Tennessee.....	2,337,885	5,000	15,768	20,768	2.2	64.1
20. Virginia.....	2,309,187	5,000	15,574	20,574	2.2	66.3
21. Oklahoma.....	2,028,283	5,000	13,679	18,679	2.0	68.3
22. Louisiana.....	1,798,509	5,000	12,130	17,130	1.8	70.1
23. Mississippi.....	1,790,613	5,000	12,077	17,077	1.8	71.9
24. Kansas.....	1,769,257	5,000	11,932	16,932	1.8	73.7

Explanatory of section 2 of S. 1039, etc.—Continued.

	Population.	Fixed amount to each State.	Apportionment to each State on basis of population.	Total amount to each State.	Per cent of additional appropriation to each State.	Pro-gressive percent.
25. Arkansas.....	1,752,204	$5,000	$11,817	$16,817	1.8	75.5
26. South Carolina.....	1,683,724	5,000	11,355	16,355	1.7	77.2
27. West Virginia.....	1,463,701	5,000	9,872	14,872	1.6	78.8
28. Maryland.....	1,449,661	5,000	9,777	14,777	1.6	80.4
29. Connecticut.....	1,380,631	5,000	9,311	14,311	1.5	81.9
30. Washington.....	1,356,621	5,000	9,149	14,149	1.5	83.4
31. Nebraska.....	1,296,372	5,000	8,743	13,743	1.4	84.8
32. Florida.....	998,470	5,000	6,532	11,532	1.2	86.0
33. Colorado.....	939,629	5,000	6,337	11,337	1.2	87.2
34. Oregon.....	783,389	5,000	5,283	10,283	1.1	88.3
35. Maine.....	768,014	5,000	5,180	10,180	1.1	89.4
36. North Dakota.....	646,872	5,000	4,363	9,363	1.0	90.4
37. South Dakota.....	636,547	5,000	4,293	9,293	1.0	91.4
38. Rhode Island.....	604,397	5,000	4,076	9,076	.9	92.3
39. Montana.....	548,889	5,000	3,702	8,702	.9	93.2
40. Utah.....	449,396	5,000	3,031	8,031	.8	94.0
41. New Hampshire.....	443,083	5,000	2,988	7,988	.8	94.8
42. Idaho.....	431,893	5,000	2,913	7,913	.8	95.6
43. New Mexico.....	360,350	5,000	2,430	7,430	.8	96.4
44. Vermont.....	352,428	5,000	2,377	7,377	.8	97.2
45. Arizona.....	334,162	5,000	2,254	7,254	.8	98.0
46. Delaware.....	223,003	5,000	1,604	6,604	.7	98.7
47. Wyoming.....	194,402	5,000	1,311	6,311	.7	99.4
48. Nevada.....	77,407	5,000	522	5,522	.6	100.0
Total.....	105,273,049	240,000	710,000	950,000	100.0	.....

(This table prepared by Census Bureau.)

Analyze these figures: States 1, 5, 9, 10, 12, 16, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 25, 27, 31, 32, 33, 36, 37, 39, 42, 43, 45, 46, 47, and 48 are all nonregistration States, and therefore without statistics. Fifty per cent of the entire appropriation goes to the first 13 but their heavy taxation is not met by a corresponding sum from the Government. The next 10 States take 25 per cent of the whole amount. The remaining 25 per cent, with the far greater needs of great areas and sparse settlements, is almost negligible in its inadequateness.

They have been taught to expect something; they will receive practically nothing.

There are many other things that I should like to say, but it seems to be the custom lately to read letters, and I want to read one here. This letter was sent to the leading Republican woman of my district. It reads as follows:

The maternity bill passed the Senate with only 7 votes against it on Friday the 22d. I am inclosing the Republican poll. If you know any of these Senators who voted for it, I wish you would write them a letter thanking them for their stand on this bill and telling them you feel sure the women of the country appreciate it. Do not use any of my words, because I do not want them to think the thought originated with me.

If you know any of the Senators who voted against the bill, please write them saying you are sorry they could not stand by the party in this the only measure which the Republican women have asked for of this Congress. Do it very gently.

Senator BORAH said he was for the bill, but he voted against it because it carried an appropriation. The Senators are voting large appropriations every day, but they propose to economize on this, a woman's measure, of course.

Senator MOSES has never been for the bill and made no excuse. Do not know what Senator WARREN's real attitude was.

(Signed)

P. S.: Do you not think it would be wise to write all of the Republican Senators, signing yourself officially? This is something of a task, I know, but it would be of such great assistance to the Republican organization.

We Republican women are awfully disappointed to have Miss ROBERTSON against the bill. It seems like woman against woman, and then Miss Rankin was for it.

It has been said that the great reason for this bill is that it is an administration bill. I notice that many of you men went off the reservation the other day. [Laughter and applause.] I am an organization person, even when a leading woman of my party picks on me in my Democratic district through Republican women because I have the courage of my convictions.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is a harmful bill, and I stand here and tell you so, and if I am digging my own political grave in doing so, let me say that it will be a mighty comfortable grave. [Applause.]

Inasmuch as this is claimed to be an administration measure and that much virtue thereby attaches to it, permit me to quote from some remarks made in the President's address at Plymouth:

The one outstanding danger of to-day is the tendency to turn to Washington for the things which are the tasks or the duties of the 48 Commonwealths which constitute the Nation. Having wrought the Nation as the central power of preservation and defense, let us preserve it so.

[Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson.]

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, most Members of Congress are physically courageous men. They are not physical cowards. If you were to say to the average Member of Congress that he is a liar or that he is a thief he would strike you. I wish to God that all of the Members were as courageous politically as they are physically. Then the people would have more respect for this magnificent body of men. Men who would not hesitate for one moment to charge a booming battery will run like a Molly Cottontail from a political issue. Mr. Chairman, I have had my political grave dug for me many times since I have been in Congress on account of certain votes that I have cast. Some one interested in some measure will tell you if you do not vote for it you will be defeated. But I tell you that if a man who casts an honest, conscientious vote and feels away down in his heart that he is right, goes back and looks the people of his district squarely in the eye and says to them that he could not vote otherwise without stultifying his manhood and his intellectual integrity, he will always receive a favorable response from the people, because the American people love a brave, honest man. [Applause.] I expect this bill to pass by a large majority because the vote will be recorded. If the vote could be by secret ballot and Members voted their real sentiments there would not be as many votes for this bill as there will be against it. I doubt if there will be 50 of us who will vote against the bill as it is; but if the vote could be in secret there would not be 50 votes for it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Landon] of course will vote for it because it is purely socialistic.

Now, of course, in the time given me I can not discuss every feature of this bill, but I do want to call your attention at the outset to a fact, and in doing so I hope you will kindly excuse me when I refer to the Constitution. I know that in mentioning this instrument to this body I am venturing upon most dangerous ground. While we take a solemn oath here to support the Constitution of the United States, without any qualification or mental reservation whatever, most Members go down and take the oath and forget about it and say, "If it is unconstitutional, the Supreme Court will say so." They thus "pass the buck," to use the slang of the street. Of course, that is not the oath we take. We have no right to ignore the Constitution in this way. We should exercise that courage that the fathers of the Republic expected and hoped we would exercise and thus insure our liberty and the perpetuity of our Government. I do not believe that this bill is constitutional, nor do I feel that as to the legislative provision in it there is a man on either side of this aisle who can convince anyone it is constitutional.

Mr. CLOUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. Yes; briefly, please.

Mr. CLOUSE. Under section 8 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, does not the gentleman think the Congress would have power to make such an appropriation, in that it is authorized to make appropriations for the defense and general welfare of the United States?

Mr. Sisson. I expected my friend to take refuge behind that clause, for that is the refuge of all who would evade the real purpose of the Constitution and justify every piece of bad legislation; but the Supreme Court of the United States every time it has had a whack at it said that you can not make this clause a grant of power, because if you did you have eliminated the entire Constitution.

Mr. CLOUSE. Will the gentleman yield for one further question? Has not the Supreme Court construed appropriations similar to this in the matter of the boll-weevil situation in the gentleman's section of the United States? [Applause.]

Mr. Sisson. No; the Supreme Court has not decided that the boll-weevil appropriation is constitutional. If the gentleman wants to go into that discussion, I can not do it here, because my time is too limited; but I do not believe many things are constitutional in the initiation of legislation, but if you had the right to make appropriations under what is termed the general welfare, then any legislation would be constitutional if the individual Member of Congress should say, "Well, I think it is for the general welfare." It does not mean thereby that Congress can make legislation for the general welfare unless—one minute, now—unless it has been so expressly provided in the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. CLOUSE. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. Sisson. I have not the time, I have only 30 minutes. If I had the time there is not a man on this floor I would not yield to, but I have not the time, and there are many things I want to say. While I am on the question let me say to you that the preamble of the Constitution uses exactly the same words "General welfare," and in the use of that language the court has always said we have got to have the same definition of the same language in every clause wherever it occurs in the Constitution. It can not mean one thing in one place and another thing in another. In the preamble of the Constitution the term "General welfare" is used and is simply a statement of purposes and why the following Constitution was made. It is not then a term expressing a grant of power. It can not be contended that the general-welfare clause then is part of the powers of the Constitution. If so, there is not one of you, be he lawyer or layman, but knows the very moment a court would put that construction upon it then you have eliminated and destroyed the Constitution entirely, because whatever you think is for the general welfare would then be constitutional. [Applause.] Therefore, you would have no Constitution. So I do not believe any lawyer in this House, from whatever section he comes or what his politics, believes that that construction can be placed upon it. Now, I say this much about the constitutionality of this bill and for the justification of my position I could rest it there. No good man or woman would say I should vote for the bill if I so decided. Surely no man would say in this House that when he took this oath he took it with a reservation. Surely no man here will say that in taking that oath he took it with the understanding that the general-welfare clause being part of the Constitution he can vote for anything he pleases and put it under that clause.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman will yield, two or three years ago my good friend from Mississippi was very much in favor of an appropriation of $50,000 by the Congress for rural sanitation, and made one of the best constitutional arguments that I ever heard in favor of it. What is the distinction between that and the proposal we now have under consideration?

Mr. Sisson. As a matter of fact, that provision and the provision in relation to good roads—all of those things—originated within the departments, and in this case that the gentleman mentioned it originated in the War Department and was justified originally to keep healthy the soldier. I will say to the gentleman I am not so absolutely certain that all that we do along this line is constitutional, but I do not believe that because one burglar goes and blows a safe open that that is a good reason for everybody to go into the burglary business. [Applause.] Nor do I think that because one man makes a mistake and does a wrong once it justifies everybody else doing wrong. [Applause.] But the original proposition was hung onto that war clause because it would make the soldier healthy; and on the theory you had to make all these camp sites healthy much of that money was spent around camp sites; and I think there was some little reason for hanging that upon it, however slender that thread may be.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. As Hosea Bigelow said, "Civilization does get forr'd sometimes on a powder cart."

Mr. Sisson. Absolutely. Then I was also amazed at the argument made when men cry aloud, "Why do you appropriate money to take care of your hogs and your cattle? Are you better to them than to your children?" No; but my children are neither hogs nor cattle, nor do I want them to be dealt with accordingly. [Applause.] I have hogs which I want to use for the food of these children of mine. I have some land, and every acre, I hope, will be productive for the benefit of my children.

This is a great Government; but hogs and cattle have no civil rights. They put them in the pen and deprive them of their liberty, and we would not do that with a child. What a specious argument that is to be made here to justify a proposition of this kind. I have heard it so many times that I am sick of it. That is not even good demagoguery. It is not only illogical but is not even good nonsense.

Now, gentlemen, I want to discuss briefly some of the objections that I have to this bill, although the first reason thoroughly justifies my voting against it, whether it justifies anybody else or not, because I think it is unconstitutional.

This bill is simply for a preliminary organization. It is simply the camel getting his nose under the tent. When the Children's Bureau was created $7,500 was given to it by the executive department out of the executive funds.

The next appropriation bill carried $25,000, and then there was a deficiency of $625, I think it was, making $25,625, or thereabouts. The next appropriation was about $50,000. They were asking for more. The last item in reference to this matter was $600,000, which they asked for, and the committee gave them two hundred and seventeen thousand and odd dollars. Those of you who recollect my opposition to that item at first will recall that I stated then that the original $7,500, paying one salary for the head of the bureau, one for a clerk, and one for a stenographer, would grow rapidly, and it would not be long before it would be more than half a million dollars.

Now, in the last nine years—I think it is nine; not less than nine—from $7,500 it has grown to over $271,000. Now, that is the Children's Bureau. This is another dose of the Children's Bureau. Mark you, there is not one dollar of this that reaches a single child in the United States or a penny that reaches a mother in the United States. It goes entirely, so far as the Federal appropriation is concerned, to the organization of this bureau in addition to the Children's Bureau. What does it mean? Not one single dollar will go to the mother or to the child. It means now that during the life of this bill there will be a lobby of Federal officers around the legislatures of every State in the Union lobbying—lobbying for what? For the State legislature to appropriate money for this purpose. And so you have going out from Washington one of the most dangerous and pernicious lobbies ever originated in the Nation. And to show you, as the good lady from Oklahoma said in her speech, what was in the minds of these people who are now behind this bill, the only thing you have got to do is to go and look at the provisions in the bills that have died.

You will find in these bills that they wanted to go, without the consent of the parent or guardian, into the homes, into the homes of all the people of the United States who had children. Congress eliminated that. They are still lobbying for this bill. You know what was said about the camel getting his nose under the tent. The Arab from experience knows that as soon as the camel can find a hole large enough to get his nose under the tent he will get his whole body under in time. The best place to strangle this thing is now, just at this moment. Let it die here. Because when you shall have organized this institution, and when there shall emanate from Washington all of this influence operating on the State legislatures for the purpose of securing appropriations in order that these Federal employees may have something to do the State must appropriate the money and organize an expensive bureau. When that is done the State, now overburdened with taxes, will be called upon to tax itself to pay for this work. This is an effort on the part of the Federal Government to send out emissaries to State legislatures to lobby through bills in order that this institution created in this bill may justify its existence. Because the only justification for this bill now is to organize this work in the States.

Now, I do not know just where it will end, but is there a man here who believes that this limitation in this bill is going to satisfy those people who are here lobbying?

By the way, I intended to mention that. I have been lobbied but twice since I have been in Congress. All the liquor interests and antili liquor interests, all the interests of that kind that have been concerned, all the so-called big interests in this country have never lobbied me in my life. I have been lobbied but twice, and one time was to vote for woman suffrage; and the other was to vote for this bill. I do not know; there may be a lobby against it. But if a man is trying to put fire in the house, the other man has a right to throw a bucket of water on it.

I think that there is no demand from the people, so far as I know, except the demand originated by the parties who expect to draw these salaries under this bill, and there has been no agitation of this subject outside of them. On the contrary, if you get out among the good mothers, I mean real mothers, mothers who have babies—I am talking about mothers who have a household to look after, who love their husbands; I am talking about real mothers—you will not find them here endeavoring to control Congressmen's votes on this question. As certain as God's sun shines in the universe and gives life and light to us all, just so certain the home presided over by a good mother is life in society. It is the sun, it is the life of this Republic. I am unwilling to have it invaded by the Federal Government or by any of its agents; I am unwilling to have the State legislatures continuously lobbied for money that is to be paid out of the Federal Treasury for very doubtful purposes.

Listen! Another vicious thing in this bill is this, a certain per cent is to be spent in salaries, and in order that they may get their salaries doubled you have got to double the appropriation. In other words, when the appropriation is $1,000,000, they get $50,000; when the appropriation is $2,000,000, they get $100,000, and so on. And so the lobby must go on. And another thing that justifies its existence for five years is that they have got to lobby faster in order to make this thing good in the States, or else the Government may wake up and say that it will not continue the appropriation any longer.

Whatever my idea may have been about women being in Congress, whatever my views have been on the subject in the past, they have never been shaken until this morning, when the good woman from Oklahoma, with that fine common sense, with a fine mother sense, with the fine mother instinct, rose up here in opposition to this bill. And I then thought of the prayer that was prayed by Napoleon Bonaparte just before the Battle of Waterloo, as he was marching up and down the council chamber. Knowing what he had to contend with, Napoleon, in that abstracted manner of his, marched up and down the council chamber and threw up his hands and cried aloud, "My God, how scarce are men. God, give us men."

In other words, what Napoleon needed then was men; strong men, men of courage, men of principle, men of convictions, and men of capacity to do the mighty work that he had to do. Knowing, as he did, his need, he was praying for men. And when I looked around this morning and saw that good woman appearing here, pleading for that which is just and right, exercising good sense and mother sense—I mean the old pioneer mother sense, the sense of that kind of a mother that my friend GREENE of Vermont talked about yesterday in his magnificent speech—the sense of the home mother, the mother sense that made Washington and Clay and Calhoun and Lee and Grant and a host of others what they were, I said in my heart, "God bless the old-fashioned mother." Do you not love them? Go out to the spots where they are buried, and there you feel like shedding real tears not only for the mother that brought you into being but for the mothers who made our Republic what it is. Yes; it is mothers of that kind that come here and tell you that they do not want this bill enacted.

I was about to say that if you get in Congress women who are so much better Congressmen than many of us men, if you get women like this good woman Representative that we have here, a woman of rare common sense, I think perhaps two-thirds of us men ought to be turned out and be replaced by women of well-balanced minds, who can not be swept off their feet by propaganda and lobbying. [Applause.]

Now, somebody may ask you what objection you have against the bill. I always answer questions like that by asking, "Will you please tell me what this bill does?" And then they will stand like sheep before the shearers—dumb. Why this bill does not do anything except get ready for an organization, get ready for a campaign in the States, to lobby all the legislatures in this country, to get the States to connect them up with the mothers and the children.

This Republic has done well heretofore. I believe that there is nothing that raises a child so well as a good home. Well, they say there are some homes that are not what they ought to be. Well, as bad as such homes may be, they are better than any bunch of political men and women and the gang around it. [Applause.] No; the thing that made America great was the fact that we had confidence in the citizen. It was urged as a reason why this Government would fail that the people were incapable of thinking and making a government for themselves; that there had to be a superinduced force brought to bear upon them. I am going to continue to believe, and I think I am warranted in doing it, that that government is the best which leaves the citizen where he takes care of himself and where in the community we appropriate money out of our own treasury for the services that we need to have performed. The weakest man on earth is the man who has had crutches under him all his life. I do not believe that men are made strong in that way. I believe they are made strong by wrestling with difficulties. The young man who is made strong by grappling with difficulties, who does it when he is a young man, will succeed in life by reason of the strength he has acquired. The distinguished ex-Speaker of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], in his boyhood and youth had to contend with difficulties, and those struggles with adversity helped to make him the strong man that he is. I do not believe that a man is strong where he is born with a silver spoon in his mouth except in rare cases. The boy that is strong in shaping the destiny of the Nation now is the boy who was born in poverty and who struggled against adversity, because those very struggles made him strong and powerful; those struggles made him great and influential.

That is the kind of men who in the last analysis have directed the destinies of this Republic. This Republic is safe and safe only so long as we preserve the local self-governments and home influences, and so long as we let those alone shape the church, the schoolhouses, and the family life, and the life of the neighborhood. That is what makes all people great, and upon that bedrock was founded this Government. The idea then was that the States should deal with the family, that the States should deal with the individual, with the school, and that outside of that the Federal Government, removed from local influences, should deal only with the States with reference to their concerns with each other and with foreign nations. The idea was that the Federal Government was to protect all of the States, and for that purpose it was given an Army. The purpose of the Federal Government was not to destroy the States, but to preserve the States in all their rights. The States erected this Federal Government in order that they might be preserved in their rights.

I am not uneasy about the State governments being destroyed by armies; I have no uneasiness about that. But what I am uneasy about is that you are going to bribe from the States all the rights they have got by the illegitimate use of Federal money. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. Sisson. I do.

Mr. CRISP. Of course, I know the gentleman has given this matter very mature study, and that he is very sincere in the statements he makes. Does the gentleman contend that under this bill any agent, either State or Federal, appointed under it would have the right to go into a home where the head of that house or the woman of the house objected to it?

Mr. Sisson. No; I will tell my good friend from Georgia that the bill specifically provides that that shall not be done. But if the gentleman will study the bills that preceded this he will find that those other bills did not contain that prohibition, and that was one of the reasons why those bills could not be gotten out of committee. Of course, I do not contend that such permission to invade the home is contained in this bill. If it were, I am sure the gentleman would not vote for it.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Sisson. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. The law which created the Children's Bureau contained a prohibition against entering the home without the consent of the head of that house or of the mother or father.

Mr. Sisson. Yes. I happened to be here when that bill was enacted.

Mr. LONDON. That is in it.

Mr. Sisson. I know that, but still you could have in that bureau all these agencies here.

Another thing. I am not so sure that these propagandists will not go to the States and urge them to pass laws to let them get in, and that while the Federal Government has no right to butt in, they will say to the States, "You ought to have the right," and they will say, "You go ahead and get that right, and we will go and look at these mothers when they are enceinte. We will be there when the baby is born." I do not know where it will end.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. Sisson. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Nothing has been developed yet, either in any speech or in writing, to show that the propagandists for this measure have ever abandoned their ultimate purpose.

Mr. Sisson. I think that is true also. You will find that this bill is so drawn that if the States shall so warrant you may invade the homes of the people, and the people whose homes are going to be invaded are the poor and helpless, not the strong and rich and powerful; and the excuse will be that they are not needed there.

Mr. CRISP. Does not this bill expressly state that if any State provides that the employees created under this act can go into a home over the objection of the head of the family that State shall not participate in any Federal fund?

Mr. Sisson. I think that is like impeachment. I think it is like a ghost. I do not think anybody is afraid of that.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this is no time for such legislation as this, even if it were good legislation, for our States are now overtaxed. The people everywhere are overburdened with taxes. This bill will in a few years add millions upon millions of taxes upon our people if it succeeds. The burden may get so great that the people will go to any excess to throw it off. I beg you to think of our overburdened taxpayers and have some pity upon them. Do not pass this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. Sisson. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Winslow] has 2 hours and 5 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] has 1 hour and 35 minutes remaining.

Mr. Winslow. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Sanders].

Mr. Sanders of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this measure, known as the maternity bill, which is proposed by the committee, appears in the committee amendment as one entire bill. All discussion of other bills has nothing to do with the question of the measure that is before the House, and after all it is a very simple proposition. The Children's Bureau, organized by Congress, which has had its duties enlarged by appropriations from time to time, all made by this Congress and other Congresses, found in its investigations that there was an alarming loss of life in maternity and infancy. This appeared from the statistics of the Census Bureau of the United States. It appeared also from statistics compiled by eminent authorities in Johns Hopkins University and Columbia University. It was discovered that a number of States were becoming active, and that where those States became active in providing the needed measures infant mortality and maternal mortality was reduced 50 per cent; and anyone who will read the hearings that are printed can not help being convinced that, upon the most authentic reports, such is the result.

So the Congress of the United States was faced with a condition of great mortality in infancy and maternity, and the question was presented as to whether there was a remedy. If that condition exists and there is a remedy at the hands of the National Congress, and it is within the power of the National Congress to apply the remedy, then it is the duty of this Congress to provide it. We have provided a remedy in this measure by appropriating money to be administered in the different States. We had the right to choose the method. We could have provided Federal machinery to effectuate this remedy. We could have created the Federal machinery in every State of this Union, but we did what I think was the wise thing. We took the machinery already created in the States and provided for the creation of similar machinery in the States which did not have it, and authorized the appropriation of the money to the States to carry on this work. There can be no question that when this work is carried on the result will be the saving of the lives of many babies. Dr. Baker, who has been praised by Members of Congress from New York as not only a great doctor but a woman of very high character, has devoted her life to this public work. Her testimony was very convincing.

Right here, Mr. Chairman, I want to pause to say that I resent the charge made that a person employed by the United States Government or by the State government does not often render service of the greatest value to the country, regardless of the fact that that person may be paid $2,000 a year or some other salary that is not commensurate with his ability. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Layton] would abolish the Health Bureau as it is now constituted, because he says under the present plan that bureau has no way of really rendering service. Yet it ought to be remembered that it was the Public Health Service which, at great sacrifice and loss of life to the individuals who were employed, discovered the cause of yellow fever and the remedy, and if I had the time in the 15 minutes allotted to me, I could cite many instances of that kind.

William Travis Howard, of Johns Hopkins University, in a work written by him, testifies that the maternity death rate in the United States is more than double the Swedish maternity death rate and 120 per cent higher than the English death rate. He says:

These rates, although calculated by a method more favorable than that used in comparative tables, and in which stillbirths are not taken into account, are probably unparalleled in modern times in a civilized country.

That is a quotation from a pamphlet entitled "The Real Risk. Rate of Death to Mothers from Causes Connected With Childbirth."

The testimony is that 50 per cent of these losses are from preventable causes. That is the situation.

Now, is it constitutional for the Federal Government to deal with the subject? No one has raised a serious constitutional question. Shall we afford the remedy? The fight that has been made against this bill has been against straw men they have set up and not against the provisions of the bill. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] says that he voted against woman suffrage. That is true with practically all of the gentlemen who, up to date, have been against the bill; the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Black, the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. Greene, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Walsh, and the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. Sisson, all belong to the group of men who were opposed to woman suffrage, and the only organization I have found that is making any real fight against the bill is the organization opposed to woman suffrage. If any other organization comes forward, they say it is propaganda and refuse to follow. But if it is the antiwoman suffrage organization, whenever they hear the clarion call you see these gentlemen march out, line up, and forward march. The gentleman from Mississippi intimates to-day he is inclined to think that he may have been mistaken when he voted against woman suffrage a few years ago. If the gentleman from Mississippi votes against this bill, he will be on the floor of the House two or three years hence and be inclined to think that he was mistaken when he voted against this measure. [Laughter.]

My genial friend from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], a very able, useful Member of the House, always on the floor, gets excited about this bill. Under ordinary circumstances he deals with a measure in a logical way, but you saw how excited he became about the bill yesterday, and with great vigor said that this was a measure for birth control in disguise. Of course there is not anything in the measure to indicate that because the measure specifically says that it is "for the purpose of co-operating and promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy." There is nothing in the act, not a line or a syllable of that kind. He reads that into it and would convince the membership that they must vote against it because, forsooth, it may bring about birth control.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I will yield.

Mr. LAYTON. I want to say that I do not think that I was any more vociferous in my speech than is the gentleman from Indiana now. The propaganda behind this bill was open and aboveboard. When it first appeared before the country and went before the Senate it stood for certain things which they advocated all over the country. Has the gentleman got any information that the original propaganda has been changed and that they have abandoned their original purpose?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes; and I will bring the best proof in the world, the proof that on November 1 the gentleman from Delaware himself said in his speech:

Is it desirable to have an overwhelmingly large population in America? Would not this be a curse of heritage to future generations instead of a blessing? Is it desirable to have a population so large as to parallel the conditions now existing in China and India? In this connection let me assert that it is a serious question whether the increase of the population of the world, which is now unquestionably going on by reason of the wonderful achievements of science, preserving and propagating human life, will not result sooner or later in the fiercest and most savage conflicts that the world has ever seen in a struggle for existence because of a lack of food. Seriously, is there not some virtue, some real reason in nature's law—the survival of the fittest? In fact, is not this law imperative, inescapable, beneficent, and founded in the highest of Divine wisdom—the law of evolution—the survival of the fittest being a necessary condition precedent to the working of this law? For instance, in America here, is there any doubt that we are what we are as a people altogether because of the application of this natural law to our forefathers, to those early pioneers—to those men and women who confronted life with all its dangers and perils and hardships with a dauntless courage which nothing could dismay, knowing that the establishment of this Nation, the conquering of this continent, was for the strong and not for the weak; knowing that on no adventurous journey could a weakling go; knowing that in the supreme contest the weakling necessarily would go to the wall?

The gentleman yesterday says, "Do not vote for this bill, because it is birth control in disguise," and November 1 he said, "Do not vote for this bill, because you are going to save the lives of so many babies that when they grow up they will step on each other's toes." [Laughter.]

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that there is not a single Member who has arisen on the floor to oppose this bill who has taken the bill in his hands and pointed to a line or a paragraph or a section that will bring about any such result as the opponents contend would be brought about. It is claimed that it is socialism. It is governmental activity and just as much socialism for the State or a municipality to carry on the work as it is for the Federal Government. What is meant is that it ought not to be done by the Central Government. Well, we have centralized powers in the Federal Government, and that is as inevitable as the rising sun. We will continue to do so.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Well, I have only 15 minutes and the gentleman has used an hour and a quarter on the bill.

Mr. LAYTON. When did the gentleman from Indiana hold a secret conference with my friend from New York [Mr. LONDON]?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If the gentleman from Delaware means to say that because the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] favors this bill, every other Member of the House should vote against it, I am afraid that it would put us in a ridiculous position, because the gentleman from New York supports about nine-tenths of the bills that pass the House. [Laughter and applause.]

Afraid of socialism! It is not a question of socialism; it is a question whether the Central Government should do it. We represent the Government and face a serious condition that can be remedied, and are we to shirk our duty in applying the remedy? We can not say to the States that have not done this that the babies of those States shall continue to die at a greater rate than they do in 17 countries other than America. It is our responsibility and we can not shirk it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for me to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate has been fixed by the House, and the Chair can not entertain that request.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I do not anticipate that the complications exist in respect to this measure that have been pictured. In the first place, most of the States are doing this work in a limited way, and some in an extensive way. My own State, as usual, is one of the advanced States in this regard, and this bill does not go as far as our own State law. I think the reason for a portion of the opposition to this bill was properly voiced here yesterday by a gentleman who admitted that he was afraid that the great State of New York would pay for the saving of a baby in Georgia or Alabama. Another reason for opposition to the bill is very properly voiced in the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], which has been circulated more than any speech within my recollection in this Congress—furnished free to any Member of Congress who would circulate it under the distinguished gentleman's frank, ever since it was made—a speech the careful reading of which discloses an advocacy of birth control, a thing which is absolutely un-American. I imagine that behind that speech is the fear that the great State of Delaware, one of the great taxpaying States of the Union, will have to pay a portion of her taxes to some other State in this great work, which even the distinguished gentleman himself does not condemn.

I was much interested yesterday afternoon to hear the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] and the distinguished gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], both doctors, hold a sort of mutual admiration society in respect to a Dr. Baker, of New York. They told of the great work that Dr. Baker was doing in New York City in enforcing a law of this kind. From that talk I thought that Dr. Baker was the very last word. Then recollecting somewhat my reading of the hearings in the matter the name became familiar to me and I asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] whether or not she was not an advocate of this bill. Oh, yes; and then almost immediately she became all wrong. They stood here for about five minutes in a mutual admiration society of her wisdom and ability and then they condemned her in one minute because they said she was almost fanatical.

I have carefully examined the bill S. 1039 as amended by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, have gone into the matter to the extent of examining the Senate hearings, speeches made in the Senate, the House hearings, the reported bill in the Senate, and the reported bill in the House. There is not any complication concerning this law. There have been a great many speeches and wild statements made concerning it that are unwarranted by the facts.

Under existing law this Congress appropriates money every year; take, for example, what goes to the State of Kansas and is expended jointly by the Government and the State to prevent disease, and to cure disease, and to assist in the development of the live-stock industry. There is no Federal cooperation, however, with the department of health in Kansas for the protection of maternity and infancy.

Of course, it is easy to set up an imaginary bugaboo in reference to the bill and shoot at that imaginary enemy; however, there is none such in the bill. I listened with considerable interest to a long, carefully prepared speech of my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Delaware [Dr. LAYTON], denouncing this measure. After listening to that speech I read the measure again, and I now invite any Member that is at all in doubt on this question, before being moved by the eloquence of the gentleman from Delaware, to take the time to read the measure advocated, as I understand it, by the unanimous report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

This bill does not encroach upon the rights of the States, but assists the States in the work of guarding its maternity and infancy interests; it does not encroach upon the rights of the parents or guardian, but insures the right of the parents and guardian to their individual views as to social ethics, insures to them their preference as to schools and medicine. To my mind, to say that the care and protection of maternity and infancy are matters that should be cared for by voluntary associations is entirely wrong. First, the testimony before the committees discloses that we are weak in this regard. Finding that to be true, Congress can not afford to waive it aside, to say we will permit the voluntary associations to care for this branch of humanity. Other nations have approached this matter from every angle imaginable. This committee has not adopted the method of any other nation, but has, in my judgment, profited by the experiences of other nations to work out a measure that is in every way superior to the methods adopted by other nations. These different systems vary, and the study of them has undoubtedly been a great help to the committee in this matter.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to be a citizen of the country that is a leader in a movement for a league of peace for all nations. I am glad that we are about to realize world peace. I am glad that the world is about to decide to join with us in the cessation of the expenditure of the people's money for the preparation for war and the destruction of the human race. This bill would perhaps necessitate an expenditure of a small portion of one day's expense on the part of the Army or Navy in the ordinary preparation and maintenance for the destruction of human life. Surely, the American people will compliment this committee, and this Congress, and are to be congratulated, that we are ready to spend this small pittance, not for the destruction of life and property, but for the protection of maternity and infancy.

Next Thursday is Thanksgiving. There is considerable consolation and feeling that we can give thanks for the practical assurance of a naval and military holiday, that the boy scout of to-day will not be the victim of militarism of to-morrow; let us add to that, for the mothers of America, consolation that a small portion of that former expenditure is to be used for the betterment of humanity.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, several times in the course of this debate it has been stated that this bill provides for doing for the individual what he should do for himself. From that premise the inference is drawn that the Nation, assuming the burden and responsibilities of the individual, will cause him to lose self-reliance and that he will weaken and deteriorate. Thus, it is argued, the tendency will be to destroy the texture and strength of the Nation. As I understand the bill, it provides for no such thing. This bill, in my conception, is primarily an educational measure. It intends that scientific authorities, supported by the Government of the United States, shall avail themselves of the most scientific and reliable information in the world in respect to the care of mothers and infants. That information is to be sent out to the States and to the people of the country so that eventually the most useful and efficient methods of protecting child life and mother life shall become the common knowledge of the women of our country. No one can doubt that in doing so we would immeasurably add to the welfare of the Nation. It is not doing for the individual what he can do for himself.

This country through the Agricultural Department instructs the farmers of the country, for instance, how to cultivate the land to preserve moisture in the semiarid sections. We secure the best information available in the world in order that we may give it to the farmers. The Government does not pretend to drive the team or tractor that cultivates the soil. If we did that, we would be doing for the individual what he must do for himself. We simply educate the farmers of the country how to become more efficient and more successful and more useful to the Nation. We give them the knowledge that in their hands is power. It avails them nothing unless they use it.

There are statistics showing that the United States holds a rather discreditable position among the nations of the earth in its failure to save motherhood and child life. I shall not stop to debate those statistics. There is one great fact that no man will question, and that everyone knows: This Nation is permitting a great and useless destruction of child and mother life, which is preventable, because of ignorance in handling one of the most common problems of the race. Because it is common we fail to perceive that it is of great moment to mankind. This bill will at least tend to improve that situation. It will do it in two ways. In the first place, the tendency of the measure will be to provide the people of the Nation with the more efficient methods of controlling and promoting the welfare and protection of child and mother life. In the second place, no one will contend that it will not inspire a more widespread interest and intelligent effort in that same great cause. When we pass this bill we contribute to preserving child life in this Nation. Every child that we save is not only an economic asset to the Nation but we conserve the highest purposes of humanity in protecting and promoting the welfare of the child. That child is the mother's most sublime experience, the father's greatest inspiration, and ultimately the source of the Nation's renewal.

Our great school system of education—and this is a system of education—is not founded on the idea that we are educating the individual for the individual's sake. We do not take money from the pockets of the taxpayers of the country and educate another man's child for the benefit of the individual alone. We take it from the taxpayers of the country to educate the individual under the thorough conviction that the individual will in return give back to organized society a full compensation. Better-equipped men and women are necessary for the upbuilding and support of the Nation.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Certainly.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman approves of this as a matter of education?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. A fractional sort of education. Do I understand, therefore, that he would go the whole hog and stand for a nationalization of education under Government auspices?

Mr. LEA of California. I would not. I do not think it necessary nor advisable.

Mr. LAYTON. Why not?

Mr. LEA of California. Because primarily this is a function of the State. It is a real condition that confronts us to-day. The facts are indisputable that in a large portion of the Nation this work is very largely neglected. Our people are suffering. Lives are being sacrificed. I am in favor of this aid to inspire a greater effort on the part of the States to conserve the lives of our mothers and children.

Mr. LAYTON. Really the gentleman does not mean to say that there is some new, sudden, appalling national condition of mortality for puerperal women or new-born children in the face of the fact that in the last 30 years statistics prove that under the medical profession there has been an enormous saving in both?

Mr. LEA of California. I have no such conception. The fact that the people of this country are more secure of life than formerly is an additional reason why we should give support to this measure. If we have accomplished some, we may accomplish more. It will increase our ability to secure such results with the assistance of the Federal Government.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEA of California. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Is it not true the great outstanding policy expressed in this bill is to invigorate States in respect to the matter of guarding the health of the people, and that policy is only an extension of what the Federal Government is already doing and has been doing for several years through the agency of the Public Health Service, and doing it as notably in the State of Delaware and in the State of Mississippi, the State of our friend [Mr. Sisson], as in any other two communities of this country?

Mr. LEA of California. That is absolutely true. This act provides that not exceeding $50,000 be spent by Federal agency in one year. This money is to be spent in accordance with the practices of the Children's Bureau. It is provided for six years. Practically all of this money given to the States is to be spent upon plans initiated by the States. The primary purpose is simply to inspire the States to achieve better results.

PROVISIONS OF THIS BILL.

There has been much misunderstanding as to the terms of this bill. Perhaps I could do no greater service in this debate than to attempt to place in the Record a summarized statement of its provisions. The general purpose of this act is declared to be cooperation "in promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy." The specific provisions for the enforcement of this purpose are to be provided by plans proposed by the States. The board of maternity and infant hygiene must approve those plans provided they are "reasonably appropriate and adequate" to accomplish the purpose. The amount of money this act authorizes from the Federal Government is only a drop in the bucket. No man will contend this amount of money will be sufficient in itself to meet the problem. But it is sufficient greatly to stimulate the States of this country to assume their proper burden in this matter.

Of the funds authorized two different classes of appropriation are prescribed. The first is that class of appropriation that is to be equally apportioned to the States. For the current year that amount is $10,000 for each State, or $480,000; for each five succeeding years it is to be $5,000 to each State, or $240,000.

The second class of appropriations is called "additional" appropriations, which will consist of $1,000,000 for the current year and not exceeding $1,000,000 a year for the five succeeding years. This sum of $1,000,000 shall be disposed of annually as follows:

$5,000 to each State	$240,000
Not exceeding 5 per cent for the administration of the Children's Bureau	50,000
The balance according to population of the States to which distributed	710,000
This will make the maximum Federal appropriation authorized by this bill during the next six years	7,680,000

ADMINISTRATION.

The Children's Bureau is charged with the administration of the provisions of this bill. The Chief of the Children's Bureau is the executive officer of its administration.

Sufficient reason for the selection of the Children's Bureau as the executive agency for the administration of this act is the fact that it is an existing and successfully operating bureau of the Government that has already had nine years' experience in this class of work.

The duties of the Children's Bureau were defined in the act of its creation, adopted in 1912, in this language:

The said bureau shall investigate and report to said department upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and shall especially investigate the question of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories. * * * The chief of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations.

The Children's Bureau has already developed much of the information that will be given to the country through the operation of this bill. That bureau has a child hygiene division in charge of a physician of recognized ability, with practical experience in the handling of the problems of infancy and motherhood.

The Children's Bureau is under the Department of Labor and is subject to the supervision of the Secretary of Labor, who, under the provisions of this bill, is required to make a full account of the administration of this act and the expenditures authorized therein, in his annual report.

BOARD OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY HYGIENE.

In order to guard against arbitrary control and give additional assurance that this act will be handled in a practical and efficient manner by the Federal Government, our committee has included a provision for a board of maternity and infancy hygiene, consisting of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education. This board is given specific and limited authority, as follows:

It is the duty of the board to pass upon, approve, or reject plans submitted by the States for carrying out the act. If the plans submitted by the States are "reasonably appropriate and adequate," they shall be approved by the board and the State agency submitting the same so notified.

The board has power to withhold payment to any State whose agency has not properly expended the money paid it by the Federal Government or the money required to be appropriated by such State for the purposes of this act. Before such payment is withheld, the chairman of the board is required to give notice to such State agency, stating wherein the State has failed to comply with the requirements of this act. The State agency has the privilege of appealing to the President from such ruling of the board. The final action in such case would be determined by the President.

DUTIES OF THE BUREAU.

Certain duties are conferred upon the Children's Bureau under the provisions of this act. It must estimate the amount, not exceeding 5 per cent, or $50,000, of the "additional" appropriations, necessary for administering the act and certify the same to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The bureau shall make the apportionment of the funds provided by the act.

The bureau shall also certify to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State treasurers the amount apportioned to each State for the year.

The bureau is authorized to employ persons, purchase supplies, and pay traveling and other expenses it deems "necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act." In other words, the bureau is the Federal agency that is primarily clothed with discretion in the administration of this act, so far as the Federal Government is concerned.

The bureau is also authorized to make "such studies, investigations, and reports as will promote the efficient administration of this act."

Within 60 days after each appropriation is made and thereafter as conditions warrant the bureau shall ascertain the amounts appropriated by the States accepting the provisions of this act and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount to which each State is entitled.

Such certificates shall be authority for the Secretary of the Treasury to make payment to the States, in accordance with such certificates.

A specific limitation is placed on the authority of the representatives of the Children's Bureau by denying them the right to enter a home or take any child over the objection of a parent or person having its custody.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE STATE.

The States qualify for participating in the benefits of this bill by complying with certain requirements prescribed by this act, as follows:

First. The State must qualify for the ordinary appropriations authorized by this act by accepting its provisions and designating or creating a State agency with powers to cooperate with the Federal Government.

Second. The State must appropriate a sum equal to the "additional" appropriation paid it by the Federal Government for the year "for maintenance of the services and facilities provided by this act."

Third. The State must submit to the bureau, through its agency, "detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act within the State."

Fourth. The State agency must make reports, "concerning its operations and expenditures," as required by the bureau.

LIMITATIONS ON USE OF FUNDS IN THE STATE.

Certain limitations are placed on the use of the funds in the State, as follows:

First. The plans submitted by the States must provide that no agent in carrying out the provisions of this act "shall enter any home or take charge of any child" over the objection of the parent of such child or person having its custody.

Second. Federal moneys paid the State shall not be used to purchase, rent, or repair buildings or equipment or to pay maternity or infancy pensions.

Third. The bureau may, with the approval of the board, withhold a certificate showing the State entitled to a payment whenever it shall be determined that the State agency thereof—has not properly expended the money paid to it or the moneys herein required to be appropriated by such State * * * in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The above are, in substance, the only provisions of this bill. The plan is, in substance, for the Federal and State Governments to cooperate in an effort to promote the welfare of infant and mother life in an administrative as well as a financial way. The interest of the one is not inimical to the other. Enactment of this measure can not be expected to usher in any phenomenal improvement in the social and hygienic conditions of maternity. But we may reasonably hope that it will inspire a material improvement in conditions, in a more widespread knowledge and practical application of those things necessary to make motherhood safer and the infant more secure in its right to live.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I prefer not to yield until I have said what I have to say. My time is limited.

Mr. Chairman, no other bill since my service in this body began has been more discussed than this one, and never, I believe, has one been more misunderstood. Because of the general interest of the public in the subject, I shall, Mr. Chairman, go somewhat extensively into the history and extent of this proposed legislation.

There was agitation for Federal aid and encouragement in maternity and infant hygiene during the Sixty-sixth Congress, and hearings were had before the proper committees of the House and Senate, but without any action being taken by the Congress. In the Republican national platform of 1920 appear these words:

The supreme duty of the Nation is the conservation of human resources through an enlightened measure of social and industrial justice. Although the Federal jurisdiction over social problems is limited, they affect the welfare and interest of the Nation as a whole. We pledge the Republican Party to the solution of these problems through national and State legislation in accordance with the best progressive thought of the country.

We endorse the principle of Federal aid to the States for the purposes of vocational and agricultural training.

Wherever Federal money is devoted to education, such education must be so directed as to awaken in the youth the spirit of America and a sense of patriotic duty to the United States.

A thorough system of physical education for all children up to the age of 19, including adequate health supervision and instruction, would remedy conditions revealed by the draft and would add to the economic and industrial strength of the Nation. National leadership and stimulation will be necessary to induce the States to adopt a wise system of physical training.

The public health activities of the Federal Government are scattered through numerous departments and bureaus, resulting in inefficiency, duplication, and extravagance. We advocate a greater centralization of the Federal functions, and in addition urge the better coordination of the work of the Federal, State, and local health agencies.

The Democratic national platform of the same year stated:

We urge cooperation with the States for the protection of child life through infancy and maternity care, in the prohibition of child labor, and by adequate appropriations for the Children's Bureau and the Women's Bureau in the Department of Labor.

In the inaugural address of President Harding, he said, in part:

We want the cradle of American childhood rocked under conditions so wholesome and so hopeful that no blight may touch it in its development.

Again, in his message to Congress of April 12 last, he said, in part:

I assume the maternity bill, already strongly approved, will be enacted promptly, thus adding to our manifestation of human interest.

While this matter was being considered by our committee, on September 30 last I communicated with the President by letter, asking whether altered conditions had changed in any way his views already expressed on this bill. In answer I received the following letter, which I have been authorized to use, if I so desire.

OCTOBER 5, 1921.

MY DEAR MR. GRAHAM: The President has seen your letter of September 30 and has asked me to make reply and say that he has already expressed himself relating to the maternity bill, and he thinks your quotation of his expression as presented in your letter is quite correct. He does not think that any new expression is, therefore, necessary, and does not think the situation calls for a special message on the subject. The President has said on several occasions that he has spoken of his favorable attitude, and he has had no occasion to change his mind in that regard.

Yours, sincerely,

GEO. B. CHRISTIAN, JR.,
Secretary to the President.

On April 21, 1921, Senator SHEPPARD introduced this bill in the Senate, where it was finally passed on July 22, there being but seven votes recorded against it in the Senate on roll call. It then came to the House Committee, where it has received the most careful and painstaking hearing and attention.

I believe I am within the facts in stating that this bill has received the indorsement and hearty approval of all but a very minor portion of the women of the country. The vital and important matters involved in this proposed legislation have made a very forceful appeal to them, and they have insisted and do insist upon some legislation embracing the general principles contained in this bill.

In any consideration of this matter, therefore, it is obvious that both political parties are committed to this sort of legislation; that the present administration is committed to this program; and that at least one-half of our citizenship is demanding such legislation, together with a very respectable proportion of the other half.

The bill as presented to us by the Senate was very unskillfully prepared. The House Committee, as will be observed, rewrote it and incorporated into it many safety provisions and qualifying amendments. As amended and before the House it provides, in brief, as follows:

It authorizes the appropriation for the current fiscal year of $480,000, which is to be distributed among the States, $10,000 to each State, for purposes of organization, and $1,000,000 to be apportioned to the States according to population, with a minimum of $5,000 to each State, and which $1,000,000 must be matched by the States. After the first year the same amounts are appropriated, except that the $480,000 is reduced to $240,000. These appropriations are to cease in five years after the present fiscal year. It will thus be seen that the possible maximum appropriations authorized in six years are $7,680,000, and that the total tax burden imposed by this measure is slightly over 1 cent a year on each inhabitant of our country.

The Children's Bureau in the Department of Labor is charged with the administration of the act, subject, however, to the action of a board known as the board of maternity and infant hygiene, consisting of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, the Commissioner of Education, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau, which board has the approval of the plans of the States and the sole power of withholding funds from any State.

Not to exceed 5 per cent of the additional appropriations of $1,000,000 a year, or a maximum of $50,000 a year, can be spent for administrative purposes, and none of the moneys appropriated can be used for the purchase or maintenance of any buildings or equipment, nor to pay any maternity or infancy pension or benefit.

Any State can avail itself of the provisions of the act or not, as it chooses. If it cares to, it appropriates enough money to match the Federal appropriation required to be matched and prepares plans for the work, which are submitted to the board for approval. The State can use such agencies as it desires, but if it has a child welfare or child hygiene division in its State board of health, it must use that agency.

No agent of the State or Federal Government can enter any home or take charge of any child against the objection of its parents, or those having charge of the child, and the express reservation is made that nothing in the act may be construed as limiting the power of the parent to determine what treatment or correction shall be provided for a child.

If a State fails to properly expend the moneys allotted to it, further payments to it may be withheld by the board until this failure is corrected, reserving, however, to the State, a right of appeal to the President. Finally the bill provides:

This act shall be construed as intending to secure to the various States control of the administration of this act within their respective States, subject only to the provisions and purposes of this act.

Thus indicating in the most direct manner possible the congressional intent to secure to the States a free hand in the method and means of carrying on this work.

Naturally, the first inquiry on the consideration of this measure is, Is it necessary? Does any condition that exists in our country to-day call for such legislation? This question in itself raises two inquiries: First, is there such a condition of maternal and infant mortality in this country as to call for the active assistance of governmental bodies; and, second, if such governmental aid is needed, should the Federal Government engage in such activities. These are questions that have been widely discussed and require definite and direct answers.

The first inquiry, it seems to me, is fully answered by the fact disclosed in the hearings. The fullest opportunity was given by the committee for all who desired to be heard on this bill to make such statements as they desired. Among other statements of facts made to the committee were certain statistics of maternal and infant mortality in the various civilized countries. Tabulated statements appear in the committee hearings, pages 16, 17, 28, 29, 38, 240. The witnesses who gave these statistical facts were Dr. Philip Van Ingen, clinical professor of diseases of children, College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University, New York, and attending physician, children's department, Bellevue Hospital, New York; Miss Julia Lathrop, former Chief of the Children's Bureau in the Labor Department; Dr. S. Josephine Baker, director child hygiene division, New York City board of health; and William Travis Howard, dean of the department of vital statistics of Johns Hopkins University.

The statistics given by these witnesses seem to agree in general. They show a most surprising condition, and are these, in brief: In 1919, the last year for which mortality statistics are available, 10½ per cent of all the women in the United States who died between the ages of 15 and 45 died from causes connected with childbirth, and the proportion of such deaths has been slowly but surely increasing since vital statistics have been available in this country. This statement is confirmed by such good authority as Dr. J. Whitridge Williams, professor of obstetrics at Johns Hopkins University, and Dr. Louis I. Dublin, statistician of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.

When one considers these statistics he can not help but be genuinely concerned. The birth registration area of the United States, where by law births are recorded, comprises 22 States and the District of Columbia, with an estimated population of 58.6 per cent of all our population. In this area, in 1915, 6.1 mothers in each 1,000 births died; in 1916, 6.2; in 1917, 6.6; in 1918, increased largely by the influenza, 9.2; and in 1919, 7.4; the percentage increased 1.3 to each thousand in five years. In 1918 alone we lost over 23,000 mothers in childbirth. Most of these deaths were preventable.

Is this abnormal or unusual? It is. Most of the countries of Europe have for a long period kept these vital statistics which we have as yet but partially kept. We are thus much better enabled to compare our condition with conditions in other countries. The results of such comparison can not help being unpleasant and mortifying to us. Our percentage of maternal mortality is well shown by the following table:

Maternal mortality rates per 1,000 births.

(Rates for latest available year up to 1919.)

Italy (1915) (Anuario Statistico Italiano, 1916)	2.2
Norway (1915) (Ann. Int. de Statistique, Tome II, 1917)	2.7
Sweden (1915) (Annuaire Statistique de la Suède, 1919)	2.9
The Netherlands (1919) (Ann. Stat. du Royaume Pays-Bas, 1919)	3.4
Prussia (1914) (Stat. Jahrbuch für den Preussischen Staat, 1915)	3.5
Japan (1916) (Mouvement de la pop. de l'Empire du Japon, 1916)	3.5
Finland (1916) (Annuaire Statistique de Finlande, 1918)	3.6
Hungary (1915) (Ann. Int. de Statistique, Tome II, 1917)	4.0
England and Wales (1919) (Ann. rep. Reg. Gen. England and Wales, 1919)	4.4
France (1913) (Ann. Int. de Statistique, Tome II, 1917)	4.6
Australia (1918) (Off. yearbook Commonwealth of Australia, 1919)	4.7
Ireland (1918) (Ann. report Registrar General of Ireland, 1918)	4.8
New Zealand (1919) (Stat. Dominion of New Zealand, 1919, vol. 1)	5.1
Spain (1915) (Anuario Estadístico de España, 1917)	5.2
Switzerland (1915) (Annuaire Statistique de la Suisse, 1916)	5.5
Scotland (1919) (Ann. rept. Registrar General for Scotland, 1919)	6.2
United States (birth-registration area) (1919) (United States Birth Statistics, 1919, and Mortality Statistics, 1919)	7.4

There is hardly a country of any consequence in Europe or Asia where it is not safer to become a mother than in the United States. Even in countries where we have thought, perhaps, that the standards of hygiene and public welfare were not so good as our own, we find a better condition in this essential matter than in our own.

The evidence also shows almost an equally serious condition as to infant mortality. Within the first year after birth one out of every ten babies born in the United States dies. The United States ranks eleventh among the principal countries of the world in infant mortality, New Zealand, Australia, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland, Ireland, the Netherlands, England and Wales and Scotland each having a less rate. About 200,000 babies die each year in the United States less than 1 year of age. In the year 1919 it is a startling fact that of all the babies under 1 year of age who died, 47.4 per cent were under 1 month of age and 33½ per cent under 1 week of age. The proportion of infant mortality under 1 year of age has also been increasing. I quote Dr. Van Ingen:

Not only has the death rate under one month not improved, but the proportion of deaths under one month has steadily increased throughout this country. We find there is a slow but steady increase in the proportion of infant deaths which occur during the first month of life. It has been proven by medical men that those deaths among children under 1 month of age, the majority of them, at any rate, are due to causes acting through the mother on the child before it is born. That is the reason for advocating prenatal care. To repeat, it has been shown without doubt that the deaths of babies under 1 month of age are almost entirely due to causes acting on the mother before the baby is born.

These statistics are not seriously controverted. Full opportunity was given those who opposed the bill to be heard. No one, however, gave any facts to the committee tending to impeach the figures I have just given. Dr. Charles E. Humiston, president of the Illinois Medical Society, who appeared and testified at length before the committee, stated that he took issue with the statistics quoted, but gave no figures to demonstrate their fallibility. The obvious conclusion, therefore, is that the mother and infant mortality figures I have quoted are exact.

Everyone appearing before the committee, without exception, admits that this condition can be very greatly bettered by the dissemination and teaching of maternity and infant hygiene.

In New York City 13 years ago there was established a bureau of child hygiene. Since that bureau was established the rate of mortality of mothers in childbirth has steadily decreased. To illustrate, the last available figures show that as compared with other American cities the annual maternal death rate, based upon 10,000 births, was 70.71 for Boston, 64.89 for Baltimore, 61.48 for Philadelphia, and 46.11 for New York City. When this bureau, maintained by the city of New York at a total expense for last year of $900,000, began its labors 144 out of every 1,000 babies died within their first year; to-day out of the same number but 85 die. This indicates a saving of 72,000 baby lives in New York City alone in 13 years.

Even the most bitter opponents of this measure admit that intelligent instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy will be of vast benefit and greatly better conditions. I quote from the testimony of Mrs. Albert T. Leatherbee, representing the Massachusetts Antisuffrage Association, of Boston, Mass., who vigorously opposed the bill:

I think that the work which is being done by the health authorities of the respective large cities is a very excellent work. As I understand that work, and I presume it is the same as it is in Boston, it is largely a matter of clinics and a matter of advising people who come in and apply for advice.

Dr. Humiston said:

Now, the reason of this—and I do not wish to be misunderstood or cross-examined with the idea in view that the medical profession in any way antagonizes the purpose—it is this bill which we wish to meet.

An editorial from the Journal of the American Medical Association of June, 1921, states in part:

All will agree that the objects sought, namely, the care of maternity and infancy and instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy, are in the highest degree commendable. There can not be too much knowledge or too much instruction of the right sort on such vital subjects. There are, however, serious objections to the methods proposed.

Dr. George W. Kosmak, editor of the American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecological Society, opposing the bill, said in part:

Now, I am not bringing forward that point now to controvert the good opinion which has been developed in favor of prenatal care, etc. As physicians, we can not deny that prenatal care has succeeded in reducing the morbidity and mortality in childbirth to a large degree.

I am therefore led to the conclusion, both by the result of practical experience and by the consensus of opinion of those who are qualified to speak on the question, that these facts exist: First, our rate of mother and child mortality is higher than in other nations similarly circumstanced; second, that we can to a large degree prevent this if we care to do so; third, under the supervision of proper governmental agencies these conditions have been and can be greatly ameliorated.

If this work should be done, by what governmental agencies should the work be undertaken? Should the work be conducted solely by States or local municipalities at their own expense and upon such plans as each may prefer, or should there be cooperation between the Federal and State Governments in the work?

It must be obvious that if the work is to be entirely successful it should be done upon some general, standardized plan, varied according to the peculiar needs of each community. Such standardized work is always more efficient and economical. The interest involved, namely, the preservation of the lives of our mothers and babies, is a national one and not a local one. In such matters our dual system of State and National Government has presented considerable difficulties in the past. In preserving the mutual functions of both State and National Government it has been found necessary in recent years to formulate new methods of National and State cooperation not heretofore utilized when national life was simpler and our problems not so involved.

The Constitution provides:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. (Art. I, sec. 8, Constitution.)

Under that constitutional sanction we have found it desirable in many instances to appropriate sums of money to be used together with certain sums appropriated by the States, to accomplish some purpose of national moment. By this means the various States are stimulated to engage in certain activities resulting in general good, which otherwise would not have been undertaken, and in a uniform and efficient way. I know of no other constitutional way in which this cooperation between State and Federal Government in times of peace can be had except through the medium of an appropriation such as I have mentioned. This cooperation, when practiced, has been highly successful.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask the gentleman to tell me briefly what is the idea of the method that is going to be adopted to correct the maternity situation? What is the bill going to do?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I shall shortly get to that.

The question has been asked just what work will be done if this bill becomes the law. The work done will be almost entirely educational. I believe the work now done in New York City is fairly typical of the kind of work to be done generally. It is well described in the testimony of Dr. Baker, head of the Child's Welfare Bureau, who has been so highly eulogized by the gentleman from New York, himself a physician [Mr. KIN-DRED]. She says:

The Sheppard-Towner bill advocates, as I read it, the exact type of work that we have been carrying on in New York and which is responsible for this enormous reduction in the maternal and infant death rate. It consists of the employment of trained nurses, the establishment of baby health stations or child welfare centers, and the employment of physicians for consultation work. The work is mainly educational; it is almost entirely preventive. The women come to us early in their period of pregnancy and are taught how to take care of themselves. We do not take care of actual sick cases at all; we teach personal hygiene with the largest adaptation possible of the proper environments, and mitigate as far as we can the social and economic maladjustments that so often cause ill health. We can do a good deal to change the effect of bad environmental conditions.

It has been said by those opposed to this bill that it is socialistic and paternalistic. If this be true, so is the cooperation between States and Nation in the Federal road system, in Federal rehabilitation of industrial cripples, in Federal agricultural university extension work, in Federal aid for the control of contagious and infectious diseases in live stock, and in flood control. In each of these sums from the Federal Treasury and sums from the State treasury are used to cope with certain conditions or dangers national in their scope. Does anyone here raise his voice to question the wisdom of such measures? If we did not deal nationally with pests such, for instance, as the cotton boll weevil or the foot-and-mouth disease, individual States would be helpless and their material wealth destroyed. If we did not aid and assist in the construction of good roads, there are communities that for a hundred years to come would have their prosperity and usefulness as a part of this great Nation impaired. If the Nation does not take reasonable steps to stimulate and encourage the work in the various States, scores of years will pass before some communities undertake such work. Once show the States the way and awakened public opinion in these States will compel its continued use. If, sirs, it be socialistic to adopt measures which all admit will conserve our principal national asset, our mothers and children, then, sirs, let us be socialistic to that extent. [Applause.]

Yet it is said by this and like measures local self-government is destroyed. Such is far from the case. The bill as rewritten by the House committee plainly secures to the respective States control of the administration of the act within their respective States, and the only supervision of any kind that can be exercised is the general supervision of the plans of the State. However, this right of approval can not be exercised in an arbitrary way. The bill as rewritten expressly provides in section 8 that if the plans "shall be in conformity with the provisions of this act and reasonably appropriate and adequate to carry out its purposes they shall be approved by the board." Thus the State has a free hand in using such methods as it may desire in carrying on this work in its own way, so long as it carries out the general purposes of the act, namely, the betterment of the hygiene of mothers and infants.

But there are those among us who insist that there shall be no interference with the rights of the States. No one can go further than I in his desire to preserve inviolate the right of local self-government. For this I have always stood and for this, I trust, I shall continue to stand. But, sirs, we should not forget that we are also a nation, one and indivisible, and with all the inherent rights and powers of a nation. I can not and will not concede that in the essential, yea, fundamental matter of the welfare of our women and children the Nation may not constitutionally and properly function.

The claim is made that the sanctity of the home is to be violated by Government agents, who shall enter these homes unasked and interfere with and supplant parental control. The most casual reading of the bill will disclose that every step that is taken must be with the approval of the parents and because they wish it to be done. Whether the methods of instruction provided shall be utilized by any State or any prospective or actual mother is a matter of free choice for such State or such mother. I believe in the sanctity of the home, and so long as I have a tongue to speak or a hand to strike with I shall defend it. The home is the basis of our established society. In no degree is the sanctity of the home invaded by this act, but rather is the opportunity given to those responsible for the maintenance of the home to obtain useful and intelligent information which may help the home conditions.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman is on the committee, and I know he is informed, and I would like to know this: Is there anything to prevent a State agency from helping in an emergency either with a doctor or with food?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Not at all. The States can do as they please about it.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. There is no prohibition?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No.

Some considerable opposition to this bill is expressed by a part of the medical profession, although the following resolution was adopted by the American Medical Association at its last meeting in June, 1921, at Boston, Mass.:

Resolved by the house of delegates of the American Medical Association. That it approves and indorses all proper activities and policies of the State and Federal Governments directed to the prevention of disease and the preservation of the public health.

[Applause.]

No one can have a higher regard for the medical profession than I. No profession has done more to make human life more tolerable and more to make our race contented and efficient than has the medical profession. I would be loath to raise my voice for anything that would supplant in any degree the physicians of the country in their honorable and useful work. But this bill does not do so. It provides for no medical care, but for instruction in hygiene only. It will result in a more active cooperation between those who teach and the physicians of the community. It will, because of proper counsel, lead to the employment of physicians by prospective mothers in very many cases where such employment would not otherwise have been made.

The House has provided that the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, one of the leading representatives of the medical profession of the country, shall help pass upon the plans for the work; the work must also be done by the health department of each State, invariably a medical department, if there be an appropriate bureau in such department. The physicians of the country need not be apprehensive of the effect of this measure upon their profession. Its enactment into law will help them in their work and open new paths of usefulness for them to travel. Similar mother and child welfare departments are conducted by some of the large cities, such as New York and Boston. I think I am safe in saying there is not a physician in any of these cities but who earnestly and wholeheartedly indorses the continuance of the valuable work these departments are now doing. I do not believe the physicians of the country will be willing to place themselves in opposition to any measure that gives promise of the betterment of the health of any part of our people.

Some time ago there was a proposal made to discontinue the appropriation for this work in New York City. Immediately every medical society in New York City protested vigorously against such action and great processions of women formed to march to the city hall to voice their disapproval of this proposal.

Finally, the charge is made that this bill rests on sentiment only. I think I have demonstrated that it rests upon a sound and substantial foundation other than sentiment. If I were to say, however, that in its consideration I have divested myself of all sentiment, I should not speak the full truth. I confess, sirs, that we can not forget the mothers who went down into the dark shadows and in pain and suffering brought us into the world. Many of us, with clenched hands and anxiety unspeakable, have waited to catch the first gasping cries of our children as they were born. Some of us know what it is to see a mother taken into the eternal beyond with the cries of her little, forlorn ones following her into the mists. If, my colleagues, we may alleviate the burden of pain and suffering placed upon womankind, if we may conserve the lives of these mothers and babies and thus add to the material happiness of mankind and the strength of our Nation, no Federal legislation we may adopt can be of more permanent national value. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 16 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am glad to give to this measure my whole-hearted and unreserved support. I have heard in the course of my experience here debates upon a great many measures of vital interest and concern to the people, but I do not believe that I can recall any measure pending before this House upon which there have been made more specious and ad hominem arguments than have been made against the proposed bill.

Now, gentlemen, what is the situation with which the House is confronted in dealing with the facts as disclosed by the testimony before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce? Are those behind this bill merely seeking to put a mere sentiment on the statute books of the country, or does the evidence disclose that we are confronted with a practical proposition involving not only sentiment but also a vital economic situation in the proposed measure?

I do not propose in the time I have to attempt to answer the alleged arguments that have been made as to the unconstitutionality of this act, because I do not believe any convincing argument has been proposed. Certainly there are a number of precedents along the same line of Federal activity which tend to justify the assumption, at least, that this measure is entirely constitutional. But, as I say, we are presented with a startling situation as developed by the evidence with reference to infant and maternity mortality in the United States of America.

Now, gentlemen, what is in a large sense the function of our Government? The Constitution, as I say, gives the right to deal with the general welfare and common defense of the country, but there is another very clear announcement of the purposes for which governments are instituted among men, and I invoke the spirit and letter of the Declaration of Independence which actuated our fathers upon these propositions when they declared that—

We hold these truths to be self-evident. That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

What comes first in the category of those essential prerogatives for the preservation of which the Government was established? The life of the people of the Government. And we find by these disclosures here that we have an unnecessarily large mortality among the mothers, and among infants, especially, who are under 1 year of age, in this country. I hold in my hand here the hearings upon this proposition in which it is shown by evidence which I assume is authoritative that so far as maternal mortality is concerned the United States has a greater death rate than New Zealand, Austria, Spain, France, England, Wales, Japan, Norway, Sweden, Scotland, Switzerland, Ireland, Hungary, Prussia, the Netherlands, and Italy. The ratio of infant mortality under 1 year of age discloses the same startling facts.

Now, gentlemen, I submit for your earnest consideration that this is an undisputed proposition, and we are aiming to put upon the statute books legislation affecting the public welfare, going to the proposition of conserving the very life of the Nation at its source, and I say to you it is not only a sentimental but it is a practical proposition of the profoundest significance that should challenge the attention of the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Can we do anything to remedy this situation? That is what is sought to be done by this proposed legislation. Gentlemen, I want to say to you that I have had some personal observation of the beneficent effects of the activities of the Public Health Service in my own district, in my own home county, along lines not of actual medical treatment by the physicians of the Public Health Service but by the very same kind of activities which are sought to be put into effect by this bill, the disclosure to the people of educational and instructive facts that have been garnered by that great bureau in their observations and investigations, so that the people of my home county had the benefit of those lectures and of those pamphlets and of that information, which gave them great and scientific direction and information as to the conservation of their health. And after those gentlemen had visited that county and made a survey and visited every home in it, the succeeding year showed a great reduction in illness and in the prevention of communicable and infectious diseases in the county. We are seeking by this bill to enlarge that theory of governmental assistance to the States for the benefit of the people all over the United States of America, to preserve the lives of thousands of mothers and infants each year.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Valuing the gentleman's opinion as a lawyer, I want to ask him what similar measures have been passed by Congress to the one that is under consideration here?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, I will say to my friend a number of them have been cited with reference to the Federal aid to the States, as to the principle that is invoked. The Smith-Hughes educational act, going directly in the public schools of the country, gives State aid. The gentleman will recall the bill providing financial assistance to the States for the construction of public highways. The gentleman will recall the Smith-Lever extension act, under which the agricultural extension agents are doing splendid work all over the country. And, as a matter of fact, the Public Health Service in a large measure has been cooperating under Federal appropriation with the State authorities for the protection of the public health of the people. The country has contributed out of the public lands a tremendous amount to the agricultural and mechanical colleges. And if I had time I could cite a number of precedents along the same line of activity.

Mr. FESS. And there was the bill for the rehabilitation of the industrial cripples.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That was an act I hesitated to mention, because I had the honor of introducing that bill originally in this House, and it was subsequently passed under the name of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Now, gentlemen, as I say, a number of specious arguments have been made against this bill. They talk about the sort of anticipated dangers that might arise in the future if we passed this bill, because the original proponents of a measure of this sort have advocated possibly some radical and unwise provisions, but which have not been incorporated in this bill. There has not been a bill of this kind passed by this Congress during my service here that has been more careful in safeguarding the rights of the State officials and of the States than this bill. In terms, it specifically prevents any Federal interference on the part of the Government or by any of its agents under this act, but provides only for Federal leadership and stimulates cooperation on the part of the States in this great humanitarian process of undertaking to save, if it is possible, a tremendous percentage of the unnecessary deaths of women and children in this country.

Gentlemen, I think the Congress of the United States owes something out of a sense of elementary gratitude to the women of this country along the line proposed in this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this important subject has been presented so ably and so clearly by the chairman of this committee and by those who have spoken during this debate that I hesitate to try to add anything of value to the arguments in favor of this bill. Some years ago a statesman and scholar in this country made this statement:

When the educated, industrious, temperate, thrifty citizen is as prompt and zealous and unflinching in duty as the ignorant and venal and mischievous, or when it is clear that they can not be roused to their duty, then, but not until then, if ignorance and corruption always carries the day, there can be no question that this Government has failed. But let us not be deceived! While good men sit at home, not knowing that there is anything to be done, nor caring to know, half persuaded that this Republic is the contemptible rule of a mob, and secretly longing for some splendid and vigorous despotism, then remember that it is not a government mastered by ignorance; it is a government betrayed by intelligence.

Recently the right to vote was given to women in this country, and almost immediately those splendid women who have been thinking on these vital social and economic questions were aroused to a realization that they would have the opportunity to translate their thoughts into action, to translate their ideas with reference to certain vital civic, social, and economic questions into legislation that would work for the benefit of the women and children of this country. They refuse longer to permit the most vital problems of motherhood and childhood to be mastered by ignorance or betrayed by intelligence. I do not hesitate to say to you, gentlemen, that at this very minute there are more women devoting careful thought to these long-neglected social, civic, and economic questions than has been given to them in the same length of time before in the history of the Nation. [Applause.] And it is time for us to listen.

I have heard the proposition ridiculed on this floor, and the assertion has been made that the statistics with reference to the loss of life during childbirth are inaccurate. Well, the women of this country believe in those statistics, for the tragedy of the facts come under their observation year in and year out in almost every community of any size.

It has been shown that 23,000 mothers die during childbirth in the United States in a year. This awful toll is an economic question, my friends, as well as a sentimental one. It is not necessary, however, to decide this question on the basis of sentiment. It is an economic as well as a sentimental and humanitarian social problem. Every time a mother dies in childbirth it means not only heartaches, it often means that little folks are left alone to battle on; it means a community loss. It means sometimes the breaking up of a home, the loss of a home, and the placing of the children in an orphan asylum. These are economic questions that bear heavily upon the community and upon the men and women who have to suffer because of it. Usually those burdens fall most heavily upon those least able to bear them. It is a burden that bears most heavily on the shoulders of labor, because the mother and children often feel the pinch of unemployment and financial stress.

They say that 250,000 babies lose their lives through neglect during a year. You say I am appealing to sentiment. My friends, it can be reduced to an economic basis. It has been demonstrated beyond doubt that it costs only $5 to save a baby, but costs $50 to bury it. You need not take into consideration what it means when the little white hearse draws up to the door, you men who have not gone through that experience, but you business men who insist that this is simply a sentimental appeal on my part may take your pencils and multiply 250,000 by $50 and you will have $12,500,000 a year loss to the United States.

I want you to take those figures home, my friends. I have heard men go wild when they were discussing in this House the African horse disease, the foot-and-mouth disease, tuberculosis among cattle, the tick fever, the cattle scab, and hog cholera every time appropriations are requested for the eradication of these diseases from cattle, sheep, hogs, and horses. Take the appropriations during this year. This Congress has appropriated $992,500 for the eradication of one disease alone among the cattle of this country.

We pose as a great country with a great civilization, the leader of the countries of the world in the higher achievements of national life, and yet, think of it, we stand seventeenth, we stand at the foot of the list in the care of mothers and babes among those countries that have been enumerated upon the floor of this House. All that the Federal Government is doing now for the women and children of this country, according to statistics, is to appropriate about 5 and five one-thousandths of 1 per cent for the work of aiding the women and children of this country. We are spending $200,000 a year to look after the be-nighted reindeer up in Alaska.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Has the gentleman figured that this appropriation, if made in this bill, will amount to a little over 1 cent to each individual in the United States per year?

Mr. REED of New York. I did not know it, but I thank the gentleman for the information.

It might be well for you men who have been talking about the number of mothers and the soldiers in this great World War to bring home to your minds another situation. In this great Republic of ours a very thorough investigation has been made with reference to the school children of this country, and this investigation shows that this appalling situation exists in this great free land of ours:

At least 1 per cent—200,000 of the 20,000,000 school children in the United States are mentally defective.

Over 1 per cent—250,000 at least—of the children are handicapped by organic heart disease.

At least 5 per cent—1,000,000—have now, or have had, tuberculosis, a danger often to others as well as to themselves.

Five per cent—1,000,000 of them—have defective hearing, which, unrecognized, gives many the undesired reputation of being mentally defective.

Twenty-five per cent—5,000,000—of these school children have defective eyes. A majority of these children have received no attention.

About 25 per cent—5,000,000 children—are suffering from malnutrition, and poverty is not the most important cause of this serious barrier to healthy development.

From 15 to 25 per cent—3,000,000 to 5,000,000—have adenoids, diseased tonsils, or other glandular defects.

Adenoids and diseased tonsils make backward pupils and interfere with the child's general development and health.

From 10 to 20 per cent—2,000,000 to 4,000,000—have weak foot arches, weak spines, or other joint defects.

From 50 to 75 per cent—10,000,000 to 15,000,000—have defective teeth, and defective teeth are more or less injurious to health.

Seventy-five per cent—15,000,000—have physical defects which are potentially or actually detrimental to health.

Now, my friends, the good women of this country were not unmindful of the call for soldiers when war was declared. When the call came, these mothers of the Nation gave the choicest jewels of their heart to their country. They laid them freely on the altar of the Nation, and now the strength of this Republic depends on the citizen of the future. I believe that this great Republic should throw its protecting arms around motherhood and childhood, to the end that the citizens of tomorrow, when they take up public duties, when it comes their time to assume leadership in public affairs, will be able to discharge their duty as becomes American citizens. [Applause.]

And, my friends, we can draw a little picture here. It has been painted in the words of the poet. There are some who see our problems through pessimistic eyes, and there are others who see them through a very different lens. A certain poet has asked the question—

Sad man, sad man, tell me, pray,

What did you see to-day?

I saw the unloved and unhappy old waiting for slow, delinquent death to come;

Pale little children tolling for the rich, in rooms where sunlight is ashamed to go;

The awful almshouse, where the living dead rot slowly in their hideous open graves.

And there were shameful things:

Soldiers and forts, and industries of death, and devil ships, and loud-winged devil birds,

All bent on slaughter and destruction. These and yet more shameful things mine eyes beheld:

Old men upon lascivious conquest bent, and young men living with no thought of God.

And half-clothed women puffing at a weed, aping the vices of the underworld.

Engrossed in shallow pleasures, and intent on being barren wives.

These things I saw.

(How God must loathe his earth!)

Glad man, glad man, tell me, pray,

What did you see to-day?

I saw an aged couple in whose eyes

Shone that deep light of mingled love and faith

Which makes the earth one room of paradise

And leaves no sting in death.

I saw vast regiments of children pour,

Rank after rank out of the schoolroom door,

By Progress mobilized. They seemed to say:

"Let ignorance make way;

We are the heralds of a better day."

I saw the college and the church that stood

For all things sane and good;

I saw God's helpers in the shop and slum

Blazing a path for health and hope to come;

And true religion from the grave of creeds

Springing to meet man's needs.

I saw great Science reverently stand

And listen for a sound from Borderland,

No longer arrogant with unbelief,

Holding itself aloof,

But drawing near and searching high and low

For that complete and all convincing proof

Which shall permit its voice to comfort grief,

Saying, "we know."

I saw fair women in their radiance rise

And trample old traditions in the dust.

Looking in their clear eyes,

I seemed to hear these words as from the skies,

"He who would father our sweet children must Be worthy of the trust."

Against the rosy dawn I saw unfurled

The banner of the race we usher in—

The supermen and women of the world

Who make no code of sex to cover sin.

Before they till the soil of parenthood

They look to it that seed and soil are good.

And I saw, too, that old, old sight, and best—

Pure mothers with dear babes at the breast.

These things I saw.

(How God must love his earth!)

It is God's helpers in the shop and slum and the mothers of this country who are blazing a path for health and hope to come. It is true religion springing to meet man's need and finding through this legislation an agency for a higher order of service to the women and children of this Republic. I am glad of this opportunity to support this splendid measure. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that our aggressive physician Member is not here. I would have liked to have a little discussion with the gentleman from Delaware, Dr. LAYTON, who is so insistent in his opposition to this bill. I do not know how any physician, taking that word in its higher sense, can oppose a bill calculated to spread the knowledge of hygiene. It is reported that the Chinese deduct a certain amount from the salary of the family physician every time any member of the family becomes ill. They proceed upon the theory that it is the duty of the physician to prevent illness.

The progress of our civilization, if we have any, is due to the raising of the general level of education, to the spreading of knowledge. The individual brain has not improved. We have no intellect to-day that is greater than intellects produced thousands of years ago, nor have we added a single ethical conception to the code of ethics of the world. Thousands of years ago the same ethical principles were laid down that are now being advocated by the noblest minds. The only difference between our present civilization and those of the past is that general education has improved, and a larger proportion of the community are in a position to educate themselves than in the past. That is the only difference.

To the extent that fundamental and elementary principles of medical science have become known to the great mass, to that extent have we made real and genuine progress in promoting health. European countries have been fighting the plague, how? Primarily through introducing cleanliness. The clean shirt has done more to do away with the plague than any medicine that has ever been used. It was the spread of hygiene, the science which deals with the rules of health, which systematizes the knowledge of things necessary to promote and to maintain health, which has done away with the great plagues that formerly were the scourge of humanity.

The really scientific man can not be measured by the salary he earns or by the fees he receives. I can not have much respect for a physician who revels in riches instead of devoting his life to the promotion of medical science, the noblest and the most ancient of all sciences. [Applause.] It is the science which teaches men how to rule the forces of nature instead of yielding as the mute animal does.

The difficulty with this bill, however, is that it is an emasculated thing. Its title is misleading. I do not know whether the women reformers want to fool the politicians or whether the politicians are trying to fool the women reformers. It is more likely that everybody is trying to fool everybody else here. [Laughter.] You know we have two classes of women reformers. Parenthetically it should be said about American women that there is a larger measure of intelligence among them than among American men. [Applause.] American men are the cleverest business men in the world. Nobody can beat them. There is no cleverer lawyer than the American lawyer when it comes to the application of a particular set of principles to a certain state of facts. But American women, because they are not absorbed in the business of money making, have more time and are more interested in profound social problems that are brought to their attention than the men are. But we have two groups of women reformers. One is composed of the sort of women who are tired of their existence. Having attended a horse show and a dog show and a cat show and a diplomatic show they take up intellectuality. [Laughter.] They are very rich and have nothing to do. They follow the latest fashion in the world of social reform. They have enough money to hire good secretaries and they do their studying by proxy. They collect around them all sorts of cranks and are always ready to agitate and to be agitated. I have not much use for that class. Fortunately the great majority of women interested in social work are not of that sort. We have thousands of sincere, earnest students of society who come in direct and constant touch with the sorrows of the masses who are at the bottom of our modern industrial society.

They want to do things to help these children of poverty. Very often they are poor and are compelled to work for low salaries. This class of women has been spoken of with contempt by some people here on this floor. Why, of course, many of them are salaried people. They have to live, and in order to live they must either steal or work. Since they are not railroad financiers they can not steal and they are compelled to work for a living. [Laughter.] The advent of these women is one of the most hopeful signs of our generation.

Some gentlemen have advanced the question of the freedom of science. I am opposed to State control of science, although you will remember that the greatest Democrat of all time, Thomas Jefferson, advocated the establishment of a national university. I draw the line between two branches of science. It is the duty of the State, the duty of the community, to teach each individual the elements of those sciences about which there is no dispute, which can not be contradicted, about which there can be no difference of opinion. Of course, we are all agreed in the United States that the religious question should be eliminated, because in the matter of religion everybody has a right to be a fool or a wise man in his own way. [Laughter.] I believe that the State should keep away from advocating economic or social theories about which there is serious controversy and leave that to the individual. In any event the State should never attempt to prevent any kind of private teaching. But it is the undeniable obligation of the State to equip every citizen with the knowledge of the elementary facts of those sciences about which there can be no difference of opinion, and among them the facts of elementary hygiene. The rules relating to health should be a thing which every human being should know.

But I tell you those who oppose this bill are not altogether foolish; there is a point where hygiene comes in contact with social science, and they are afraid of that. What should an honest physician do who comes to a poor man's family? Instead of prescribing half a dozen powders in unintelligible Latin, he should say in nine cases out of ten, "My dear man, medicine is a humbug; I can not give a prescription. What you need is rest; what you need is better food; what you need is better clothes. Your work is too hard. Conditions in your factory destroy your health. Gather together whatever there is left in you of will and of energy and help improve your condition and the condition of the rest of the people." The Children's Bureau has incurred the hostility of the powerful because it has revealed some of the horrors of our industrial system.

Among the purposes for which the Children's Bureau was organized by the act of April 9, 1912, was to investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people and to especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, and legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories.

The bureau has since its organization made a number of exhaustive studies.

The studies have disclosed, among other things, an indefensible state of affairs so far as infant mortality and maternity mortality are concerned.

It appears that this country, instead of being ahead of every other country by reason of the sparseness of its population and of its inexhaustible wealth, is far behind the majority of the civilized countries of the world.

These studies have made clear that infant mortality is largest among the underpaid wage workers of our people. I shall not cite any statistical data. The information is readily available.

The bureau has also been distributing a number of pamphlets written in simple language and containing instructions for feeding the child, for taking care of a baby, for the preparation of artificial food, and similar information indispensable to mothers.

Let me read one of their little pamphlets:

What do growing children need? Shelter. Decent, clean, well-kept house. Plenty of fresh air in the house winter and summer. Warm rooms in cold weather. Separate beds with sufficient bedclothes to keep warm. Sanitary indoor watercloset or outdoor privy. Pure, abundant water supply. A comfortable place to welcome friends. Clean, simple, appetizing, well cooked food. Milk, at least 1 pint a day. Butter or some other form of fat. Cereal and bread. Green vegetables, especially leafy vegetables. Fruit. Eggs, meat, or fish. Clothing, clean, whole garments. Different clothing for day and night, suited to the climate. Change of underclothes and nightgowns at least weekly. A change of stockings at least twice a week. Warm underclothing and stockings in cold climates. Heavy coats, caps, and mittens for cold weather. Shoes free from holes, long, and wide enough.

Read this pamphlet to the directors of the Steel Trust or to the Woolen Trust. How many workers in our principal industries can supply their children with the things declared by this Government publication to be indispensable for normal life and normal growth?

What a mockery this advice is to millions of mothers. How little our social reformers are willing to do to get to the bottom of things and to help bring about a state of affairs where the head of every family should be able by honest toil to supply all the needs of the family.

Can you not see how the defenders of accumulated wealth in this country look at these things? They would not mind promoting a general knowledge of ordinary rules of hygiene; but the trouble is that these rules, if made popular, will bring the people too close to a study of economic and social conditions, and that is something that they can not afford. It is for the same reason that the appropriation for the publication of labor statistics is being reduced.

I have very grave doubt whether the Children's Bureau will be permitted to continue its studies and to make the results public, for telling the truth is a most dangerous thing to the aristocracy of wealth.

The fact is that all this bill does is to make an appropriation to encourage the States in organizing child-welfare work—whatever that work may mean in the various States—and to help coordinate that work.

The appropriation for study and investigation is not increased.

I said in the beginning of my talk that somebody is being fooled by this bill. The bill bears all the earmarks of political cowardice. It is proclaimed to be a bill calculated to protect the infant and the mother. It is nothing of the kind. There is no provision in the bill for anything which could be interpreted as maternity benefits.

Maternity benefits mean medical and financial aid to expectant mothers or mothers, the aid to be given either from a fund maintained by the Government or from funds required by law to be established in the industries employing women. One will find a description of the maternity benefit systems in one of the publications of the Children's Bureau.

The publication is entitled "Maternity Benefit Systems in Certain Foreign Countries." There is not a line in the bill which could be interpreted as establishing or as aiding to establish any kind of a maternity benefit system.

I can readily see why both male and female politicians should insist that this is a bill "for the promotion of the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy," or, as the Senate bill chooses to call it, "for the public protection of maternity and infancy." The politicians want people to believe that they keep the promises contained in their national platforms, in very vague language, it is true, about "social welfare" and "social justice."

If they can not give the people the right kind of a law, they can at least give them the right kind of a title of a law.

Deceptive as the bill is, insufficient as it is, I shall vote for it. If it will not accomplish anything else, it will in a measure help facilitate the educational work now carried on to a large extent by the Children's Bureau and the work of spreading the knowledge of elementary things necessary for the preservation and maintenance of life. [Applause.]

[Mr. LONDON was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this bill is to stimulate the several States in promoting the welfare of maternity and infancy. Its purpose is to materially decrease the mortality rate of American mothers and babies. It seeks to save them from preventable death. Surely such a measure deserves the most fair, careful, and earnest consideration of this House. It certainly deserves to be debated upon its merits and without passion and prejudice. No measure has arisen during my membership here that has provoked so much interest and discussion. Proponents of the bill have earnestly set forth its benefits while opponents have vigorously set forth their views in opposition. The latter, however, both inside and outside of this Chamber have strayed from the path of legitimate argument in their efforts to defeat this measure. In some instances the opponents have resorted to the grossest kind of misrepresentation. In fact, some of the communications which I have received against the measure are of such a character as to seriously raise the question of their admissibility through the mail. Surely a measure designed to protect American motherhood and to conserve the lives of American babies deserves discussion upon its merits and without the resort to personality and to conscious misrepresentation.

If this bill has merit, what difference does it make if it numbers among its advocates those of another political faith or those with whom we radically differ on other questions of governmental policy? Yet most of the argument—if I may dignify it by that term—against this bill is illustrated by the colloquy between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] and the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON]. In substance the gentleman from Indiana was asked to vote against the bill because the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], a member of the Socialist Party, was among its supporters. Away with such tactics. Debate this bill upon its merits or demerits. The fact is that hardly an opponent has even attempted to discuss the specific provisions of the bill. Instead they have put up "straw men" which they have proceeded to knock down.

I believe that it was John Ruskin who said, "Every child has the right to be well born." Do you men believe in this right? I do. This bill is a step to confirm that right. [Applause.]

America has much to be proud of these days. Yet America in its greatness, with its wealth, glorious history, and inspiring traditions, should not be beyond profiting by the experience of other countries. Statistics show that the United States ranks tenth among the countries of the world in infant death rate. I call the attention of the House to the infant mortality thermometer, showing death under 1 year of age per 1,000 births. The rates are for the latest available years up to 1918 and were gathered by the Children's Bureau. It is found on page 17 of the printed hearings. The standing of the various countries, as there shown, is as follows:

New Zealand, 48 per 1,000 births.
Australia, 58 per 1,000 births.
Norway, 60 per 1,000 births.
Denmark, 75 per 1,000 births.
Sweden, 75 per 1,000 births.
Switzerland, 80 per 1,000 births.
Ireland, 86 per 1,000 births.
Netherlands, 92 per 1,000 births.
England and Wales, 98 per 1,000 births.
United States, 100 deaths per 1,000 births.

These figures apply to infants under 1 year of age.

The figures are even more astounding as to maternal death rates. The thermometer setting forth these figures will be found on page 16 of the hearings. The latest available figures up to 1917 show us to rank seventeenth, with 7 maternal deaths per 1,000 births. Norway, Sweden, the Netherlands, and Italy have less than 3, while England, Wales, and Japan have less than 4. Our maternal death rate is about 100 per cent greater than Great Britain.

These figures call not for ridicule but for earnest thought and action. Their accuracy has been questioned. Their authority has been attacked. Those who controvert them at least ought to submit proof that the figures are erroneous. To merely dispute is easy. If these figures are incorrect, what are the correct figures? If we do not stand tenth and seventeenth, respectively, where do we stand?

A statement has been made that the number of infants under the age of 1 year who died in America during the period of 1917-18, when we were at war with Germany, exceeded the number of American soldiers who were killed in battle or died from wounds received in that conflict. The truth of this statement has been challenged. What are the facts? Our battle casualties resulting in death were about 38,000 in one and one-half years. Our infant casualties under one year during that same period were in excess of 300,000. Such figures astound one. They displease us and are unpleasant to face but they are true. Instead of denying them, it is our duty to ascertain the cause and to change the conditions that produce such figures. That is what this bill is designed to do.

However, disagree as we may about these figures there is one thing that we can all agree upon, and that is that there are both deaths of mothers and babies that are preventable. This being true is there any problem more worthy of the study and consideration of the representatives of a great people than the devising of ways and means for decreasing these preventable deaths?

When do these deaths generally occur? Of babies dying the first year 47.4 per cent die under one month and 33½ per cent die during the first week following birth. Physicians will say that these early deaths are largely due to the prenatal condition of the mother. This bill is designed to stimulate interest in the States and communities for them to make available needed information and care to these expectant mothers, that not only they but their children may live.

Great work is being done in this country along this line. New York City is probably doing the largest work and New York City is the pioneer in this work. This year New York City expends $900,000 for work of this kind. This great metropolis has been conducting this work for 12 to 13 years and it has paid. During that time the infant death rate in the city has been reduced from 144 deaths per 1,000 births to 85. This is a reduction of 40 per cent. Is work of this kind worth while? Is it not worthy of being followed? Does it not merit the attention of this Congress?

Yet the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], a member of that great and noble profession whose duty it is to prevent disease and to heal the sick, calls it socialistic and paternalistic. Mr. Chairman, if this work be socialistic then I stand before this House and plead guilty of being that kind of a Socialist. [Applause.]

To-day New York City, by reason of this work, has the lowest infant mortality rate of any of the cities of the whole world. Is there any reason why the rest of the United States should not follow the example in New York? To ask the question is to answer it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And New York is the only city in the United States that has that record with reference to other cities of the world, because it is the pioneer and has carried its work on.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; and let me compare in that respect the maternal death rate in New York with that of other cities. Out of 10,000 labors the maternal death rate in Boston was 71.01; in Baltimore, 64.89; in Philadelphia, 61.48; and in New York, 46.11.

Mr. REED of New York. And I think the gentleman's attention should also be directed to the fact that there is extreme congestion of population in New York City.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes. This work is there being carried on under very difficult and adverse conditions. There is the greatest congestion there, as everyone knows. Then, there are from 25 to 30 different racial groups to deal with. Furthermore, 81 per cent of the population is of foreign parentage. In addition, it is a big port of entry into this country, for something like 85 per cent of our immigration enters through New York City. These factors combined make a problem. However, under the supervision of Dr. Josephine Baker, this problem is being solved. This Dr. Baker, by the way, appeared in support of this legislation, and the committee gave great heed to her views and suggestions. I commend to you, gentlemen, the reading of Dr. Baker's testimony, which will be found in the printed hearings between pages 1 to 27, inclusive. In my judgment, it was the best argument presented in behalf of this legislation.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Is this higher death rate in the city of Boston to be accounted for because of the higher degree of intellectuality in that city?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman will have to put that question to some Member from the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. VOLK. Is it not a fact that all of the work in New York City is under the supervision of a physician?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes. I understand it is under the supervision of a physician, and let me say that the Children's Bureau has physicians who will be in direct charge of this work. Let me further call the attention of the committee to the fact that we provide for the administration of this work by the States, and that the work in the States shall be performed by the child hygiene division of the State public-health service. Thirty-six out of forty-eight States now have child hygiene divisions in their public-health departments. At the very outset, therefore, the administration in at least 36 States is placed in a public-health department, which is, of course, under the jurisdiction of a physician.

While New York has been the pioneer and has done such great work, other States have not been inactive. Still others are doing practically nothing with little appreciation of the situation and the result to the Nation of their failure. In my own city the Child Welfare Society has been doing some fine work along this particular line.

The responsibility of caring for the health of our people rests primarily in the States. There it should remain. This bill does not seek to transfer that responsibility to the Federal Government. While this responsibility is primarily with the States, yet I should say that the Nation itself is not without its duties and obligations in the premises. We have already recognized this fact by establishing a National Public Health Service; by providing for a pure food law and for a meat-inspection service. In the nature of things the death of its mothers and the death of its future men and women concern not only the individual States but the Nation as a nation. For example, if the State of Minnesota should so far forget its obligations to the Union and its duty to its own citizens as to cause the death or fail to prevent the death of any considerable number of its citizens, has not the Federal Government the right to concern itself with that situation and do what it can in a constitutional way to create such an interest in the situation which imperils the welfare of the State as would do away with that peril? To ask the question is to answer it. I can come to no other conclusions, therefore, than that while primarily this problem is for the States, yet the Nation has a present duty to perform which it ought not to shirk; hence the bill before us.

In brief, what does it provide? First, it authorizes during the first year an appropriation of $1,480,000, at least 95 per cent of which is to be distributed among the several States complying with certain conditions. Of this amount $480,000 is to be distributed among the 48 States, $10,000 going to each State. Not to exceed $50,000 can be expended for administrative work at Washington in carrying out the provisions of the act. The remaining $950,000, with a minimum of $5,000 to each State, is to be distributed pro rata among the several States in accordance with their population, providing that the States match this pro rata share by a like appropriation from their own funds. Other provisions somewhat similar are made for five subsequent years.

The bill then provides for the creation of a board of maternity and infant hygiene, consisting of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, and the Commissioner of Education. It is the duty of this board to pass upon and approve the plan that will be submitted by the States in carrying out the general premises of the act. The administrative features of the act, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, are placed with the Children's Bureau.

The general detailed administration of the act is left with the several States, who are to submit plans such as I have just referred to. The bill contains a number of safeguards, to which I will refer later. It is hoped that by the end of six years the States will not only have matched the Federal appropriation but greatly exceeded it, and that with this increased interest further Federal appropriations will be unnecessary.

This bill is the result of a sincere effort upon the part of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to help solve this problem. What are the objections that have been made to it?

First, it is claimed that it is socialistic and paternalistic. I have already referred to this objection, and let me say this, further, if work of this kind is socialistic, then the like can be said of public education and the regulation of public health. Dr. Baker testified that no one claimed that the work that is being carried on in New York City by the municipality is socialistic.

Then it is claimed that the doctors are against this measure. Some are. Many others are for it. Physicians appeared on behalf of the measure and against it when the bill was up before the committee. No physician, however, appeared before the committee bearing any resolution from the American Medical Association which could in any way be construed as against this bill, notwithstanding the fact that this association has had two meetings since this bill or a similar one was first up for consideration before Congress.

Mr. VOLK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I am sorry I can not yield further.

Then it has been urged that this is a birth-control bill. It is true that the opponents have failed to point out any particular provision in the bill warranting this charge. They merely make it in the hopes that some one will believe it. I do not know anyone who has any less use for "birth controlites" than I have. In my judgment they ought to be able to find better use for their time and be in better business. This bill has nothing of the kind in it. It is merely another "straw man," put up by the opposition.

Then, it has been claimed that the passage of this bill would result in the payment of cash to mothers on the birth of a child. I disagree wholly with European systems of maternity subsidies or gratuities. Let that system remain in Europe where it originated; that is the way I feel about it. This bill, however, does not only not provide for maternity benefits of this nature but, on the contrary, it expressly provides against any such payments.

Then, it is urged that the Federal or State officials will by virtue of this act enter the sacred precincts of the home and there drag out the mother or child, or both, for medical treatment or advice. Much propaganda of this kind has been spread throughout the country. There never has been any provision in the bill warranting any such charge. In the present bill there is an express provision to the contrary. The benefits of this act are to those who voluntarily come to receive them. There is nothing which in any way sets up directly or indirectly any system of "State medicine," nor which in any way compels a mother or her child to submit to treatment of any kind or to receive advice from any person whatever.

Finally, it is urged that the bill is unconstitutional. That is a stock argument that has been used against almost every progressive measure since the forming of our Government. It has been urged against every bill designed to interfere with privilege. No progressive measure has escaped this charge. For my own part I refuse to follow these strict constructionists who continually fight against progress. I believe that the provision of the Constitution granting to Congress the power to "provide for the common defense and general welfare" means just what it says. Let me quote in this connection from a decision from the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of South Carolina versus the United States and reported in One hundred and ninety-fifth United States, page 437. In page 448 of the opinion, in reference to the grant of power to the Federal Government, the court uses this significant language with which I am in entire accord:

"Being a grant of powers to a government, its language is general: As changes come in social and political life, it embraces in its grasp all new conditions which are within the scope of the power in terms conferred. In other words, while the powers granted do not change, they apply from generation to generation to all things to which they are in their nature applicable."

Changes are yearly coming in our social and political life, being new conditions which our Constitution is broad enough to provide for.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the hearings disclosed the saving in New York City during the past year by the work contemplated in this bill of lives of 7,000 infants under the age of 1 year. This being not only the saving of 7,000 lives of little ones who will help brighten and cheer that many homes but it means, in addition, 7,000 prospective citizens whose "right it is to be well born," and who, if well born, and permitted to live, will grow up to be strong and vigorous men and women, ready and willing to serve our great Republic in peace or in war, as the need may be.

Mr. Chairman, I can come to no other conclusion from my study of this question that the work commenced in New York City should be extended and enlarged throughout the Nation. That it is the duty at the present time of the Federal Government to meet the situation. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I would like for the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield some of his time, as he has more than I have.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I have now listened with interest to the general debate on this bill for more than eight hours. I find the purposes of this bill are: First, to stimulate and assist State efforts to undertake a broader field of activity in an educational way, promoting the economic and social conditions which will improve the health of the mother, and make more safe and agreeable the life of the child. Second, to cooperate with the States by what might be termed the contribution from the National Treasury of a promotion fund, an advancement, to put on foot a proper State agency. Third, to call to its councils the head of the great Public Health Service and the head of our national educational system and with their assistance to administer, through the Children's Bureau, a stimulating and sympathetic interest in the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy. Fourth, this interest and education not to be intruded upon, not to be compulsory, not to be directory, but to be given when acceptable, asked for, and approved. Fifth, the field of medicine is not to be invaded; the physician and the trained nurse to remain supreme in their own domain; nor shall the recipient to this public assistance be directed in the employment of any particular medical advice or help.

I have also learned from authoritative sources that more than 23,000 mothers in the United States die every year in bringing their children into existence and that more than 300,000 children in the United States die every year under 1 year of age, and 47 per cent of those that die under 1 year of age die under 1 month of age, and that 33½ per cent of all those who die in that year die under 1 week of age. Should this law materially reduce this death rate, it will prove a blessing. The testimony before the committee was to the effect that more than 50 per cent of those who die under 1 month die from causes connected with prenatal conditions which could have been prevented if ignorance and poverty had been relieved in some way or information brought to prospective mothers concerning the rules of hygiene and good health and proper prenatal care. New York City has been working along these lines for 13 years and the reduction of mortality must convince one that their work has been very effective.

Every American has the right to be born of sound mind and sound body. I shall support this bill because I believe its enactment may tend to make that right an accomplished fact. The draft incident to the recent World War startled all of us with its revelations of our unsound thousands, unsound both mentally and physically. It was then we began more fully to realize that while the Federal Government was spending millions to assist the several States in fighting the boll weevil in the South and the hog cholera in the North it was spending nothing by way of cooperation with the States in reducing our increasing mortality incident to childbirth. We found that the mothers were dying by the tens of thousands and the infants by hundreds of thousands. Can not this loss be decreased by such a law?

Not only that; we found that our death rates are higher than most European countries and that while their death rates were decreasing ours were increasing. If this bill proposed any invasion of the home, any check on the authority of the father and mother, I would not favor it. But it does none of these. It merely attempts to disseminate fundamental principles available for those who wish them. It, as amended in the House, in no sense invades the province of the family physician. We are told that no medical association has gone on record against it.

I have noticed that practically every person who has spoken against the bill also voted against woman suffrage. This may be significant. Inasmuch as my first vote in this House was for woman suffrage, this feature will not disturb me in my support of this bill. Most of those opposing the bill complain because it involves expenditure of approximately $1,000,000 per year. Well, I favor economy, but let us see. During the first month after the armistice—October, 1918—our Government expended approximately $2,000,000,000, a sum equal to all the Government expenditures from the beginning of President Washington's first term to the opening of the Civil War. During the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the United States Government expended, in round figures, $6,000,000,000, a sum about equal to the expenditures of the Government from its very beginning to the end of the Civil War, including the entire cost of the War of 1812 and the Civil War. Think of that. That is the rate at which we were spending money, following the World War, when this Congress convened. And, mark you, 93 cents of every dollar of that vast sum was expended on account of war—expenses of past wars, pensions, compensations, and so forth, and appropriations for future wars. Most of this was necessary. No one would reduce or remove pensions, compensations, and so forth; but while 93 cents of each dollar goes to the purposes and consequences of war, can we not spare a small fraction of 1 cent on each dollar toward saving the lives of our mothers and infants? It has been demonstrated that during our 18 months of actual military engagement in Europe we lost more infants in America than our total casualties were in France. Let us take full and complete care of our soldiers, but while the 93 cents on each dollar is going to war, I maintain that we can well afford to expend a small fraction of 1 cent of each dollar for the removal of this blot from the fair name of American motherhood and childhood. I am ready to support this bill which appropriates for the preservation of life one six-thousandth of the sum we appropriated last year for war purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I yield to my friend.

Mr. VAILE. I am in entire sympathy with the gentleman's views; but does he not think these expenses in defense of the Nation are also expenses in behalf of life and safety?

Mr. FOSTER. I do. I would not reduce the amount necessary for pensions, compensation, and the other necessary purposes, nor would I disarm too rapidly, but I am sure my friend from Colorado agrees with me that healthy mothers bear healthy children, and with healthy children we shall, in part, have done with the disgrace of inefficiency, as disclosed by our recent draft. Should this bill assist in eventually reducing the death rate of mothers and infants 50 per cent, as it is reliably reported it may, we would at once produce more healthy boys for soldiers and more healthy girls for Red Cross nurses, and at the same time more nearly approximate 100 per cent men and women for the far better pursuits of peace. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for 13 minutes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I have been accused of various things at one time and another, but I think I have never been accused of being a radical. I have been accused of being overconservative, even of being a reactionary. What I try to be is one of progressive thought within the speed limit. No man on this floor stands freer to vote his judgment on this bill than I. In the last campaign I declined to say that I was for it, as I have always declined to say I would support legislation until I knew the character of the legislation as presented.

There has been a good deal said here about socialism and socialistic tendencies. Well, we have done many socialistic things, using the term broadly, in America in the past few years. Where I have supported those movements I confess to have supported them with more or less misgiving. I am naturally of a conservative turn of mind, inclined to leave with the people in the communities and in the States in the very largest measure the management of, and responsibility for, their own affairs. I believe it is essential to do that in order to maintain permanently a free government, a people sufficiently trained in the duties and responsibilities of government to be able to maintain a free government. We have progressed far since the old days of the democratic doctrine that the Government was the best that did the least, other than protect the citizen in his rights and maintain order.

I have a notion that if we are to move along paternalistic and socialistic lines, and these are in a certain sense paternalistic and socialistic, we should do it logically. Is it logical to move along socialistic and paternalistic lines only when property is at stake, only when wealth and material resources are to be conserved? I said in the last Congress when we were considering and I supported a bill under which the Federal Government cooperates with the States in the rehabilitation of industrial cripples, and it was opposed on the ground that it was socialistic and paternalistic, that admitting that it was paternalistic and socialistic in a certain sense, can we justify a position under which we shall be paternalistic and socialistic in the matter of the prevention of hog cholera and the eradication of the Texas cattle tick? Is it entirely logical to be paternalistic in the protection from fire of the private as well as the public forests, as proposed in a bill now before the Congress, and in the matter of the control of the boll weevil, the chestnut blight, and the pine blister, in the care of horses and hogs and cattle and sheep, and not in the care of humanity? [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. My time is very brief. If I had an hour, as the gentleman had, I would be very glad to yield.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue that line if I had the time, but my time is limited, and let me for a moment pursue another one.

I believe in keeping pledges. I am in favor of keeping promises. I did not make any pledges in favor of this bill. I do not owe my seat here to an announced approval of this legislation. But I imagine there are many gentlemen here whose majority was at least increased by reason of the fact that if they did not, others did for them give approval to legislation along these lines.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to gentlemen on the Democratic side declaiming against this proposition. I wonder if they have read their party's platform. Their platform pledges them to legislation along these lines as clearly and definitely as language can. I read:

We urge cooperation with the States for the protection of child life through infancy and maternity care; in the prohibition of child labor; and by adequate appropriations for the Children's Bureau and Woman's Bureau in the Department of Labor.

The gentlemen who wrote the first part of that must have with prophetic eye had this bill squarely before them. With it before them they could not have written differently.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Only two men on this side have spoken against this bill. I hope the gentleman will remark that the Democratic side are not opposed to this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the Democratic side will vote on this bill in accordance with their platform. The Republican platform is not quite so clear or so definite. The gentlemen who wrote the Republican platform perhaps did not have legislation just like this in their minds' eye, but they had something of the kind in contemplation. I read:

The supreme duty of the Nation is the conservation of human resources through an enlightened measure of social and industrial justice.

And so on and with further details.

The Republican candidate for the Presidency running on that platform amplified it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. If I can get a little more time, I would be delighted.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes. I want to ask the gentleman, for information, is it not a fact that a subcommittee presented to the platform committee of the Republican convention a specific, clear-cut indorsement of this bill, and it was refused by the platform committee?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know; I had nothing to do with making the platform. But I do know what the platform says, and I do know that our candidate during the campaign did refer to legislation of this character, and he went further and spoke more clearly and more definitely than his platform did. And I know also that in his message to this Congress on convening it, the Chief Executive, elected by 7,000,000 majority on the Republican platform, said:

I assume that the maternity bill, already strongly approved, will be enacted promptly, thus adding to our manifestation of human interest.

I do not always follow party mandate, and I do not think anyone should when they believe in their hearts that the mandate is in error; but I certainly do give the benefit of the doubt to the party declaration and to the party promise. We on the Republican side would have been derelict in our duty to our party and to our party's declaration and to the recommendation of the Chief Executive had we not presented this measure at this session of Congress. So far as this side is concerned, I am confident that a considerable number of votes were cast for our candidates with the understanding that the party stood for legislation along these lines.

Are we to keep the party pledge, or are we to quibble over this measure on the ground that it is somewhat paternalistic, when we so frequently take action along paternalistic lines affecting property and resources? I stand with those who desire to move cautiously along lines extending Federal power and jurisdiction and increasing expenditure, but this is a measure intended, purposed, and providing for cooperation with the States with a view to encouraging the States in the performance of those duties that belong primarily to the States. And who shall say that the States have not been derelict in their duty when, as has been repeatedly stated, there are 25 States in which no adequate record is kept of human births? Is it not time that the Federal Government shall lend aid and encouragement and urge upon the States the performance of their duties in the preservation of human life?

In the last campaign there came for the first time in our history into active cooperation in the management of affairs and into voting responsibility the better half of mankind. Do we owe nothing to this new and splendid addition to the electorate? They have unitedly asked this thing; both party platforms have in principle pledged it; the President has specifically recommended it; our best impulses approve it; and in my opinion it is our duty to resolve any doubt we may have and give the measure our earnest support. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield it?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield it back to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW].

Mr. WINSLOW. How much time does the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Four minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I want my two minutes back if the gentleman returns the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman from Kentucky proceed and use some time?

Mr. BARKLEY. How much time has the gentleman?

Mr. WINSLOW. We have an hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have only 50 minutes. I can use it. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am supporting this maternity bill, first of all, because it is an honest, earnest step in the direction of the highest possible guardianship of human life and human happiness. Much propaganda against this bill has made the impression that it sends the Government into the home, whether or no, to lay its hands on the mother and child in a spirit of profane interference. But this bill distinctly declares that help can be offered only where the parent is willing.

This bill is not an effort to supplant State functions or parental authority. It simply proposes to stimulate and encourage each to the noblest possible effort.

The liquor traffic was outlawed because it prospered on the destruction of human life and happiness. The highest function of government is not the adjustment of the Nation's commercial machinery, however important, but the development of that citizenship without which all Government activities would refuse to act. There would simply be no government at all if humanity were not in healthy action.

The picture of a government appropriating millions of dollars to develop every phase and form of animal life and plant life for the sake of the health and wealth of its citizens, the tragic picture of a civilized nation spending more than $90 out of every $100 for the purposes of war, and, as President Harding said in his notable address at the peace conference, "the scientific destruction of human life," and yet refuse to reach out its hands with a pitiful million a year to help every child beneath the flag to be well born. It is a travesty on the meaning of government. Why, gentlemen, this cry against Federal aid and Federal interference would stop every appropriation by the National Government intended to develop the bodies and the minds of the people.

Mr. VAILE. Assuring the gentleman that I am with him, I desire to ask him if he does not think that expenditures for the national defense are expenditures for the protection of the life of every citizen?

Mr. UPSHAW. I "accept the amendment" of the gentleman from Colorado and thank him for his pertinent suggestion.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman has stated that the object of this bill is to save the lives of mothers and children.

Mr. UPSHAW. And to help every child to be well born.

Mr. KEARNS. How is it going to do that? Possibly I will vote for the bill, but I have not heard one man here give any reason why this is going to save the life of one child or one mother. Tell me how it is going to do that.

Mr. UPSHAW. I will answer the gentleman by the attitude and declaration of those who know. I can not go into details in the brief compass of a 5-minute speech, but I will say in general terms that it intends to supply intelligent care where poverty and a lack of information have often caused fatal neglect. But I will say frankly to the gentleman that in addition to other reasons one great reason why I am supporting this bill is because the organized motherhood and womanhood in America are asking for it.

A blind, foolish man said to me the other day: "But the women don't know what they want." Who said so? Who dares to tell them so? Not I. May it please the ————. I refuse to assume the responsibility of telling my wife that she does not know what she wants [laughter], and I advise every gentleman opponent of this bill to follow my safe and sane example. [Laughter and applause.]

I hazarded political criticism in a State where it was unpopular and voted for equal suffrage because of the fundamental equity involved—voted for a governmental recognition of the fact that a woman has just as much sense and just as much patriotism as the man by her side [applause], and now since their political emancipation they come with their first great organized request. Behold those clear-visioned evangelists of human hope and human happiness, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the women who, like vestal virgins, kept the fires burning on the altar when we blind men said their dreams could not come true. Do not tell them that they do not know what they want. Look at the Federation of Women's Clubs in America representing millions of mothers. Do not tell them that they do not know what they want. The Atlanta Woman's Club has 1,200 clear-headed, patriotic women who know what they want.

To-day I stand with them as they stand in organized power and reach their fair hands to the future in behalf of their less fortunate sisters who crave and deserve the Nation's best for their children and their homes. Let no man forget the helpless state, the measureless worth, and the unspeakable possibilities and potentialities of a new-born babe. Only a child? Only the Nation's beautiful "to-morrow." Only a child? Only the hope or the threat of the Kingdom of God and the kingdom of men! Only a child? Only a spark from Divinity's throne that shall outlive the stars and outshine the sun!

God help my Nation, your Nation, to do its best to help these little "immortelles" of time and eternity to come into their glorious birthright of American opportunity under the best possible conditions—conditions that will make for that physical strength and that mental and moral health that will guarantee the greatest security of the Republic and the highest happiness of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the Chair kindly state how much time is left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has 43 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts 68 minutes remaining.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, in listening to the arguments of some of the opponents of this legislation yesterday and to-day I have felt that Congress and the country ought to be congratulated upon having a few men here, at least, who possess the virtues of moral courage and sincerity of purpose. They admit that they possess those virtues.

There has been a good deal said since this debate started by the opponents of the legislation about the sincerity and the motives of those who are supporting it. I have thought those statements ought not to be dignified by even a reference to them, but I do wish to put over against such statements a quotation from the testimony of Dr. S. Josephine Baker, of New York, whose testimony has been referred to here so many times. She said:

I have heard this bill called socialistic, for instance; but my feeling toward it is that it is not a Socialist, it is not a Republican, it is not a Democratic bill; simply a human bill, a bill of the finest motives of any I have ever known to be introduced.

Much of the discussion has seemed to me to be on a par with that attacking the motives of those who are supporting this legislation. It has been charged that the supporters of it are actuated by all sorts of sinister motives; that they would undermine our system of government and that they favor birth control. I wonder if those who make these charges realize who the good people are who favor this legislation? I will not attempt to name any great number of them. I will mention only the associations and organizations favoring the bill that were represented by one single witness before the committee.

Does anyone here believe that the members of the organizations which I am going to name favor birth control or that they have any other sinister motive in promoting this legislation?

Here are some of them: The American Child Hygiene Association; the American Association of University Women; the General Federation of Women's Clubs; the Girls' Friendly Society in America, which is an Episcopal organization; the National Congress of Mothers and Parents and Teachers' Association; the National Consumers' League; the National Council of Jewish Women; the National Organization of Public Health Nursing; the National Federation of Business and Professional Women; the Women's League for Peace and Freedom; the National League of Women Voters; the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution; the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union; the National Women's State Union League; and the National Board of the Young Woman's Christian Association.

If anybody can name more respectable people supporting any legislation which comes before this Congress, I would like to have him do so.

It is difficult to say anything new, or anything that has not already been referred to, at least since this debate started. All I can hope to do is to elaborate upon or emphasize some of the points that have been made.

The first question which naturally arises is what is the purpose of the legislation. It is stated in the first paragraph of the bill to be to authorize the Federal Government to cooperate with the proper State agency in the different States in promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy.

Many Members have asked how it is proposed to do it. I have not heard or seen any better or more concise answer to that question than that made by Dr. Baker before the committee.

I quote from her testimony as it appears in the hearings:

The Sheppard-Towner bill advocates, as I read it, the exact type of work that we have been carrying on in New York and which is responsible for this enormous reduction in the maternal and infant death rate. It consists of the employment of trained nurses, the establishment of baby health stations or child-welfare centers, and the employment of physicians for consultation work. The work is mainly educational; it is almost entirely preventative. The women come to us early in their period of pregnancy and are taught how to take care of themselves. We do not take care of actual sick cases at all; we teach personal hygiene with the largest adaptation possible of the proper environments and mitigate as far as we can the social and economic maladjustments that so often cause ill health. We can do a great deal to change the effect of bad environmental conditions.

I remember—

She continued—

when this work began in New York City 12 years ago the average number of baby deaths during July and August would range from 1,000 to 1,500 babies a week. For the last five years the average has been from 250 to 300 babies a week dying during those same months.

There has been a good deal quoted from the testimony of Dr. Baker in this discussion, and the justification for it is that New York City has been the pioneer in doing the work in that city that this bill contemplates to have done for the country as a whole, and Dr. Baker has charge of the work there. Dr. Baker's testimony was most interesting and convincing. I wish it might be read by every Member who has any doubt about the desirability of passing this bill.

There are few, if any, who deny that the work authorized by the bill ought to be done. Practically everyone admits that it should be, but they object to its being done by the Federal Government. They are opposed to it, as they say, "on principle." They think the work ought to be done by some State agency or private association. It has been clearly brought out here many times since this debate started that there is no new principle involved in the bill. Congress has been voting Federal aid to the States for many years for a multitude of purposes, such as the elimination of the cotton boll weevil, the foot-and-mouth disease in cattle, hog cholera, the building of roads, carrying on agricultural extension work, promoting vocational education, and in many other ways which will readily occur to the minds of the Members here. If we are going to abandon that principle and stop it, we ought to do it on some other bill than this. Why be so sensitive all at once about the principle involved in a bill which has to do with the welfare of mothers and babies when the same principle has been invoked so many times for these other purposes?

It is said that some members of the medical profession oppose this legislation. Just why a doctor as such should feel that he has to oppose it I have never been able to understand. It seems to me he ought to be among the very first to appreciate the need of it and to support it. For one I do not believe that any considerable number of the medical profession are opposed to it or will oppose it when they understand its provisions. I am satisfied that those doctors who have opposed it are not at all representative of their profession.

In that connection I refer again to the testimony of Dr. Baker before the committee. She stated that the entire medical profession of New York City approved the work being done there along exactly the same lines as this bill proposes, and that the doctors of that city were among the most enthusiastic supporters of it. She said:

I may also say that we have splendid cooperation on the part of the medical profession. I have heard it said that one of the reasons for opposition to this bill is that the doctors are opposed to it on the ground that it would interfere with their practice.

I hold no brief for the medical profession, but because I am a member of it I am extremely sorry to have anything of that sort said about any doctor. I do not believe it is so, because the doctors of New York have been loyally with us; they have been interested in the work, have been helpful, and are anxious to have it continued. Some few years ago, when there was a possibility of the work being given up, owing to a change of administration, the medical societies of the city, the Academy of Medicine, the five county medical societies, and a number of the small groups of medical societies had meetings, and I believe for the first time in their entire careers passed resolutions saying they wanted the work continued, that there should not be any idea of giving up the children's work in the city, because they considered it so valuable. The women themselves came forward and I had great difficulty in stopping two parades of about 5,000 women, one from the East Side and one from Brooklyn. They wanted to march to the city hall and protest against the giving up of the baby health stations and the visiting nurses. The work is never brought to them in any way that has any compulsion about it.

The next question which naturally arises is, Are the people generally, and especially those who receive direct benefit from the work, interested in it? Do they want it?

Listen to what Dr. Baker says on that point:

As far as all of our work for children is concerned, the maternal work, the work for babies, and work for the older children, it is not only welcomed but it is eagerly sought for by the people. We have an almost impossible situation because we can not take care of all of the mothers and babies that want care and need it. * * * The women usually come to us; we do not go to them, and if we do it is always understood that they want it. My own personal feelings are, of course, that any home is quite as sacred to the inhabitant of it as any other home, and no nurse and no doctor are allowed to go to any house, any tenement, or any apartment without the full willingness and invitation of the people who live there. But these people want our help; they are anxious for it; they are asking for it and want it in far greater measure than we are able to give it to them. So we have not had any opposition from the medical profession and we have not had any opposition from the public. I think—that New York people, after all, are not so different from other people, and as far as I know, wherever this work has been tried, the women have been very glad indeed to get it. I know of no woman who wants her baby to die and I never met any difficulty in doing something which would save her baby, and I want to say that during the years we have worked in New York City we have reduced our baby death rate from 144 baby deaths out of every 1,000 births to 85 deaths.

She continues—

Some have criticized the bill because the appropriation authorized is too small, that it is inadequate to accomplish any real good. Nobody claims that the appropriation of $1,240,000 per year is going to do for the country generally what is being done for New York City where $900,000 is appropriated every year for the work in that city alone; but it is claimed that with that appropriation the Federal Government will be able to stimulate the States and private organizations to do this work which practically everybody says ought to be done, but which is not being done in many rural and other communities throughout the United States.

I voted against some of the amendments to this bill in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but I do not think the bill as reported by the committee has been changed materially or in principle from what it was when it came before that committee. The amendments have made it possible for some people to support the bill who were originally against it, and perhaps have clarified some of its features. It pleases them and hurts nobody. Some of the amendments to the bill prohibit doing things that never were dreamed of being done by the proponents of it. They are as willing to have the amendments go on as anyone else. The two principal things, in my opinion, in the bill are the appropriation and placing the authority to administer the work in the Children's Bureau. The substitute recommended by the committee does not change these two features of the bill. They were in the bill as passed by the Senate and I think they will remain in the legislation when it is finally enacted into law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair pardon me for making a parliamentary inquiry? I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I have not been disposed to delay this proceeding. I am not a filibusterer, I have had abundant opportunity to voice my own views about this matter, but it is a matter of such importance that I do believe that the opposition in this House ought to have recognition for a part of this time. It is not right that free speech should be cut off, and I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman can ask for the regular order, but I shall use my parliamentary rights.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I demand the regular order.

Mr. LAYTON. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will not the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, a humorous friend of mine says that a man's mind is like a woman's hair. The less there is of it the harder it is to make up. [Laughter.] My mind is often hard to make up. Ergo—

When this bill was first proposed I was rather undecided as to what my attitude toward it would be. In its original form especially did I see some serious objections to it, and I was much disposed to vote against it. Some changes decentralizing, have come into it, however, and some others doubtless will come; and some change has come in my views as I have considered the bill further and gathered further information.

Henry Clay is credited with saying that if one would succeed in politics he should stand in with the preachers, the newspapers, and the women. From my brief experience I can not say that it is easy always to stand in with all three of these forces. Sometimes when a fellow is trying hard to hold all three views he may let one slip. None the less I am sure the great Kentuckian spoke wisely.

It is strange to me that some gentlemen seem to think that the activity of women in support of this bill gives a presumption against it. In my opinion, while it is not a final argument, it is a strong argument in its favor.

Oh, woman, in our hours of ease,
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please,
When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou.

It is this ministering-angel spirit that impels woman toward everything humanitarian. And the world ought to have learned in its recent tragic revolt against the materialistic philosophy that the humanitarian element must be taken into consideration. I say to you in all soberness, not as a sentimentalist, not as a masculine feminist, but as a man who has spent the major portion of 30 years in teaching girls and young women, in studying them, and in being taught by them, that this is a premise on which this Congress can afford to act. It is worth while in matters of love, of business, or of politics to have her with you.

In an old book which I used to read occasionally before I got into politics I found an interesting little story about an unjust judge "who feared not God, neither regarded man," but when a woman got in behind him he came across. With all his recklessness he was at least wise enough to regard the widow's right. If any of you politicians get the woman folks in your district deeply stirred against you, you will come to sympathize with him. Instead of quoting Sir Walter Scott you will be quoting a certain William Tecumseh Sherman. [Laughter.]

In small things it may be true that woman is moved by sentiment rather than by reason, but I say to you that in matters of deeply human interest she is impelled by peculiar intuition and sagacity. She often goes straight to a wise and righteous conclusion, more sure than a man could reach after days of investigation, reasoning, and philosophizing. Every married man knows that, if he is only candid enough to admit it. If any man in this presence denies it, I divine he is, perhaps, one of those four unfortunates in the Texas delegation or some other forlorn bachelor who has little happiness in this world and little prospect for the next. [Applause.]

Bishop Hoss used to tell a story like this: Down at the foot of the Tennessee mountains lived a Methodist preacher. In the course of time he got somewhat rattled on his doctrinal views and joined the Baptists. After preaching for the Baptists for a while he quit them and joined that denomination which the profane of the community called "Campbellite." A year later he had undergone another complete reversal, and was found in the ranks of the Universalists preaching the no-hell doctrine with great enthusiasm. But when a man starts going down there is no telling where he will stop. There came a hot political campaign, and he quit preaching and went to stump-speaking. Not only that, he forsook the party of his fathers and joined the Republicans. One day a group of men sat about the village store discussing this fallen evangel, and some of them in their bitter criticism seemed rather inclined to leave off the dis—. But a charitable farmer who had known and loved him in his blameless days came to his defense with the remark, "Now, fellows, don't be too hard on him. If you didn't believe there was any hell, you might be a Republican, too." [Laughter.]

Well, if I did not believe in a future reckoning, I do not know what I might do, but so long as I believe in a hereafter I shall at least keep my faith in woman.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] spoke the other day of a prospective casualty list on the Republican side that would look like war. Some of us remember the slaughter of Democrats in November a year ago when you Republicans slew Democrats as recklessly as Samson slew the Philistines and with the same instrument. [Laughter.] But all previous slaughters will look like children's tea parties when the politicians really incur the righteous wrath of American womanhood.

But to lay all joking aside and look at the matter seriously. The Federal Government has cooperated with the States in founding and maintaining agricultural and mechanical colleges, and the cooperation has been to advantage. It has cooperated with the boards of health in promoting sanitation and suppressing disease among men and animals, and no one will dispute the good that has been done. It has cooperated in matters of flood control and the reclamation of lands underwatered and overwatered, and millions of productive acres, with thousands of prosperous homes, have been added to the land. It has cooperated in the building and maintaining of highways; in the eradication of the cow tick, the boll weevil, the pink bollworm; and in dozens of other ways. There is no possible way to estimate the good that has been done—material, moral, and intellectual—by the county and home agent work, initiated, to a large extent, and guided by the Department of Agriculture. And in all of this there has been no overcentralization and no paternalism.

There is no blinking the fact, gentlemen, that such a step as this maternity bill contemplates must be taken carefully and deliberately in the full light of experience. But we have already demonstrated that laws can be so framed as to avoid the evil. The Federal Government must stimulate to activity; it must not itself undertake the activity. It must place on the workbench of the States and their communities an unfinished work, place it there in such a form as to inspire and stimulate the people themselves. It must show the way and then quietly relinquish the leadership. I say that such has been done, and I believe that this bill in its present form provides an acceptable machinery for doing such again.

It has been said that this bill is too general; that it provides nothing definite. It seems to me that therein lies its acceptability. I should oppose and I believe the people would oppose cash payments to mothers—commercializing motherhood, as it were, or any direct, official supervision of the mother and her child. That would be intolerable. The work proposed by this bill is educational, and therefore the terms of the bill must be somewhat general and elastic. The Constitution of the United States succeeded because it was elastic. All the enduring forces of civilization, of religion, business, and social relationships have been elastic. Were this bill rigid, mathematical, scientific, I think I should oppose it. But as it is I very greatly believe that it ought to pass and most heartily give it my support. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I hope not to occupy the time, and I shall be just as brief as it is possible. There are a few things to which I desire to call the attention of the House which perhaps have not been fully discussed already. The progress of this bill legislatively, briefly is as follows: The bill was introduced in the last Congress but received committee action so late in the session that it was impossible to give consideration to it in the House or in the Senate. As it was reported favorably in that Congress it was reintroduced in the present House in the form in which it was amended in the last Congress. It was introduced in the Senate as well, and, after consideration in the Senate, passed that body by an overwhelming majority, only seven votes being recorded against it. It then came before the House committee. Extensive hearings were had and it was finally reported as it is now amended. So far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to accept the bill as it has been amended by the committee. There are some changes that I would not myself have approved, but they are not vital changes, and the objects of the bill can be carried out, I am quite sure, and great good accomplished under the present bill. For instance, the committee inserted a limitation of five years, which is somewhat unusual. I think perhaps that the membership of the committee under the circumstances were justified in placing that limitation in the bill, and so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to accept the limitation, because if this legislation does not justify itself within five years it does not deserve to remain on the statute books, and if it does certainly there will be no question in the mind of the Members of Congress as to what their duty will then be. Therefore I cheerfully accept the amendment of the committee.

Gentlemen, the origin of this legislation is found in the organic act creating the Children's Bureau. Members of the committee will remember that we had for a great many years preceding the organization of the Children's Bureau the Public Health Department of the Government, but in 1912 Congress in its wisdom took this action. It passed a law creating the Children's Bureau and said this regarding its duties:

Said bureau shall investigate and report to said department (Labor) upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and shall especially investigate the question of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage—

And so forth.

In specific language it was made the duty of the Children's Bureau to investigate these questions, to report upon them, to advise the Congress and the people of the country regarding them, to initiate legislation if it thought best to better the conditions that they found existed; and the Children's Bureau did make this investigation. They made careful investigations not only regarding what had been done in this country but what had been done in other countries with regard to child welfare and the mortality of infants and of mothers from maternal causes.

With this information before them they came before Congress with a proposition to establish a law such as you have under consideration to-day, to make effective the very duties that were imposed by Congress upon the Children's Bureau. What were the conditions that they found existing in the United States of America? I ought not to repeat what has been so well said, and my only excuse for doing so is for the sake of emphasis. These statements of conditions have been disputed, but never successfully. The fact is that we are seventeenth among the nations of the world with regard to maternal mortality and that we are very far down in the rank among the nations with regard to infant mortality. This is true, notwithstanding the fact that we ought to be first among the nations of the world with regard to these matters.

It is true that there are more homes that are sanitary and cleanly in the United States than anywhere else. It is true that we are the strongest and the most healthy people in the world, or we ought to be; but we are careless and indifferent regarding these things. We have not taken pains with regard to them. We have not had the stimulation of Government regarding them. A few years ago like conditions existed in England, and what did she do? At first they appropriated $11,000 for the purpose of ameliorating conditions with regard to the maternal and infancy death rate in that country. In a few years that appropriation was increased to £200,000. The last appropriation of this current year by Great Britain for this purpose was over two and one-half million dollars, and Great Britain has but half the population which we have and not one-tenth of the resources which we have. And still we stand with a maternal death rate of about eight out of every thousand, while Great Britain has reduced her death rate within the last few years to four. She stands among the first and the best nations of the world. That is what activity under governmental inspiration and governmental help can accomplish.

We did not content ourselves with finding out what had been done in other countries, but an investigation was made with regard to what had been done in this country. The work in New York City has been referred to, and it is a most commendable accomplishment. There in that great city of over 6,000,000 people they undertook to reduce the death rate, which was 144 babies out of every thousand that died within the first year. What have they done? Within the years that have transpired under the administration of the new law and the constantly increasing support of New York City, financially and in every other way, they have reduced the mortality to 85 officially in 1919, with a large influenza mortality increasing the rate, and the head of that bureau says that this year it will show a reduction to 65. From 144 deaths per thousand they have gone down to 65.

Every single medical authority in New York City admits that this was accomplished by the very work contemplated in this act. [Applause.] Dr. Josephine Baker, coming before the committees of Congress as she has on two or three different occasions, says that she is very much interested in this work and that she wants to see it carried over the United States. She has said in the hearings before the committee that this legislation has the same object in view they have in New York and will accomplish the same results if it is carried anywhere in the United States of America that have been accomplished in New York City.

Then we had the testimony of Dr. Ellen C. Potter, who is in charge of the division of child hygiene in the health department of Pennsylvania. She came before the committee and testified as to the work they were doing in Pennsylvania. She said the work accomplished, which was only instituted two or three years ago, had been marvelous. She said it had reduced the death rate of the mothers more than one-half and the death rate of the babies at least as much so far as the work had been put in operation. Dr. Van Ingen and others confirmed this testimony.

Gentlemen, there is no question regarding conditions that exist and there is no question regarding the remedy. These facts can not be controverted. Now, what are we going to do about it. Are we not going to do our duty; are we going to neglect to give the stimulation that will bring about nationwide work of this character in the United States? Pennsylvania has spent a large sum of money in its cooperation, in carrying on this work with its local centers, and their legislature has already made the necessary appropriation to carry out the purpose of this bill when the General Government does its part. [Applause.]

I understand there are other legislatures that have passed authorizations which will allow their governor to accept the provisions of this act. Gentlemen, there is no question about the desirability of this legislation. It has been said on this floor that the medical profession is opposed to this legislation. I deny the truth of this charge. The testimony taken before the committee does not bear out the assertion. Dr. Josephine Baker states that when it was proposed to do away with that work in New York the five medical associations in that city took occasion to earnestly protest against its abandonment and declared it to be a good work and in every way approved it. You can not find a reputable physician in the city of New York who does not support this work. The director of the division of child hygiene of the State of Pennsylvania came before us and stated that the medical profession there are supporting it. She says physicians who can command much more for their service go out for $1.50 a day to further the success of this great work. That shows whether the profession, when they understand it, are or are not in favor of it. The fact is that these associations that have passed resolutions—and there are two or three of them—say in their resolutions that they believe the work ought to be placed under the control of the Public Health Service of the United States instead of the Federal bureau. But they take pains to say that they approve of the work and believe in its necessity, and that the General Government should take part in it. [Applause.] The Public Health Service of the Nation has done magnificent work in this country, and, so far as I am concerned, I shall support it in its work in the future as I have in the past. I do not blame the Public Health Service of this country, the National Public Health Service, for wanting to do this work. Its heads came before the committee and said they thought they could do it better than anybody else.

I do not blame them for that. But they admitted that the character of this work, while they thought it ought to be under their direction, was not strictly medical; indeed, was in small part medical in its nature. They admitted that the work of the Children's Bureau has been satisfactory in so far as it has gone. They admitted finally on the last day of the hearing that, rather than raise any question regarding whether or not this work should be carried on, they would withdraw, and they did withdraw in a specific, personal letter sent by the Secretary of the Treasury, under which the Public Health Service was working, to the Secretary of Labor, under which the Children's Bureau operates, all objections to the passage of this legislation. [Applause.] They also said that they would cooperate with the Children's Bureau in carrying out the terms of the legislation.

Now, gentlemen of the medical profession, what more could be wanted? I admit that the Public Health Service has the right to desire it. It is a good and wonderful thing, and they see its possibilities, but the Congress of the United States, when the Public Health Service was already in existence, did not commit this work to them. The Congress of the United States, and now the law of the United States, has expressly said that the Children's Bureau should carry on this work. And thus what we are doing is in harmony with existing law, and in harmony with the almost universal sentiment of the women of the United States who ask that the Children's Bureau shall be continued and supported. And more than that, coming as they do with their mother hearts to this Congress, knowing from personal experience what this awful loss of human life means, knowing as they do that if the proper work to prevent it is done, such as is contemplated under this law, more than half of all these babies that die in one year can be saved, is it strange that the mothers of the United States should desire this legislation? Is it remarkable that almost every women's association in the United States is asking at your hands that you should pass it?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I notice that Dr. Kelley estimated from her experience in New York that 15,000 mothers and a hundred thousand babies could be saved each year under this bill. Has the gentleman found any verification of that startling estimate?

Mr. TOWNER. The verification is found in what I have already told you. We know what has been done.

Mr. COCKRAN. I was about to ask the same question. What justification is there for the statement that this infant mortality can be reduced one-half by the passage of this legislation?

Mr. TOWNER. By the fact that within your own city, I will say to the gentleman from New York, you have reduced the total death rate from 144 to 65 this year. That is one thing. And wherever this work has been done—there never has been any place where this work has been done in individual localities but what the same result has been accomplished.

Mr. COCKRAN. What other localities besides New York?

Mr. TOWNER. I wish I could give them.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Los Angeles and St. Louis.

Mr. TOWNER. They exist, and if I had time I could give them to you.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman answer one question?

Mr. TOWNER. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. LAYTON. Is it not a fact that the figures upon which you base this reduction of mortality began with the year in which the "flu" prevailed in New York City?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no, sir. This began with the institution of this legislation and the creation of this department. I think it was—

Mr. LONDON. It was 12 years ago.

Mr. LAYTON. Your comparisons were with 1918?

Mr. TOWNER. That was the influenza year. It was based on 1919, the year following.

Mr. LAYTON. Are your figures based on the United States census?

Mr. TOWNER. They are.

Mr. LAYTON. No; they are not.

Mr. TOWNER. O yes they are, Doctor.

Mr. LAYTON. I will show you that they are not.

Miss ROBERTSON. Does the gentleman think the amount of money allowed for the sparsely settled districts of our country will be sufficient to accomplish what $900,000 does in the city of New York? Is there any adequacy whatever in this appropriation?

Mr. TOWNER. I thank the Representative from Oklahoma most sincerely for calling my attention to that matter. The evidence is, and it is found within the hearings on this bill, from those who have gone into the question carefully, that with the initial appropriation by the General Government, as soon as the work is instituted and State appropriations are added to it, and local appropriations are added to that, it may be twenty times as much finally as the General Government gives. I will give you some facts here from the testimony of persons who appeared in behalf of your ideas on this bill. This was the statement that was made by the Public Health Service. That service was given $50,000 for rural sanitation work.

They expended it in almost exactly the manner that is contemplated in this bill. They wanted to do it so as to show that they could do it, and they did it magnificently well. They put into it 27 counties in the States. Here is the record that they make in their official report regarding the expenditure of that money: Forty-four thousand dollars was expended by the National Government. To that was added by the States $67,000. I omit the smaller figures.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What States?

Mr. TOWNER. Alabama, Mississippi, and North Carolina, and others. They selected one or two counties, a couple of counties, in each State. Mind you, the original appropriation was $44,000 by the General Government. To that was added by the States $67,000. To that was added by the counties $126,000. To that was added by the municipalities $47,000, until the total was $314,000, when the initial appropriation officially was only $44,000. [Applause.]

That is the way the work is taken care of. That is why even a small appropriation from the National Government will accomplish wonders, because it stimulates the States into activity. The appropriation of the State stimulates the localities into activity, private contributions are added, and soon the local associations are enabled to organize and carry on the work.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. Is it not a fact that the State of Pennsylvania from the inception of this work in the State has increased its appropriation in almost every succeeding legislature?

Mr. TOWNER. That is true.

Mr. ROSE. Showing that the work is approved and meeting with success?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes. It shows that the States can take care of this work after it is instituted. I think if we wanted to be mean about it, at the end of five years we could discontinue this appropriation and the work could be carried on by the States, because they would not withdraw their support of it, because of its value.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman will remember that in the discussion of the Smith-Hughes Act facts were given showing that in the land-grant colleges, where the Government money to be given was to be proportionate to the amount expended by the States, the States are appropriating nineteen times as much as the National Government.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes. The estimate is that it will be $20 to every dollar appropriated by the Federal Government.

Mr. FESS. That is by the local interests?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Gentlemen, do you suppose the States would make large appropriations from their treasuries if they found that this work was valueless? Do you suppose the municipalities would carry on this work if it were not valuable? What is being done in scattered counties throughout the United States of America? The people are carrying on this work by private subscriptions and supporting a Red Cross nurse in attempting to carry on this character of work. The serious difficulty is that after the stimulus and excitement and patriotism of the war, that put a Red Cross nurse in every county in Iowa and in many of the other States, interest dies, because it must be supported by private subscription. It is certain that it will not be extended and can not be supported unless the work is organized as we desire it under the terms of this bill.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will not the cooperation of the Federal Government in this work bring to every State the best method pursued in any of the States?

Mr. TOWNER. I have not any doubt about it.

Let me say this, gentlemen: There is not a big man in the medical profession in the United States who has studied this question, there is not a big man that knows what it is, who would put himself on record as opposed to this character of work. [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON rose.

Mr. TOWNER. I do not mean any personal application, I assure the gentleman.

Mr. LAYTON. I want to say to the gentleman—I want to say this, that you are not acquainted with the big men in the medical profession. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNER. No; I am not; but I seem to know more about them than the gentleman from Delaware does. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAYTON. No; I speak for my profession unanimously in my State; yet you are standing here making unqualified statements.

Mr. TOWNER. I do not know what your State has done, but I do know what the American Medical Association has done, and I do know what the American Gynecological Association has done. I do know what the big medical men of New York City and this country have done, and I hope the gentleman some day will come in here and say he is sorry he once had a mistaken idea about the proposition. In that day I hope the gentleman will say, "I made some opposition to it in the days gone by, but now my enlarged knowledge of the subject matter and my duty to my constituents demand that I shall support this legislation." [Laughter.]

Mr. LAYTON. I will do it just as soon as I get in line politically with my friend from New York [Mr. LONDON]. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, Doctor, you do not have to do that.

Mr. LAYTON. Yes; I do.

Mr. TOWNER. You think you do. There is a great deal of difference between the two propositions.

All the opposition practically that there has been to this bill has been because somebody said that because somebody else that supported the bill was in favor of free love, or birth control, or some other bad thing, therefore everybody who supported this bill, the thousands and millions of good, home-loving, church-going women in the United States were desirous of securing such iniquitous legislation. What a ridiculous proposition that is!

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman from Delaware begin beating his wife because I treat my wife well? [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNER. I think that is a sufficient answer to the question.

But, gentlemen, you and I are not going to take the opinion of any man that is not based—the opinion of any man that we know is not based—upon facts and experience. That is what tells in these cases. Where has this work been instituted and then abandoned? Tell me of a single instance where they have initiated this work and then refused to carry it on, where they have made appropriations for this work and have not increased them year by year. Does that indicate that this legislation is of no value? I have no feeling of sympathy, and only of contempt, for those men who in view of these facts cast opprobrium upon legislation of this character and with coarse jokes seek to discredit it. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to refresh your memory with some facts. When there was some talk here a while ago about discontinuing the appropriations for the work in New York, petitions came from every woman's society in the city and women formed in processions and marched to the city headquarters in protest of that action.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; and the supporters of the hygiene work in the city had to dissuade them from going to the mayor and demanding that some action should be taken.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. In the previous legislation for Federal aid there was a provision to accept contributions from outside agencies, if it were desired.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. That was omitted in this.

Mr. TOWNER. I rather think it ought to be omitted, and I can tell the gentleman why. It is not expected that the expenditure of money shall be carried on by the Children's Bureau. It is to be turned over to the States, and they will expend it. I think, perhaps, it would be improper for the Children's Bureau to accept contributions. The States may accept such contributions, and will doubtless do so. In fact, the work will be largely dependent on such contributions being made. There is no question at all that these associations of women and church associations approve this legislation. I got a batch of telegrams yesterday from every division of the Young Women's Christian Association in the United States of America asking the Congress to pass this legislation. All the women's organizations favor it, with one notable exception, the still existing but absolutely useless committee or organization for the purpose of opposing woman suffrage. [Laughter.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was out of the Chamber for a few moments. Has the gentleman discussed the present attitude of the United States Public Health Service with respect to this bill?

Mr. TOWNER. Only that I have called attention to their letter. The letter of the Public Health Service was to the effect that they withdrew opposition to this bill; that they did not ask that it be transferred to them; that they would support the Children's Bureau and cooperate with them in the administration of the law. I do not think anything more could be asked. Other means might be used, but we have already decided by congressional action that we would turn this work over to the Children's Bureau.

Gentlemen, this is not a work that is like the ordinary work of a legislator. It is not the casting up of accounts. It is not the consideration of dollars and cents only. It is the consideration of human life. Every man of you, if you knew that a single baby's life were in danger out here, would risk your own life to save it. You would drag from under the wheels of an oncoming car a child and rescue it even at the risk of your own life. Yet you have the opportunity here by legislation to save the lives not only of one but of thousands of children. There is no question about that. This is not a mere idle statement. It comes as near being a demonstration as anything that we could possibly do here in the Congress of the United States.

If this act is passed, and I believe it will be by this Congress at this present session, most, if not all, the good women of the United States will rejoice. They will feel that a great step has been taken for the welfare of the mothers and children of America. I am glad to say that the support given to this bill by such men on the minority side as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who is the ranking member, has been wonderful in its efficiency toward securing the accomplishment of this result. [Applause.] I remember that not one single Democrat on the committee voted against the unanimous favorable reporting of this bill. And those men on the Republican side who have so loyally assisted, sometimes giving up their own ideas, not what they considered vital but what they would have preferred, giving them up in order to strengthen the bill and to assist in its success, I desire to thank them. I desire to thank the chairman of this committee, who gave to those who supported the bill and to those who opposed it, although he had pronounced sentiments himself upon it, as fair a hearing as was ever given by any committee in the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

There is only one thing lacking, gentlemen, and that is the favorable report of this Committee of the Whole and the favorable action of the House, in which I am sure the Senate will acquiesce, and then we may say we have done something at least to make this country a little better and safer place in which to live.

Gentlemen, do you remember that poem of Browning's in which he says that when he sailed out from the Mediterranean Sea to the Atlantic and for the first time in his life saw Gibraltar and Trafalgar he cried out—

Here and here has England helped me,
How can I help England?

Gentlemen, may we not with unanimity to-day, thinking of all the glorious accomplishments of the past, in our own fair land, say, "Here and here has America helped me! Thus will I help America!" [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair announce the remaining time?

The CHAIRMAN. There are 32 minutes remaining.

Mr. BARKLEY. How much remains for this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has 19 minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I quote from the Democratic platform adopted at San Francisco:

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM—WELFARE OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

We urge cooperation with the States for the protection of child life through infancy and motherly care, in the prohibition of child labor, and by adequate appropriations for the Children's Bureau and the Women's Bureau in the Department of Labor.

All political parties, if within their power, should perform their platform pledges and thereby keep faith with the people. This has been the time-honored doctrine of the Democratic Party.

The pending bill complies with the declaration of the above plank of the Democratic Party. Personally in my campaign for reelection I declared that I would carry into effect, so far as possible, every demand of the Democratic Party platform. Therefore I am bound by my word and by party declaration to give my support to this maternity bill.

Mr. Chairman, there are objections to all Federal appropriations which contemplate a like appropriation by the States and cooperation between Federal and State Governments in expenditures of the appropriations to obtain the desired result. This method is not businesslike, uneconomical, and, in many instances, coercive of the rights of the sovereign States of this Union, bringing about a blending of State and Federal rights which is contrary to the genius of our dual and complex form of government.

These cooperative appropriations involve a double overhead expense, in that they require Federal employees to direct and follow the expenditure of the Federal Government and State employees to direct and follow the expenditure of State appropriations, when the same could be accomplished more economically, more efficiently, and with more dispatch by either the State or the Federal Government. But as all of these activities under our constitutions come within the reserved rights and powers of the respective States, it would be more appropriate for each State to undertake the performance of this character of duty. But this cooperation seems to have become a settled policy of the Federal Government and has been practiced for many years on other subjects.

The Federal Government appropriated millions to cooperate with the States in the destruction of insects that attack corn, wheat, fruit, cotton, tobacco, and other products of the soil. We have appropriated millions to cooperate with the States in stamping out the foot-and-mouth diseases of cattle, hog cholera, and so forth, and many other subjects, which it is unnecessary to mention.

The Federal Government has appropriated millions to cooperate with the States in the reclamation of semiarid and swamp lands, but as I view it it is more important to our Nation to save the lives of the babies within it than it is to destroy the tobacco worm. It is more important to our Nation to save the lives of the mothers of our country than it is to stamp out the foot-and-mouth disease among cattle or kill the ticks thereon. Therefore, just so long as the National Government cooperates and makes appropriations to aid States on any other subjects, then just so long will I enthusiastically and cheerfully support the Federal appropriations for the proper care and education of the motherhood and babyhood of our land.

No aspect of civilization presents a more urgent demand for consideration. Nothing can appeal with more force or is more cherished by true American sentiment than is our care for the motherhood and childhood of the Republic. No legislation can be more timely or more in order than an act for practical relief of the motherhood of our country, which has been for months before this House for consideration and should have had our immediate and emphatic indorsement by unanimous vote, and our action is due now as soon as possible, that, with the utmost dispatch, we may wipe from our minds the miserable odium that haunts us and stains our character and dulls our sense of national honor.

The theme of mother and child is so sanctified and full of tenderness that it is difficult to stifle emotion and to treat it with dispassionate reserve.

The ages are replete with incident and event illustrative of human infirmity in its depraved as well as in its most commendable qualities. As far back as tradition goes or history can reach the mother and her child stand as the magnetic symbols of love and beauty. No epic is more striking or sweeter than the story of the perilous birth and rescue of the mighty leader and lawgiver of Israel, as told in the Book of Exodus in the Old Testament Scriptures.

I think the mother of Moses and Pharaoh's daughter must have been the first association to realize the practical value of our modern conception of care and mercy as proposed by this humane legislation. That whole narrative is interpreted to reveal and forecast the story of the cross, the most stupendous circumstances of time. It centers about the manger and the miracle of the Babe of Bethlehem, and it designates the immortal conceptions of Da Vinci and Raphael and Michelangelo and Rubens and Titian. Our own modern school of art would "pale their ineffectual fires" but for the matchless symbolic personalities of Holy Writ. But for Sarah and Hagar in the wilderness and Jethro's daughter and the Marys and Marthas and Magdalenes and the women at the tomb and the long line of devotees to "the true, the beautiful, and the good," no Madonna would grace our art galleries, no "Last Supper," no "Ring of the Angelus," or other great production of the artists would adorn our home. And if our domestic lives were untouched by such inspiration it would be impossible to compute the low grade of morals and manners to which we would have sunk from the sheer lack of cultivation and refinement.

And this humane measure, which awaits our legislative approval, would have no place on the calendar but for the evolution of the ideals that appeal throughout the world of Christian civilization and righteousness.

I can not conceive of the sordid failure of any patriotic American, of any true man, to indorse and to champion this belated opportunity to relieve and to care for the women and children of America. It is no sudden alarm sounded to rouse us to defend against a surprise or to meet an unexpected danger. No stricken Titanic calls for the heroic sacrifice of self in that noble example that pleaded for the safety of "the women and children first" and sink with those who sink in the swirling waters.

I can not see the need of argument to convince us of so plain and momentous a duty. It is so self-evident and the call is so imperative that we may confidently assume the favorable and cordial cooperation of this representative body.

And the historic instances that reflect so painfully on the human race and so shocks the very soul of humanity are recounted that we may clearly see the scope and wickedness of our sensibility. And the memorial works which have illuminated genius and beautified our lives are cited that we may be fired with a noble determination to honor ourselves in doing justice to that class of our loved ones whose relationship admits of no opposition. I am no dreamer and am not moved by the visionary. We are not indifferent, but the idealism that weaves "the insubstantial fabric of a dream" has too long lulled us into the apathy of inaction and criminal neglect.

The cross as the significant and universal emblem of our Christian civilization. The infamous edict by which the King of Egypt sought to avoid the increasing influence and power of the Jewish people through the destruction of their child life is plainly related to the awful "slaughter of the innocents," the unholy scheme which was to defeat the reign of Christianity. The King of Egypt and Herod the King of Judea are forever odious as the chief actors in that drama of atrocious cruelty, so vindictively staged to destroy the lives of children, and to support and advance the reckless partisan purposes of that dark day. Truly, "without controversy great is the mystery of godliness." And well it is that our creed must rest on mystery, for if it were a transparent scheme, it would not require a moment's consideration to fire the ambitious spirit of man to attempt its management and control its policies. It has been observed that Napoleon Bonaparte would have usurped omnipotence itself if he could have comprehended "the divinity that shapes our ends."

God knows we are not insensible to the virtues that belong to strong and sensible men, but a fearless and frank self-examination will show us that we have stultified ourselves most stupidly, and avoided our plain duty at the expense of the motherhood and childhood of our native land. Our own self-knowledge convicts us of a well-nigh unpardonable sin. Our consciences accuse us. But under the stimulus of such spurs I am confident that we will respond to the call that will never down until we have atoned for our guilty mistreatment of the bone of our bone and the flesh of our flesh.

The question is a very practical and comprehensive one. The fact that it is so appealing and full of the tragic pathos that will ever gather at the bedside of the mother and her newly born babe, clothes it with exacting interest. The most critical demand that can call upon humanity is at our door. There can be nothing more real, nothing more material, nothing more practical. No phase of life is more apparent—none so imperative; and the conditions are common enough and powerfully calculated to drive us to distraction as we confirm their significance, and realize the harrowing bitterness of our supine failure. We have inexcusably permitted the dearest and most dependent classes of our people to writhe in unimaginable misery, with no adequate effort to relieve the prevailing distress. We have, comparatively, no system by which we can meet this constantly recurring crisis in the lives of women and children.

No adequate plan of cooperation ameliorates the suffering or resists the tremendous tide of death which annually decimates the helpless and sweeps to untimely graves, by the thousands, the queens of our household and their precious offspring.

At the outset of investigation we run across the amazing announcement that 23,000 American mothers are annually sacrificed upon the funeral pyre of our burning neglect and that by a large per cent the remorseless destruction could have been reduced.

Again, as part and parcel of the same deadly "dance of death," more than 250,000 babies under the age of 1 year are flung annually to the remorseless maw of our devouring sloth. I know it is not meanness. I do not dare to believe it to be indifference. It must be attributed to our human infirmity. It was Lord Byron whose genius for expression weaves poetic beauty into an immortal refrain and speaks a trenchant truth in the lines—

Oh Love, what is it in this world of ours
That makes it fatal to be loved? Ah, why
With cypress branches do we wreath our bowers
And make our best interpreter a sigh?
As those who dote on odors pluck the flowers,
And place them on their breasts but place to die,
So the frail beings we would fondly cherish,
Are placed within our bosoms but to perish.

The appalling death rate of maternity and infancy, verified by the United States Census, must be estimated by periods to enable the mind to grasp the overwhelming facts. If we compute for 50 years of our national prosperity the great aggregate of American mothers and their infants who have gone down into the valley because of prenatal ignorance and insufficient care and destitution during childbirth, we are horrified at the enormous destruction.

The 23,000 mothers alone who died last year from the fatalities of childbirth swell to a total of 1,150,000 for the last half century of our national life. The 250,000 infants, which is our annual contribution to the remorseless harvest, reaches the astounding figures of 12,500,000 babies who are sacrificed every 50 years. Add the number of mothers and infants who perished during the last half century, and we find the incredible aggregate of 13,650,000 premature deaths, thousands of them from sheer neglect; and that was during the most prosperous 50 years of the Republic.

And by the indisputable testimony of our most eminent specialists this shocking array of suffering and death and incalculable loss could have been largely avoided and materially reduced. That is the urgent and unavoidable problem to be solved and which appeals to this legislative body with the most commanding force.

The mass of testimony and the authentic character of the matter is recited in the hearings before the Committee on Public Health and Quarantine of the United States Senate, and also before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, Sixty-sixth Congress,

They are more than ample in every way to substantiate the claims of this act.

Repeatedly, and from every angle, the distressful details of suffering and fatality, with incontestable data, are herein minutely reported. These congressional hearings are open to all who will read them, and there can be no excuse for ignorance. The entire disgraceful showing is a public proclamation and accessible to everyone.

Before these committees our most eminent authorities have testified, as well as our most expert specialists, whom we easily recognize. Before the Senate committee were the following:

Dr. Anna E. Rude, director of hygiene, Children's Bureau, Labor Department, Washington, D. C.
Miss Julia Lathrop, chief division of hygiene, Children's Bureau, Labor Department, Washington, D. C.
Sir Arthur Newsholme, school of hygiene, Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Md.
Dr. J. Whitridge Williams, chief obstetrician.
Miss Annie Martin, ex-chairman, National Woman's Party, Reno, Nev.
Mrs. Josephus Daniels, Democratic national committeeman, Washington, D. C.
Mrs. Henry W. Keyes, representative for New England maternity and infancy, Washington, D. C.
Mrs. Ellen Yost, legislative representative, National Women's Christian Temperance Union, Washington, D. C.
Mr. W. F. Bigelow, editor Good Housekeeping, New York City, N. Y.
Miss Alta Elizabeth Dines, supervisor of maternity work, New York City, N. Y.
Dr. Joseph Baker, director division of child hygiene, New York City, N. Y.
Mrs. Maude Wood Park, president Women's League of Voters, Washington, D. C.
Miss Mary Stewart, national Republican executive committee, Washington, D. C.
Mrs. Whitman Cross, chairman advisory committee, Children's Bureau, Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.
Mrs. Thomas Kelly, general secretary National Consumers' League, New York City, N. Y.
Dr. Richard A. Bolt, general director American Hygiene Association, Alameda County, Calif.
Mrs. St. Clair, representative D. A. R., Washington, D. C., and others.

And to the following testified before the House "Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce":

Dr. Edgar L. Hewitt, member State child welfare board, Santa Fe, N. Mex.
Mrs. Wilton P. Higgins, president National Mothers and Parents-Teachers' Association, Worcester, Mass.
Miss Elizabeth Fox, public nurse and Red Cross worker, not a Red Cross representative.
Rev. Kaiko Akano, pastor Kawaiahae church, president of the Christian Endeavor Association, Hawaii.
Miss Jeanette Rankin, ex-Member of Congress, Montana.
Rev. John O'Grady, secretary National Conference Catholic Charities.
Dr. Hugh S. Cumming, Surgeon General United States Public Health Service.
Dr. Taliaferro Clark, in charge of child-welfare field work, United States Public Health Service.
Dr. L. L. Lumsden, in charge of cooperative health, through rural sanitation office, United States Health Service.
Mrs. Rufus M. Gibbs, president of the Maryland Antisuffrage Association and representation.
Dr. J. W. Sheveschewsky, assistant surgeon general, Division Scientific Research, United States Public Health.

Each and all of these officials and workers testify in favor of the act, and their knowledge and experience justifies the position they take.

Dr. Anna B. Rude, director Division of Hygiene, Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, D. C., says:

Other countries show markedly lower death rates of babies and mothers in childbirths. It is safer to be a mother in 14 important foreign countries than in our own country. About one-half of all infant deaths occur within six weeks of birth, due chiefly to the condition of the mother and the lack of proper care during pregnancy and confinement. Such deaths are not decreasing because mothers do not yet have the skilled care and advice they need. Such care must be made available through prenatal clinics, maternity hospitals, maternity care in the home, children's health centers, and a system of public-health nursing adequate to reach every mother and child. This neglect leads not only to thousands of preventable deaths but to lowered vitality and permanent ill health for thousands of women and infants who survive.

Miss Julia Lathrop, chief of the Children's Bureau, Department of Labor, Washington, D. C., states, quoting from the hearings of the Senate committee:

The bureau find that many other civilized countries exhibit more favorable records of maternal and infant deaths than does the United States as a whole. Rural isolation, civic neglect, low incomes, and ignorance are the chief causes and accompaniments of high infant mortality in the United States.

The statement of the well-known Jane Addams coincides with that of Miss Lathrop, and she adds:

I do not believe that the United States Congress will contend that we can not afford to give to the American mothers and children at least as good care as England is now giving to English mothers and children.

Dr. John Whitridge Williams, chief obstetrician, Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Md., is illuminating as he discourses on the subject of which he is an acknowledged authority. He declares that—

Forty-five per cent of all women dying in childbirth in this country succumb to infection, and 25 per cent die from toxemia or eclampsia.

He testifies that—

We are seventh in the list of countries of the world so far as mortality in childbearing is concerned. In other words, six other countries show much better results than ours.

The unimpeachable evidence of these experts and workers can be amplified a hundredfold and are strengthened by data impossible to contradict.

To this expert testimony it is important to note that the influential editor of Good Housekeeping, W. F. Bigelow, of New York City, has published the personal and official indorsement of practically the entire list of the governors of the United States. Their favorable responses make it a representative demand by the people.

The 34 State and national organizations named by Dr. Rude, together with many individual advocates, which swell the universal cry, endow this belated movement and this atoning measure with the sanctity of an oath.

Of course, no principle of our consecrated doctrine of local self-government should suffer. That it does not do so we are amply assured by the text of the act itself, which so guardedly speaks and specifies against any usurpation of the rights of the States. The words of its title are exacting when it provides expressly for a "method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States." Any cooperation of the Federal and State Governments is obviously a mutual understanding and can not be violative of the constitutional prerogative of any constitutional principle.

The overwhelming demand and the self-evident necessity for the most adequate and efficient service leave no righteous ground for opposition to this most benevolent measure. It is bound to become the law, and it is certain to be cherished everywhere and for all times as most humane and Christian.

And the training of a child for responsible life, to be effective, must begin long before its birth. The fatherhood and motherhood of noble offspring should antedate the hallowed precincts of the altar. All the facts of character and blood should be known and should be invested with the righteousness of a birth guaranteed when the bonds are solemnized and sanctified by the pledged pledges of honor, that the deathless fidelity of devoted love shall sanctify a holy union.

I am no ethnologist, but the common experiences impress us with the important facts of our reproductive life. Every human life is justly due the right of a creditable parentage. Following the union which multiplies and replenishes the earth by divine sanction and command, the prenuptial and prenatal existence is by every consideration entitled to the most attentive and fostering care. The mother is imperatively a charge for studied and exacting regard, and, more than any object of human concern, should have unremitting affection and the most unselfish service of sacrifice and skill.

Throughout the whole period of peuri-culture, from conception and including the entire fetal life, until the infant child is clasped in the arms of its pain-stricken mother, it is menaced by peril; and in the twinkling of an eye the delicate embryo may follow the fate of millions who have never reached the light of day nor made the transit but to perish.

And the mother herself, tossed and racked upon her bed of incessant danger, by the merest accident or neglect, may hearken to the relief guard that waits by every such couch to convoy the emancipated spirit to its haven of eternal rest.

It is ours to watch these crucial interests and to conserve and mold as we may the plastic material of manhood and human destiny.

But the fiscal side of the subject is important and commanding. The cash required according to the terms of the act is to be a sum which by regular increases will finally reach an annual appropriation of $4,000,000. The sum of $10,000 for each of the 48 States, which aggregates a total of $480,000, is the initial contribution of the Federal Government. If acceptable, it cooperates with the State authority for the benefit of the maternity and infancy emergencies of that State and to relieve its distressful conditions.

The United States authority appropriates the amount. The State, at its own option, accepts and applies and controls whatever sum is committed to it for the specific purposes of maternity and infancy relief within its own territory. It is conceived in the spirit and sense of bestowing a great benefaction, and under the best studied system of checks and balances devised for a circumspect and fair administration of a sacred trust, it is not likely to fail.

The necessity for such relief as this measure will provide is not local nor sectional. It is nation-wide and is an answer to an appeal from the whole people. No limitation in any narrow or sordid respect has been entertained or suggested. The entire movement has been broad and catholic in spirit, and has been dominated by the sentiments of benevolence and generosity; and mercy and love fire the soul of its sympathies regardless of selfish or contemptible thought.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] suggested that he would like a little time, and if he now desires, I will yield him 10 minutes.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I acknowledge gratefully the courtesy of the gentleman from Kentucky. I did not desire any time for myself, but I do think that it would not be fair if the position of the opponents of this measure were not defined before the conclusion of the day's debate. Everybody who has been granted time, with two exceptions, has spoken in favor of the bill. And every speech has betrayed radical misapprehension of the grounds on which many of us must oppose its enactment. Rather than let the debate close without some attempt to explain the attitude of its opponents I will, although entirely unprepared, endeavor to state it as my contribution to the discussion.

With the desire professed by all proponents of this bill I am in full accord. If this measure would do what these gentlemen claim for it, or half of it, or one-tenth of it, or any of it, I would be among its most enthusiastic advocates. My objection to it is that instead of being the most effective method of checking infant mortality it is likely to prove the least effective method. I do not think anybody who believes in this system of government can dispute the correctness of that position.

What is the essence of this government? Now, gentlemen, I hasten to assure you I am not going to set up any constitutional objection to the bill or to make any criticism of it based on merely abstract principles. When the late Thomas B. Reed was leader of the minority he once remarked that whenever anybody says a bill is unconstitutional that means that he does not like it. If this bill, constitutional or otherwise, possess one-half or any proportion of the merits claimed for it I would be the first to disregard constitutional subtleties and put it on the statute book. In fact I hold it to be our duty to pass measures that are clearly for the public benefit even though there should be grave doubt about their constitutionality. For there is no way to determine the constitutionality of any measure except by enacting it into law and then submitting it to the test of judicial decision.

The substantial objection to this measure is that it puts on the Federal Government a duty which under the theory of our Constitution belongs exclusively to the State. Not merely do I believe it belongs to the State by the letter of the Constitution but also by the highest interests of the people. I believe this duty should be left with the State because I believe it can best be performed by each locality. It is a commonplace to say that the Federal Government is organized to deal with matters affecting the States as such—the general welfare of them all—the relations of each State to all the others, and the protection of the whole Union from any form of external attack or danger, while the State is organized to regulate the relations of each person with all others constituting the population.

The individual life of each citizen is a matter that is to be affected so far as legislation may interfere with it by action of the State alone—that is to say, by the locality in which he dwells. This Government is built upon the principle that the locality is better qualified and better disposed to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of his essential rights and to serve him in all matters of social welfare than the Nation. If you transfer jurisdiction over matters affecting the intimate life of the individual from his own locality to the Nation at large, the result will be most dangerous to the security of this Republic. If the daily lives of persons in New York may be affected vitally by action, or by the opinions which lead to action, of persons in Oklahoma, and vital conditions of life in Idaho may be determined by people in New York, a form of tyranny must necessarily result which will be the worst ever known, the tyranny of masses who not merely are ignorant of the matters with which they are dealing but who can not possibly be informed of them. Nothing but confusion leading to disaster could follow such a subversion of our political system.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. No; I have not the time. If the gentleman could give me more time I would yield to him gladly for a colloquy.

I want to place this aspect of the pending question before the committee with some degree of fullness in the very brief time at my disposal. The gentleman from Iowa who has concluded a very forcible argument in support of this measure it seems to me has made a most conclusive argument against it.

He said that New York City of itself and by itself has attained in the matter of checking infant mortality the standard of efficiency which it is hoped by this bill to establish in other parts of the country where no provisions whatever to deal with this grave danger had been made. Now, I submit to this committee that it must establish a most dangerous precedent if the Federal Government steps in and says to all communities that have neglected to establish necessary precautions against preventable mortality among mothers and babies that the Federal Government will take an important part of the task off their hands for no other reason than that they have refused to perform any part of it themselves. If there is any meaning in this legislation, it is that cooperation of the States with the National Government in taking these measures absolutely essential to the safety of the population is to be purchased hereafter by gifts of money from the Federal Treasury. If such a declaration be made by deliberate action of this Congress, and this bill becomes a law, then I say not merely will you have taken a step that must cause deep demoralization but you will have practically abolished this system of government and substituted for it another and a radically different system—that is the distinction between paternalism and democracy.

The essence of democracy is that when persons are left free to control their individual lives they will regulate their affairs wisely and in a manner to produce results for themselves and for the community vastly better than if they were subject to control from outside, whether that control be exercised by saints, by angels, or by paternalistic government. It is a sound principle of government that you can no more bring the elements of effective government into a locality from outside its limits than you can bring an effective vital organ into a man's system from outside his body. There is nothing vital in democracy except the belief that the people of every locality can do for themselves everything necessary to advance their welfare much better than any distant government, however well disposed, can do it for them. In this country we have had over a century and a quarter of experience which seems to vindicate that doctrine. It is the first time in all human experience that the capacity of a people to govern themselves better than any other force or body could govern them—that is to say, the vital principle of democracy—has been vindicated on the surface of the earth. And now, behold! we find its most triumphant vindication; the success—the marvelous, shining success—the city of New York in checking infant mortality made the excuse and the argument for discarding and overriding the system of allowing the locality to deal exclusively with a matter affecting it so vitally and substituting for it a totally different and irreconcilable system.

Mr. Chairman, I am not dealing with abstractions. If, I repeat, it could be shown that this system now proposed of mixed authority, of divided jurisdiction—this attempt to stimulate wholesome action in the States by bribes from the Federal Treasury—could afford better prospects of preserving child life and limiting the perils of pregnancy than the system of trusting the safety of mother and infant to wholesome action stimulated by the necessities and interests of society as they are conceived and understood by the people of each locality, I would be voting for it with a vengeance. But because I believe, with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], as he pointed out in his eloquent address yesterday, if this bill becomes law it will be the entering wedge to other legislation of similar character I am, with a vengeance, opposed to it. That the purpose of this measure and of its supporters is of the highest I have not the slightest doubt. But vicious proposals are most dangerous when supported by virtuous but misguided men. Paternalism, which is tyranny, never started in proposals which were deliberately vicious, and it was never established by bad men. It always came into the world commended to the approval of people by the virtue of an individual who advocated or embodied it or by the delusively attractive quality of some such proposal as this. Paternalism, or tyranny, could not have found a foothold if at the beginning it did not work well. But in time it always turned to evil, inevitably and irresistibly. It may be that this measure will work well for a while. And there lies the chief danger of it. Its success would inevitably open up the pathway to every kind of interference by the Federal Government in the most intimate and domestic affairs of the citizen.

If this sublime function of motherhood can be made the subject of national legislation in any way, what is there that can be considered beyond its scope? I do not object to any assumption of authority by the Federal Government which it can exercise better or even as well as the State government, but I think it must be self-evident that this great Federal Government, stretching over the entire country, by its very nature can not possibly deal with matters which concern a locality as effectively as the State or a smaller body whose nature and dimensions enable it to enter with some degree of sympathy into the domestic details of every family.

By such an unwise and unwarranted exclusion of Federal authority, you are not merely perverting the character of your Government, but you are seriously endangering the security of every family in every State of the Union. The function of motherhood is God given. It has been exercised during all the centuries that have gone before with steadily expanding security. And in the fullness of time and of accumulated experience it has produced this glorious common people that has never been paralleled for virtue or intelligence upon the face of the earth.

Paternalism has been tried. It has governed the world almost universally until within the last few generations. Has it ever produced a nation like this? Democracy has this people for its fruitage, its crown, its glory, the triumphant vindication of its excellence. But democracy depends for its value, for its very life, upon the fiber, the capacity, the virtue, the merit of the individual.

If the individual can not be trusted to form the opinion of the locality he inhabits on wholesome lines, and thus lead it to effective action for protection of all men, women, and children, then democracy is a failure, and it must disappear from the earth which it encumbers. But all the experience of this country shows that the people, the masses—the sum of the individuals composing the population—are always sources of the most wholesome purposes and the most patriotic measures. And now with all these results of popular intelligence multiplying all around us, now that they are actually garnered into this democratic Government which blesses us with abundant prosperity and offers promise of unlimited improvement to all mankind, are we by reason of that very success, by reason of the fact that in our greatest city, the greatest city of all the world, the locality has shown supreme capacity to deal with such a grave problem as checking infant mortality, to overthrow the authority of that locality or at least to divide its authority with another power or government to deal with these matters? Are we through insidious bribery to effect a division of jurisdiction, when in the very nature of things jurisdiction to be effective must be single and must be in the people chiefly concerned in its exercise. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. J. M. NELSON].

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not undertake to reply to the torrent of eloquence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], who has just spoken. If I had the ability, I have neither the time nor the inclination to repeat the arguments that we have listened to to-day so fully, arguments which clearly prove to my mind that Mr. COCKRAN's position is wrong. But I have strong feelings with reference to this bill; and I would feel that I had not done my duty if I did not contribute my voice to its passage, as well as my vote.

When I look at the purpose of this bill, I have to be for it. Its title says it is "to promote the welfare and the hygiene of maternity and infancy." Could there be a nobler purpose than to protect the lives and the health of the babies and the mothers of the land? Some scoff at the idea of legislation of this kind, and say that it is of no value, as the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON]; but is that the fact? Are not life and health to be held above wealth?

Mr. LAYTON. What did I scoff at?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman denounced it as unnecessary. He could see no good in it.

Mr. LAYTON. Is that scoffing?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Perhaps the gentleman was not among the scoffers, but he certainly could see no value in it.

Mr. LAYTON. I do not even scoff at the idea of its being done in the States now.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The gentleman from Delaware has had his time. I have only 10 minutes. When it comes to property interests, as has been pointed out, we are very lavish with our millions, spending them for the benefit of hogs and cotton and fruit trees and trade and commerce. But life, the life of the mothers and the babies, is human life not of equal value with things? I know that practical-minded man up to this moment has said that a law of this nature is unnecessary, socialistic, and a wasteful expense. But women, now come into their own, have sounded another note. That note comes from the vibrations of the human heart. It is the note of love, the mother pleading for her own life when she gives birth to a child and pleading for the life of her babes. Congress is at last going to listen to that voice and say by this legislation that human life and health shall be held of equal value, to say the least, with that of animals; that babes and mothers shall be equal to hogs and horses and cattle in the eyes of the law.

The eloquent gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] drew a very dreadful picture of this bill's interference with the proper function of the Nation and the States. But he is arguing after the fact. I am on the Committee on Roads, and I know well the argument for national aid to good roads. National appropriations are made lavishly to promote good roads for purposes of markets and joy riding. These are the only purposes. We appropriate nearly $100,000,000 for this year alone for building and repair of roads. We are asked to appropriate a little more than a million dollars for protection of mothers and children. As the Nation stimulates in one direction, we propose to stimulate in another, only this is a much more worthy, a much nobler purpose.

Had I the time I could show that it is the same principle so far as stimulating the States are concerned. And do not the States stimulate the counties and the cities? Is that wrong? Can not the Nation, when it finds a great purpose, also stimulate the States? I know the policy generally can be attacked on strong grounds, but if Congress can aid States to build roads Congress can aid States also to save the lives of mothers and children. If the principle is right as to property, it can not be wrong when applied to human life.

Now, another thing. Opponents of this measure refer to the wasteful expense. They are weighing expense against life and health. The idea is shocking. Let me give you, briefly, some figures. I am not going to burden you with them. Let me call your attention to Dr. Baker's testimony. She has served under nine administrations in New York City; has had over 10 years of practical experience in administering this kind of a law. She has computed figures for the Nation, for the States, and for her own city, gathered carefully. The figures given us today so fully by Judge TOWNER back her up. She believes that the organization set up in this bill will save annually the lives of 15,000 mothers and 100,000 babies. What does that mean for the 5-year period? Seventy-five thousand mothers and 500,000 babies saved.

The cost for that 5-year period would be a little more than $7,000,000. For every $1,000,000 we spend we will save 15,000 mothers and 100,000 babies. Stated more in detail, that means this: That every $83 expended will save one mother and six babies. How are we going to vote on this question? Are you going to listen to this plea for dollars and cents? This plea to save $83 and lose a mother and six babies? Which is the waste, the waste of this money or the waste of these lives? All a man has will he give for life, if it is his life or that of his wife or his child. This argument of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] was made long ago. It is the old argument of the silversmith, Demetrius, who made shrines for the goddess Diana of Ephesus. When he found the Apostle Paul was preaching the gospel of love and denouncing idolatry, he called the associated craftsmen together and said, "Ye know that by this craft we have our wealth." So the gentleman from Delaware, Dr. LAYTON, calls the medical fraternity's opposition to our attention. He says that if we listen to the voice of the women we will have to reckon with the doctors. As others have said, I say, the doctors are no less public-spirited than any other profession, but the main objection to the enactment of this bill, nevertheless, has come from the medical fraternity.

Mr. LAYTON. What is your profession?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Well, I am a lawyer.

Mr. LAYTON. Would you go to a blacksmith to attend to a case in court?

Mr. J. M. NELSON. I was going to follow the illustration further of the silversmith Demetrius and his coworkers against Paul's propaganda to save life, but for the sake of answering you—

Mr. LAYTON. You referred to the medical profession. Are we not better qualified—

Mr. J. M. NELSON. This bureau in charge of this law will get the best medical aid and information possible, will take the best medical advice, will gather the best skill that is available in this country and the world, and will take it to all localities.

Mr. LAYTON. They have not done so.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. They will do it.

Mr. LAYTON. But they have not done it.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. They are not going to neglect the doctors. On the contrary, I think you will find the doctors will be for this law enthusiastically when they see it in operation, because mothers will be advised when to consult the doctors, and when they have the funds they will help them get the doctors and not neglect them as now. It seems to me, so far as a few are back of the opposition to this bill, they are consulting their selfish fears rather than the nobler impulses of their hearts. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL] is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is not my purpose to consume your time with an expression of my thoughts, but in view of the many loose statements that have been made concerning this subject outside of the Congress, and some statements that have been made upon this floor, I desire to present for your consideration some statistics submitted by the Bureau of Census of the Department of Commerce, which I believe have not been quoted so far in the discussion.

It has been stated that the mortality rate among children of this country has been very high, ranking, I believe, among the nations of which we have record, 17. I find on page 31 statistics comprising 28 nations of the world which have been gathered and compiled. Among these nations we find the lowest mortality rate in New Zealand. I believe they only comprise statistics of the white race and not of the aborigines.

Mr. LAYTON. What year is that for?

Mr. DEAL. That is for the year 1919, the last the Government has submitted. In Australia the same condition obtains. The Netherlands, however, seem to rank second, the mortality rate of New Zealand being 56.6 in 1,000; the Netherlands, 57 in 1,000. It comes second. Norway comes third, with 64; Australia fourth, with 69.2; Sweden fifth, with 75.

Mr. LAYTON. As to Australia, does that include the aborigines?

Mr. DEAL. That does not include the aborigines.

In the United States we find 86.6, which appears from these records to rank as sixth, and not seventeenth, among the nations in the mortality rate among children.

Now, among the nations that have had maternity laws for many years, notably Germany, Austria, and Hungary, we find that the mortality rate in Germany for the year 1914, the last that was available, to have been 158 in 1,000, as compared with 86.6 in America, with no maternity benefits. We find that Austria had 189, as against 86.6; Hungary, 263, more than four to one, and these nations were the first to enact benefit laws primarily, we assume, for the purpose of building up their population as a defensive measure. Even England, which may be compared more nearly with our own country, and which has had maternity laws in existence for a number of years, had a death rate in the year 1918 of 97 as against 86.6, and France 112.2. This would indicate that, without maternity benefit laws in this country, we rank among the first in the lower rate of mortality, and if we take into consideration our colored population, as compared with New Zealand and Australia, it is fair to assume that we would rank very close, if not quite, with those countries. [Applause.]

Now, on page 7, we find—

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman excuse me a moment?

Mr. DEAL. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. You are reading from real statistics?

Mr. DEAL. I am reading the statistics of the United States Census Bureau.

Mr. LAYTON. Gathered by the Federal Government?

Mr. DEAL. Gathered by the Federal Government.

Mr. LAYTON. And not statistics that are placed before the committee hearings by irresponsible people?

Mr. DEAL. Not statistics that are placed before the committee by irresponsible people.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman—

Mr. DEAL. Pardon me; I would be glad to yield, but I will ask the gentleman to excuse me.

Now I have endeavored to obtain the United States Census Bureau statistics as to the mortality rates among mothers in foreign countries. This I have been unable to do. There seemed to be no statistics available; certainly not in the United States Census Bureau.

By the way, in the hearings before the House committee we find a chart in which the United States is placed as the highest in maternity death rate of any country probably in the world. They have given the names here, but they have not named all the countries. It appears, however, to be the highest of any country. I can not say as to the accuracy of that statement, but I do want to say that of the 24 States and the District of Columbia in which births were registered in the year 1919, there were 1,373,438 births recorded. It is fair to presume that many births were not recorded because of the newness of the laws and the fact that the people were not in the habit of registering; and then, too, in the rural districts there were many instances in which physicians were not called, and it is fair to assume that many births were not registered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. DEAL. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield me one minute?

Mr. WINSLOW. I haven't it, I am sorry to say.

Mr. DEAL. The point I wished to make was that the maternal deaths for 1919, being 17,800 and assuming a mother for each birth, the death rate was 1.29 per cent, instead of 7.4 per cent as stated in testimony before the committee, thus placing the United States among the very lowest in mortality rate, both in maternal and infancy; hence there is no necessity for S. 1039.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire if the time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been fully exhausted.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CLOUSE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLOUSE. Does that exhaust all the time for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not. It leaves two minutes.

Mr. CLOUSE. At this time I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I do not know what the purpose was of those who were first responsible for the beginning of this legislation, but those who have stated here that the purpose of the bill now under consideration is to take from the States the activities which they are now engaged in with reference to infancy and maternity welfare and to undertake them by the Federal Government are looking at the question through a distorted mind, or at least through a distorted vision. I think I can speak for the committee who have reported the bill, at least to this extent, when I say that the purpose of this bill is not to launch the Federal Government itself into promoting better conditions connected with maternity and infancy, but rather the purpose is for the Federal Government to do what it can do in this small way to encourage or stimulate the State governments or the local governments to do it.

Now, if this bill would launch the Federal Government into this activity I would not approve it or support it. But I do not think it is intended to do that, and I do not think it will have that effect or that result.

The fundamental question which the bill presents to the House to decide is whether or not the Congress should approve the purpose of the bill. If we approve the purpose of the bill I do not think the provisions of the bill could be improved upon in order to carry out that purpose. I think all of us must have had brought to our attention the fact that the tax burdens of the people for the maintenance of charitable and penal and reformatory institutions have been increasing tremendously; increasing, in fact, out of proportion to the increase in population. Those who have studied this subject claim that if conditions surrounding life at its source can be corrected and improved, if the sanitary and hygienic and economic and social conditions can be made better for the homes of the country when those who are to be the future citizens first come into life, we will make better citizens of the children; if this can be done, and if we can make better and healthier children, we will have better citizens.

It is upon this theory that the proponents of this bill have urged its enactment into legislation. I do not know whether this can be done or not, but that is the theory of it, and it is claimed by a great many good people who have studied the subject that it will have a tendency in that direction; and in view of the fact that there are so many in the country who think this, and who have urged legislation along this line, the committee thought that we were justified in going this far for the time provided in the bill in order to do what the Federal Government can do to accomplish what ought to appeal to all of us as a worthy purpose.

Now, at the risk of being tedious, but in order that the viewpoint of your committee may be fully understood by the Members of the House, I want to say just a few words with reference to the legislative history of this bill. The bill was first filed with us on June 29, 1918, bearing Miss Rankin's name and the number 12634. It was sent to the Committee on Labor, where it rested quietly until the close of the Sixty-fifth Congress. In the early hours of the Sixty-sixth Congress—in December, 1919—the bill was again brought before Congress by our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], and the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and the bill was christened "the Sheppard-Towner bill."

It was thereupon sent to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, where it slept.

In the Senate it was, on October 20, 1919, sent to the Committee on Public Health and Quarantine, where, if there is anything at all in the name of the committee, it ought to have remained longer than it did. But, on the contrary, that committee on June 2, 1920, reported it back to the Senate as S. 3259. It passed the Senate December 16, 1920, was sent over to the House, and sent to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on December 20, 1920. That committee gave it some treatment and returned it to the House with a favorable recommendation on January 28, 1921. No action was taken in the House before the 4th of March, and thus ended the second Congress after the baby bill first made its appearance in the world.

Early in April of this year the Sixty-seventh Congress was convened in extraordinary session. On April 12 the President addressed the joint session of the House and Senate on the state of the Union.

Here let me pause to state that immediately after this bill was born there began a propaganda for it that was Nation-wide. The Hearst publications espoused and proclaimed it. The governors of every State were appealed to and many responded favorably. Magazines and newspapers were subsidized. Eminent paid publicists wrote lurid arguments in its favor. Women's clubs, the churches, religious organizations, women's patriotic organizations, and others were appealed to. The woman's suffrage organizations, having accomplished their purpose of amending the Constitution, were still organized, had plenty of money, were all dressed up with nothing to do and no place to go. They clasped this baby bill to their bosoms and rushed on to Washington. The militants among them established headquarters here in the shadow of the Capitol and have remained on the job. The Members' offices have been literally filled and refilled with letters, telegrams, petitions, and publications in favor of this bill.

I venture the assertion that there has been enough money expended for telegrams, letters, postage, publicity, lectures, speakers, lobbyists, and every other conceivable kind of propaganda for the passage of this measure to pay the bills for a doctor and nurse for every baby born in the United States in the past 12 months.

Efforts were made to get favorable declarations for it in the national platforms of both great political parties. And finally Mr. Harding during his campaign for the Presidency was caught in the general round-up, roped, and branded as an advocate of this bill by a public declaration in its favor.

And so, Mr. Chairman, when the President on April 12 addressed the Sixty-seventh Congress on the state of the Union he thought it advisable to officially commend to us the baby bill. He did so in the following words:

In the realms of education, public health, sanitation, conditions of workers in industry, child welfare, proper amusement, and recreation, the elimination of social vice, and many other subjects, the Government has already undertaken a considerable range of activities. I assume the maternity bill, already strongly approved, will be enacted promptly, thus adding to our manifestation of human interest.

On the 11th of April last this bill was again filed by Messrs. SHEPPARD and TOWNER. At this end of the Capitol as H. R. 2366 it was sent to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. In the Senate, as S. 1039, it was sent to the Committee on Education and Labor and by that committee reported back to the Senate on May 20. Later it was considered by the Senate, passed on July 22, sent over to the House on July 25, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

So, Mr. Chairman, this bill has been before three different Congresses. It has been considered by two different Senate committees and favorably reported three times. It has passed the Senate twice. It had been considered by two different committees of the House and favorably reported twice. This, in brief, was the history of the bill when it was referred to your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce the third time early in the present session.

During all the time that the bill has been before Congress the Members, and particularly the members of the committee to which it was referred, have, as I have stated, been propagandized in every conceivable manner from all parts of the country by those who were interested in its passage. And there seemed to be no serious opposition to it. But since the present Congress convened serious opposition has arisen and increased and organized, and the members of the committee have been strenuously besieged by both those for and against the bill.

Right recently the physicians of the country seemed to have discovered that such a bill was pending and becoming alarmed apparently at the provisions of the bill as it was introduced have been actively indicating their opposition to it. The committee held further hearings so that all who were interested either for or against the bill might have an opportunity to present their views. We have given the bill the most thorough and careful consideration. More consideration and time in fact than its importance would seem to justify. For this the committee has been criticized by some, and unjustly, I think. In view of the wide interest manifested both for and against the bill, the committee thought that it should be seriously and carefully considered.

So we have subjected it to the most thorough scrutiny. We have with patience searched all its provisions for the virtues which its friends claim for it and for the dangers which its enemies attributed to it. We have analyzed it, turned it over and over again, X-rayed it, and cross-examined both those who advocated and opposed it. We have stripped it of all its provisions which the committee thought might conceal any of the dangerous purposes which those who are opposed to it profess to see in it, and have rewritten in as brief and plain terms as could be found those provisions which the committee thought embodied the virtues which its friends claimed for it.

The result has been that the committee struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and now presents to the Senate an amended bill which all of the committee were willing to report and which a majority of the committee at least feel is entitled to your approval.

The friends of this measure claim that the mortality of mothers and infants at or about the time of childbirth exceeds by far that of any other of the civilized countries. Statisticians and others who have given great study to this subject appeared before the committee and gave substantial evidence in proof of that claim. The purpose of the bill, as stated by its friends, is to stimulate and encourage greater interest and more efficient efforts on the part of the State and local governments in maternity and child welfare and hygiene, by means of Federal legislation and appropriations. It must be admitted that there are some of the States who are already doing splendid work along this line and, therefore, need no stimulation or encouragement from the Federal Government. On the other hand, it must also be admitted that there are many of the States in which very little, if anything, is being done in an intelligent or efficient way to reduce or minimize the rate of mortality among mothers and infants at the most critical time of life. If Congress can, by appropriate legislation, be the means of stimulating and encouraging a greater interest on the part of the local and State governments in more intelligent efforts in behalf of maternity and infant welfare and hygiene, it has seemed to the committee that we would be fully justified in enacting such legislation.

In theory I am opposed to the Federal Government undertaking any activity which can as well or better be undertaken by State or local governments, and I should be absolutely opposed to this bill if it involved any undertaking on the part of the Federal Government to itself enter into the activity which this bill purports to encourage.

The bill as originally introduced would commit the Federal Government to active participation in maternity and child-welfare work, but those provisions of the bill have been eliminated and the bill as amended and now before the House does no more than its friends claim is its real purpose; that is, it undertakes by means of an appropriation from the Federal Treasury, appropriately distributed among the different States, to stimulate and encourage the States themselves to appropriate like amounts and intelligently undertake increased activity for the welfare and hygiene of mothers and children.

The bill, of course, makes no appropriations whatever. It authorizes by law certain appropriations and leaves it to the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations and the Congress whether or not the appropriation authorized by it shall hereafter be made. It authorizes the appropriation of $480,000 for the first year and $240,000 for the next succeeding five years, which will be $10,000 for the first year and $5,000 for the next succeeding five years to each of the 48 States. These amounts are gratuities to the States to encourage them to organize appropriate agencies for carrying out the purposes of the act.

It also authorizes the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the first year and $1,000,000 for a period of five years thereafter, to be divided among the States in proportion to their population, no State, however, to receive less than $5,000, and this appropriation must be matched by at least an equal appropriation by the different States.

So that if this bill is approved and becomes a law, and if the Appropriations Committee shall be willing each year to recommend and if the Congress shall be willing to approve the appropriations authorized by the bill, there will have been paid from the Federal Treasury to the different States as a gratuity the total sum of $1,680,000, or $35,000 to each of the 48 States. And there shall have been further appropriated for distribution among the different States in proportion to their population the further sum of $6,000,000, which must be matched by at least an equal amount by the several States. This amount is not enough, in my judgment, to accomplish very much. But in view of the existing condition of the Federal Treasury, it was thought by the committee a larger authorization would not be justified and that the amount authorized would be sufficient to prove or disprove the policy and test the wisdom of the legislation.

Now, several of the Members who have spoken on this bill have tiraded—if I may use that term—against the attempt here to establish a new precedent, to start on a new policy. Well, in view of the past legislation of Congress that claim seems to me to be a joke. I am going to call attention to what Congress has done.

There are a number of precedents for such legislation by Congress. We have repeatedly appropriated funds from the National Treasury to stimulate and encourage the States to enter upon activities which in the judgment of Congress would result in material benefits to the people of the country.

For instance, by the act of March 1, 1911, Congress appropriated the sum of $200,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with any State or group of States in the protection from fire of the forested watersheds of navigable streams. Under that act the Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to cooperate with any State or group of States in the organization and maintenance of a system of fire protection on any private or State forest lands within such State or States situated upon the watershed of a navigable stream, with the further express provision that the amount expended for that purpose in any State should not exceed in any fiscal year the amount appropriated by that State for the same purpose.

That is the first act. There is where we established the precedent.

By the act of March 4, 1911, Congress authorized the Secretary of the Navy to furnish a suitable naval vessel with her apparel, charts, books, and instruments of navigation to any school or college of the different States for the purpose of promoting nautical education, upon the condition that there should be maintained in such schools courses of instruction in navigation, steamship marine engineering, and all matters pertaining to the construction, equipment, and sailing of vessels. That act authorized the annual appropriation from the Federal Treasury of an amount equal to the amount annually appropriated by the different States or municipalities for the purpose of maintaining such marine school or schools or nautical branches thereof.

That was the second act of Congress providing for Federal encouragement along that line by matching an equal appropriation by the States.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman sure that he states that correctly?

Mr. DENISON. I am sure of it. I have the act right here, and I shall be glad to have my friend verify it. The third act, that of March 4, 1913, making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, appropriated $400,000 for the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, and other improvements in the national forests, and authorized the Secretary of Agriculture whenever practicable to secure the cooperation or aid of the proper State or Territorial authorities by similar appropriations for the furtherance of any system of highways of which such forest roads and trails might be made a part.

Mr. CROWTHER. Did we not appropriate $15,000,000 the other day for the same purpose?

Mr. DENISON. I am giving the various acts in the order in which they were passed.

Mr. CROWTHER. Seventeen million dollars of the $75,000,000 was specifically for that purpose.

Mr. DENISON. By the act of May 8, 1914, the Sixty-third Congress provided by law for cooperation with the different States in cooperative agricultural extension work, which consists in the giving of instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics and imparting to the people information on such subjects through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise. That act contained provisions almost identical with the provisions of the bill now under consideration and appropriated permanently the sum of $480,000 per year, $10,000 of which should be paid to each of the 48 States.

The act appropriated an additional amount of $600,000 for the first year and for each year thereafter for seven years a sum exceeding by $500,000 the sum appropriated for each preceding year, and for each year after the expiration of the seven years it permanently appropriated for each year the sum of $4,100,000 in addition to the $480,000.

I wish gentlemen who have discovered a mare's nest in this act would follow these various acts of Congress in which we have made provisions almost identical with those of the act now under consideration.

Mr. LAYTON. In other words, a list of other mare's nests.

Mr. DENISON. And I think the gentleman from Delaware has voted for every one of them, with one or two possible exceptions.

And it was provided by that act that the additional appropriations of $4,100,000 a year should be apportioned among the different States in the proportion which the rural population of each State bears to the total rural population of all the States and was conditioned upon the appropriation of an equal amount by the legislatures of the several States.

By the act of July 11, 1916, Congress provided for the cooperation of the Federal Government with the States in the construction of rural post roads. That act appropriated $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917; $10,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1918; $15,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919; $20,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; and $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, or a total of $75,000,000. The act further provided, you will remember, for the method of apportioning the annual appropriation among the different States that desired to avail themselves of the benefits of the act and provided that the money could not be expended in any State except upon condition of an expenditure of an equal amount by the State or local highway authorities.

The act of July 11, 1916, further appropriated the sum of $1,000,000 per year for a period of 10 years, or a total of $10,000,000 for the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads or trails wholly or partly within the national forests, subject to the provision that the State, Territory, or county within or adjacent to which the national forests were located should enter into cooperative agreements with the Secretary of Agriculture for the survey, construction, and maintenance of such roads or trails upon a basis equitable to both the State, Territory, or county and the United States.

By the act of February 23, 1917, Congress provided for cooperation with the States in the promotion of vocational education in agriculture and the trades and industries and in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects. Section 2 of that act provided for cooperating with the States in the payment of salaries of teachers or directors of agricultural subjects, and for that purpose appropriated $500,000 for the first fiscal year, and an amount for each succeeding year equal to $250,000 in excess of the amount appropriated for the preceding year up until 1925, for which year the sum of $2,500,000 is appropriated, and thereafter the sum of $3,000,000 was appropriated annually for such purposes.

Section 3 of the act provided for cooperating with the States in the payment of salaries of teachers of trade, home economics, and industrial subjects, and provided for similar appropriations for that purpose.

Section 4 provided for cooperating with the States in preparing teachers, supervisors, and directors of agricultural subjects and teachers of trade and industrial and home economics subjects, and appropriated $500,000 for that purpose for the first year, $700,000 for the second year, and $900,000 for the third year, and $1,000,000 annually thereafter. These appropriations were all conditioned upon appropriations of like amounts for the same purposes by the legislatures of the different States.

By the act of March 1, 1917, known as the flood-control act, Congress authorized the appropriation of $45,000,000, not more than $10,000,000 of which was to be expended during any one fiscal year, for controlling the floods of the Mississippi River, and also authorized the appropriation of $5,600,000, not more than $1,000,000 of which should be expended during any one fiscal year for controlling the floods, removing the debris, and continuing the improvement of the Sacramento River. That act provided that no part of the money appropriated under its authority should be expended in the construction or repair of any levee except upon the condition that local interests protected by such levees should contribute for the construction and repair of the levees, a sum which the Mississippi River Commission should determine to be just and equitable, but which should not be less than one-half of such sum as might be allotted by the commission for such work. In other words, by that act Congress authorized the expenditure of the amount appropriated for the prevention of floods and the protection of the people living along those rivers upon the condition that local interests protected by the levees should pay two-thirds and the Government one-third of the cost of such work.

By the act of July 9, 1918, Congress appropriated the sum of $1,400,000 annually for two fiscal years, $1,000,000 of which was to be paid to the different States for the use of their respective boards or departments of public health in the prevention, control, and treatment of venereal diseases. The act provided that the sum should be allotted to each State in proportion that its population bears to the population of the continental United States, and that such allotments were to be conditioned upon the appropriation of an equal amount by the respective States for the prevention, control, and treatment of venereal diseases.

And by the act of June 2, 1920, Congress provided for cooperation of the different States in the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in civil industries. That act you will remember provided for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or in any legitimate occupation and their return to civil employment, and appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of the act, the sum of $700,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and the sum of $1,034,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and the sum of $1,034,000 annually thereafter for a period of two years. These sums are to be allotted to the States in the proportion which their population bears to the total population of the continental United States. That act also contained many provisions similar to those of the bill now under consideration, and provided that all moneys authorized by its provisions should be expended only upon the condition that for every dollar of Federal money expended there should also be expended in the State under the supervision and control of the State board of vocational rehabilitation at least an equal amount for the same purpose.

Finally, by the recent act of November 9, 1921, we appropriated $90,000,000 out of the National Treasury for the construction of hard roads on condition that the several States expend at least an equal amount for that purpose.

These acts to which I have referred with some detail at the risk of becoming tedious show that Congress has at least to some extent adopted and committed the Federal Government to the policy of cooperating with the different States in the promotion of various activities which in the judgment of Congress would result in promotion of the public welfare.

Therefore, I feel justified in asserting that in reporting this bill to the House with a favorable recommendation the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is not recommending Congress to enter upon any new policy or to depart from those standards which have guided its deliberations and guarded its actions heretofore.

We may not have acted wisely in appropriating funds from the Federal Treasury for cooperation with the States in the protection of the watersheds of navigable rivers, in the promotion of nautical education, in the construction of roads in the national forests, in the promotion of agricultural extension work, in the construction of hard roads, in the promotion of vocational education, in the prevention of venereal diseases, in the protection of the citizens of the Mississippi and Sacramento Valleys from the annual floods of those rivers, and in the rehabilitation of persons disabled in civil industry.

I sometimes doubt whether such appropriations should have been made at all. I have quite often believed that we have pursued the policy further than we should. But whether wise or otherwise, we are committed to this policy of Federal cooperation with the States in commendable welfare work. I can see no logical reason why we should now reverse ourselves, abandon this policy, and refuse to pass this bill which provides only in a very modest way and for a very short time for Federal cooperation with the States in the promotion of maternal and infant welfare and hygiene.

I do not think there is any of us, and certainly there is none of your committee, who does not approve and commend the purpose sought to be accomplished by this bill. The care and welfare and hygiene of the mothers of the country at and near the natal period of life and the care and welfare and hygiene of the infants during the prenatal and postnatal periods are too intimately related to a better society and improved citizenship and the future of the Republic to justify us in failing to do everything in our power to promote and protect them.

The committee has considered carefully every objection that has been urged to the bill, and has endeavored to eliminate every provision that seemed to justify serious criticism.

For instance, some have opposed the bill because it is said it would authorize representatives of the Children's Bureau and of the State agencies to enter homes and assume some sort of control over the children, whether agreeable to the parents or not. We have expressly provided against that by prohibiting such acts in section 9, which is as follows:

SEC. 9. No official, agent, or representative of the Children's Bureau shall by virtue of this act have any right to enter any home over the objection of the owner thereof, or to take charge of any child over the objection of the parents, or either of them, or of the person standing in loco parentis or having custody of such child.

Many physicians and medical societies have condemned the bill because it would authorize or permit undue influence or dictation by Government agents with reference to methods of treatment or correction or the person or class of persons who should be called to administer treatment to mothers or infants. We have expressly provided against that by this language in the bill:

Nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the power of a parent or guardian or person standing in loco parentis to determine what treatment or correction shall be provided for a child or the agency or agencies to be employed for such purpose.

Objection has been urged to the bill on the ground that the welfare and hygiene of mothers and infants are medical questions which ought not to be under the supervision of any other than physicians. The original bill and the Senate bill were certainly open to this objection. But we have rewritten the bill and provided in section 3 and other sections that the most vital and important duties to be performed in connection with the administration of the law shall be under the control of a board composed of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, the United States Commissioner of Education, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau. All plans of the different States for carrying out the provisions of the act must be approved by this board before the Federal funds can be paid to such States, and the board may stop the payment of further Federal funds whenever it is found that funds theretofore allotted to any State have not been properly expended. As the work will be largely educational and advisory, we thought no better board could be provided than the Surgeon General, the Commissioner of Education, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau.

The most serious opposition to the bill has come from those who are opposed to the so-called maternity benefit or pension systems of other countries, and they fear this bill amounts to the beginning of such a policy on the part of our Government. To be entirely frank, Mr. Chairman, I think the original bill, as well as the bill passed by the Senate, is open to such criticism. And I have no doubt at all that many who believe in maternity-benefit legislation have been urging the enactment of this legislation believing it would soon lead to a governmental approval of such a policy. There are a number of countries in Europe in which these so-called maternal-benefits systems and mothers' pension systems have been enacted into law. This is especially so in Russia. Under these systems mothers are paid money benefits or pensions or other valuable gratuities by the Government for a certain length of time before and after childbirth. The theory is that such a policy helps the poor who are not able to help themselves, it relieves the mothers from having to work and the fathers from having to quit work during the prenatal and postnatal periods, and makes the wives independent of the care and attention of their husbands.

Of course, the logical sequence to such a system is for the Government to take over the care and education of the child entirely so as to relieve the parents of all responsibility for the welfare of the child. That is practically the case in soviet Russia to-day, where mothers are pensioned and government hospitals have been established for the care and maintenance of the children. The mothers and fathers are thereby left free to work or attend to politics or otherwise serve the State, and the State raises the children.

That, of course, is pure socialism, and many of the socialists and communists and parlor bolsheviks of this country want to see such a system put into effect here. Their support of this bill has tainted it and poisoned the minds of many good people against it, and properly so, until the very commendable purpose of the bill has been dimmed if not entirely submerged from the vision of many who would otherwise support it.

But the committee has neither been blind to the purpose of those who believe in such an unwise and wholly un-American policy nor frightened by it into a failure to respond to the wish of the hundreds of thousands of good men and women who believe this legislation will accomplish much for the present welfare of our people and the future welfare of our country. We have expressly guarded against the possibility of any part of the funds appropriated not only by Congress but by the States being used for the encouragement of maternity benefits by inserting the following language in section 12:

SEC. 12. No portion of any moneys apportioned under this act for the benefit of the States shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, erection, preservation, or repair of any building or buildings or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any buildings or lands, nor shall any such moneys or moneys required to be appropriated by any State for the purposes and in accordance with the provisions of this act be used for the payment of any maternity or infancy pension, stipend, or gratuity.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has been so amended that it leaves to the Children's Bureau no duties except those of making studies and investigations, disseminating information, and merely administering the act. The States are left entirely free to carry out the purposes of the act through their departments of health, subject to the wise condition that their general plans shall be subject to the approval of the Children's Bureau and the board of maternal and infant hygiene. No State may receive the larger benefits of the act except upon making and expending an equal appropriation from its own funds. And the appropriations can not continue longer than five years from the close of the current fiscal year except by another act of Congress. If the bill is fairly and honestly administered, it ought to accomplish some good. If it is dishonestly administered, if any of these parlor bolsheviks or boisterous birth controllers or voluntary parenthood priestesses are appointed by the Children's Bureau to administer the act, it will accomplish nothing good. If that should unhappily be done, it will soon be discovered, no doubt, and there would soon be remedial legislation which would relieve the bureau of further administration of the act.

I believe the act will be honestly and efficiently administered by the Children's Bureau, and I hope it may accomplish all its friends claim it will accomplish. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Chairman, sinister, self-seeking politicians and their newspaper tools some time ago facetiously attempted to criticize me for using my frank to congratulate a mother upon the birth of a new little citizen. A mother's trial and sacrifice have always seemed to me the performance of a high patriotic duty, one to be noted and given honor, as of a soldier who has fought and won a good fight. I am glad to have the opportunity to vote for a measure that appropriates money to aid in the care of prospective mothers and shows interest and a desire to foster sturdier and stronger infants.

Under the provisions of this bill, as corrected and amended by the House committee, $10,000 is appropriated to each State, the State to raise an equal amount in order to enjoy the benefits of this act, to stimulate, encourage, and aid the several States in promoting the welfare of maternity and infancy. The work is to be under the Children's Bureau, cooperating with the State departments of child welfare and child hygiene, or, if none such has been established, whatever agency the State shall elect to create, so that there shall be no possibility of a bureaucracy centered at Washington, with high-handed authority to go into the States and dictate how their health departments should be run, to go into the homes and arbitrarily usurp prerogatives of personal liberty. All those objectionable features which made many feel that the bill as it passed the Senate struck at a vital principle, the principle of personal liberty, have been eliminated. The States can each submit plans of their own to the board, who pass upon and decide if they are acceptable.

The decision is not, as formerly contemplated, left to the judgment of one, and that one the Chief of the Children's Bureau. Each State is free to provide in its own way for its agency.

Some have objected that this measure is socialistic. Whenever Government attempts to care for the welfare of the people, the same old objection is offered, though one of the constitutional purposes of government is to care for the general welfare of the people. There can be no higher care, looking to the future of this country, than to look to the care and education of the mothers who are to bear the citizens who in time will be that State; to care for the little babies, who hold in their tiny helpless hands the molding of the future. The child is the community, the child is the State, the child is the country. His welfare is of the highest import. That this bill is needed the tremendous interest it has stirred up will testify.

New York has been carrying on the work contemplated by this bill for years. The records have been kept.

It is shown that the percentage of deaths of children under 1 year had been decreased one-half in the 13 years of its operation. Many of the deaths of infants under 1 year could be prevented by proper prenatal care and by education, information, and advice on cleanliness, hygiene, and sanitation, furnished both before and after the birth of the child. Not only infant mortality but maternal mortality can be and is lessened.

There is no thought of arbitrary interference in this bill—indeed such is specifically prohibited. The idea is to aid, not control, and unless the aid and education is desired and solicited it will not be proffered.

I have always been in favor of the conservation of our natural resources. I have voted for the eradication of hog cholera, diseases of horses and cattle, for the elimination of plant diseases, for the education of the farmer and his wife in caring for the products of the farm. I have voted for large appropriations for good roads, and, Mr. Chairman, if it has been right to appropriate the Government money for the promotion and protection of property, certainly, in the interest of mankind, against the protection of the mother and baby no argument can be successfully maintained. If hogs, cattle, wheat, and cotton can be appropriated for without criticism, surely babies and mothers can be, without apology. [Applause.]

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HUSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 1039 and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7294. An act supplemental to the national prohibition act.

FILING OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON TAX BILL.

Mr. WALSH took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees may have until 12 o'clock to-morrow night to file a conference report on the agreements to the tax bill. I ask it for this reason: We want to have printed in the Record the report of the committee so that on Monday morning the Members of the House may have this report before them. It has been arranged with the Public Printer that the Record of to-day will not be printed until that report is filed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the conferees may have until 12 o'clock midnight to-morrow to file their report and statements on the tax bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I understand, the gentleman is asking unanimous consent to delay the printing of the Record for the purpose of facilitating the adjournment of Congress on the 23d?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. May I say that the only object the minority has in the matter, outside of the desire to accommodate the Congress as far as we can and as far as I am individually concerned, is that the Record may contain the report and statement on Monday morning, so that Members may have it on their desk and look into it and see the changes and agreements that have been made. While I am on my feet, may I ask the gentleman if he expects to have a reasonable amount of debate on the conference report?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. And permit me to say that the purpose of that unanimous consent is that it will make it possible to take up the report in the House and agree to it on Monday, so that we can have an adjournment of Congress before Thanksgiving. I will say to the gentleman that there will be plenty of time for debate—four or five hours.

Mr. GARNER. And the gentleman will give us at least four hours. Let me say to the gentleman from Wyoming, I think it would be agreeable to the House if we could meet on Monday at 11 o'clock. This is a very complicated matter, and I believe that you gentlemen will realize it when you go into it. We could have until 4 or 4.30 for general debate, and I am sure the gentleman from Michigan will want plenty of time to explain what the conferees have done. I do hope that the gentleman will give us as much debate on Monday as he can and have a vote on the conference report that evening.

Mr. FORDNEY. Four or five hours, if necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The conference report and accompanying statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 15, 41, 114, 132, 456, 622, and 703.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 65, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 151, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 402, 403, 404, 405, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 441, 442, 443, 444, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 522, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 558, 560, 562, 563, 564, 565, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 623, 624, 626, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 638, 642, 647, 649, 650, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 702, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 790, 791, 792, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, and 833, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"(c) Any distribution (whether in cash or other property) made by a corporation to its shareholders or members otherwise than out of (1) earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, or (2) earnings or profits accumulated or increase in value of property accrued prior to March 1, 1913, shall be applied against and reduce the basis provided in section 202 for the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived or the loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of the stock or shares by the distributee," and a period.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 6 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 12, strike out "(c)" and insert "(d)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "(e)"; and on page 15 of the House bill, line 1, strike out "(d)" and insert "(e)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 7 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 2, strike out "(e)" and insert "(f)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 64: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 11 of the Senate engrossed amendment, line 19, strike out "receiveds" and insert "received"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 12 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 13, strike out "a" and insert "as"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 115: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(b) In the case of any taxpayer (other than a corporation) who for any taxable year derives a capital net gain, there shall (at the election of the taxpayer) be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 210 and 211 of this title, a tax determined as follows:

"A partial tax shall first be computed upon the basis of the ordinary net income at the rates and in the manner provided in sections 210 and 211, and the total tax shall be this amount plus 12½ per cent of the capital net gain; but if the taxpayer elects to be taxed under this section the total tax shall in no such case be less than 12½ per cent of the total net income. The total tax thus determined shall be computed, collected, and paid in the same manner, at the same time, and subject to the same provisions of law, including penalties, as other taxes under this title" and a period.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 121: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 18 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 4, strike out "(a)"; and on page 18 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out lines 12 to 17, both inclusive; and on page 23 of the House bill, line 7, after the word "them" and before the semicolon insert a period and the following: "In no case shall the reduction of the personal exemption from $2,500 to $2,000 operate to increase the tax, which would be payable if the exemption were $2,500, by more than the amount of the net income in excess of $5,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 149: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment and on page 16 of the House bill, line 4, strike out the quotation marks; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 150: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "(9)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 152: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 152, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"(10) So much of the amount received by an individual after December 31, 1921, and before January 1, 1927, as dividends or interest from domestic building and loan associations, operated exclusively for the purpose of making loans to members, as does not exceed $300" and a semicolon.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 153: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 153, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 32 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 7, strike out "(9)" and insert "(11)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 154: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 32 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 11, strike out "(10)" and insert "(12)"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 177: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 177, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 35 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 7, after "property," insert a comma and the following: "and the property so acquired is held by the taxpayer for any period after such sale or other disposition"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 188: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 188, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 36 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 22, strike out "1918 or 1919" and insert "1918, 1919, 1920, or 1921"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 278: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 278, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 51 of the Senate engrossed amendments, lines 3 and 4, strike out "under Title II of the revenue act of 1918," and on page 51 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 5, strike out "under such title"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 354: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 354, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 63 of the Senate engrossed amendments, before line 20, insert the following heading in small capitals: "Incorporation of individual or partnership business" and a period; and on page 63 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 21, strike out "from" and insert "after"; and on page 64 of the Senate engrossed amendments, lines 14 and 15 and again in line 18, strike out "paragraph" and insert "section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 355: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 355, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 65 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 6, strike out "15" and insert "12½"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 365: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 365, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"(5) Cemetery companies owned and operated exclusively for the benefit of their members or which are not operated for profit; and any corporation chartered solely for burial purposes as a cemetery corporation and not permitted by its charter to engage in any business not necessarily incident to that purpose, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual" and a semicolon.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 376: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 376, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 69 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 2, after "corporation" insert "or of a corporation entitled to the benefits of section 262"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 401: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 401, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 72 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 11, after "property," insert "and the property so acquired is held by the taxpayer for any period after such sale or other disposition" and a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 406: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 406, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 74 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 7, strike out "1918 or 1919" and insert "1918, 1919, 1920, or 1921"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 422: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 422, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 79 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 10, after "$2,000" insert a semicolon and the following: "but if the net income is more than $25,000 the tax imposed by section 230 shall not exceed the tax which would be payable if the $2,000 credit were allowed, plus the amount of the net income in excess of $25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 423: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 423, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 80 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 17, strike out "15" and insert "12½"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 440: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 440, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 85 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out lines 12 to 17, both inclusive, and insert the following:

"(c) There shall be included in the return or appended thereto a statement of such facts as will enable the commissioner to determine the portion of the earnings or profits of the corporation (including gains, profits, and income not taxed) accumulated during the taxable year for which the return is made, which have been distributed or ordered to be distributed, respectively, to its stockholders or members during such year" and a period.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 445: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 445, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "computed as provided in subdivision (b) of section 236" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 489: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 489, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 91 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 8, after "$2,000" insert a semicolon and the following: "but if the net income is more than $25,000 the tax imposed by section 243 shall not exceed the tax which would be payable if the $2,000 credit were allowed, plus the amount of the net income in excess of $25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 495: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 495, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 92 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 22, after "the" insert "taxable"; and on page 92 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 25, after "preceding," insert "taxable"; and on page 93 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 22, strike out the period and insert a semicolon; and on page 95 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 8, after "$2,000," insert a semicolon and the following: "but if the net income is more than $25,000 the tax imposed by section 246 shall not exceed the tax which would be payable if the $2,000 credit were allowed, plus the amount of the net income in excess of $25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 521: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 521, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "made under the revenue act of 1916, the revenue act of 1917, the revenue act of 1918, or this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 523: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 523, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "after such notice is sent by registered mail"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 556: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 556, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 110 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out all after "President" in line 11, down to and including "Congress" in line 12; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 557: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 557, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 111 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 14, strike out "(a)"; and on page 111 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out lines 21 to 25, both inclusive, and lines 1 to 17, both inclusive, on page 112; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 559: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 559, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 113 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 24, strike out all after "States" down to and including line 3 on page 114 and insert in lieu thereof a period; and the Senate agreed to the same.

Amendment numbered 561: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 561, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 115 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 6, before "business" insert "trade or"; and on page 115 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out all after "income" in line 15 down to and including "1918," in line 16; and on page 115 of the Senate engrossed amendments, after line 18, insert the following new subdivision:

"(c) As used in this section the term 'possession' of the United States' does not include the Virgin Islands of the United States" and a period.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 566: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 566, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 117 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 3, after "such," strike out "a"; and on page 119 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out all after "1917" in line 25 down to and including "unpaid" in line 1 on page 120; and on page 126 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 13, strike out "war-profits or excess-profits" and insert "war profits or excess profits"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 582: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 582, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 132 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 2, after the semicolon, insert "and"; and on page 132 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 4, strike out all after "$10,000,000" down to and including "$100,000,000" in line 12; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 614: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 614, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 141 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 5, after "after" insert "the"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 625: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 625, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 150 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 24, strike out "the passage of this act" and insert "January 1, 1922"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 627: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 627, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment except lines 18 and 19 on page 66 of the House bill; and on page 65 of the House bill, line 23, strike out "601. Subdivision" and insert "600. That subdivision"; and on page 66 of the House bill, line 9, strike out "602. Section" and insert "601. That section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 628: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 628, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "Sec. 602" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 637: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 637, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 158 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 19, strike out "10" and insert "12½"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 639: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 639, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "of 9"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 640: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 640, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "of 9"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 641: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 641, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment and strike out on page 67 of the House bill, line 22, "where" and insert "in the case of any such sirups intended to be used in the manufacture of carbonated beverages sold in bottles or other closed containers the rate shall be 5 cents per gallon," and a period; and on page 67 of the House bill, line 22, before the word "any" insert "Where"; and on page 67 of the House bill, line 22, strike out "manufacturing carbonated beverages or"; and on page 68 of the House bill, line 2, strike out "and except that the" and insert "and where any person manufacturing carbonated beverages manufactures and uses any such sirups in the manufacture of carbonated beverages sold in bot-ties or other closed containers there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid on each gallon of such sirups a tax of 5 cents per gallon. The"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 643: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 643, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "4"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 644: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 644, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "Sec. 603" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 645: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 645, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "602"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 646: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 646, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "602"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 648: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 648, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "602"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 651: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 651, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 164 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 10, strike out "702" and insert "703," and on page 165 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 8, strike out "703" and insert "704"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 662: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 662, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "any post of the American Legion or the women's auxiliary units thereof" and a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 701: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 701, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert "10 per centum" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 745: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 745, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 183 of the Senate engrossed amendments, after line 9, insert the following heading in small capitals: "Capital stock tax" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 746: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 746, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 184 of the Senate engrossed amendments, before line 13, insert the following heading in small capitals: "Miscellaneous occupational taxes" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 747: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 747, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 189 of the Senate engrossed amendments, before line 15, insert the following heading in small capitals: "Special tobacco manufacturers' tax" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 748: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 748, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 191 of the Senate engrossed amendments, before line 12, insert the following heading in small capitals: "Special tax on use of boats" and a period; and on page 192 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 13, strike out "The taxes herein imposed" and insert "This section"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 749: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 749, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 192 of the Senate engrossed amendments, before line 18, insert the following heading in small capitals: "Penalty for nonpayment of special taxes" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 750: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 750, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 193 of the Senate engrossed amendments, before line 2, insert the following heading in small capitals: "Tax on narcotics" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 765: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 765, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 208 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 10, after "share" insert a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 783: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 783, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 224 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 24, strike out "603" and insert "602"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 789: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 789, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 228 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 4, strike out "20" and insert "Twentieth"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 793: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 793, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 235 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 10, after "any" insert "other"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 799: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 799, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 237 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 5, strike out "1917" and insert "1916, the revenue act of 1917," and a comma; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 807: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 807, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 242 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 5, before "No" insert "Sec. 177" and a period; and on page 242 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 14, at the end of the line insert quotation marks; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 825: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 825, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 248 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 17, strike out all after "capital," down to and including "1917," in line 20, and insert the following: "For the purposes of this section, public service corporations which (1) were operated independently, (2) were not physically connected or merged, and (3) did not receive special permission to make a consolidated return, shall not be construed to have been affiliated; but a railroad or other public utility which was owned by an industrial corporation and was operated as a plant facility or as an integral part of a group organization of affiliated corporations which were required to file a consolidated return, shall be construed to have been affiliated"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 826: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 826, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 250 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 23, strike out "herein" and insert "by this section"; and on page 251 of the Senate engrossed amendments, lines 15 and 16, strike out "the period herein limited" and insert "such period of six months"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same.

J. W. FORDNEY,
W. R. GREEN,
NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,

Managers on the part of the House.

BOIES PENROSE,
P. J. McCUMBER,
REED SMOOT,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment No. 1: This is a clerical change in the heading to the first title of the bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 2: This is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 3: The House bill consisted of specified amendments to the revenue act of 1918 and continued that act in force without repeal. The Senate amendments propose an entirely different method—namely, to repeal the revenue act of 1918 (with certain exceptions) and to reenact it with certain changes. The conferees having agreed upon the general plan of the Senate amendments as to the form of the bill, it is necessary for the House to recede on a large number of formal amendments required by the change in the form of the bill. Amendment No. 3 strikes out of the House bill a section providing that terms defined in the revenue act of 1918 shall have the same meaning when used in this bill as in the revenue act of 1918. This section having become unnecessary on account of the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 in the manner above explained, the House recedes.

On amendment No. 4: This amendment inserts a number of definitions found in the revenue act of 1918 with only minor clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 5: This is a clerical change in the form of the headings to a title of the bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 6: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 7: This amendment inserts a number of definitions found in the revenue act of 1918, with only minor clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 8, 9, 157, 385, and 561: The House bill provided that in the case of a "foreign trader" or a "foreign trade corporation" gross income, for the purposes of income tax, means only gross income from sources within the United States, and defines "foreign trader" to mean any citizen or resident of the United States or domestic partnership 80 per cent or more of whose gross income is derived from sources without the United States and 50 per cent or more of whose gross income is derived from the active conduct of a business without the United States; and similarly defines "foreign trade corporation," including within the definition only domestic corporations. Senate amendments Nos. 8 and 9 strike out these definitions and amendments Nos. 157 and 385 strike out the provision limiting the gross income of foreign trade corporations to gross income from sources within the United States; but Senate amendment No. 561 inserts a new section (sec. 262) containing similar provisions applicable only to citizens of the United States or domestic corporations 80 per cent or more of whose gross income is derived from sources within a possession of the United States and 50 per cent or more of whose gross income is derived from the active conduct of a trade or business within a possession of the United States, with the additional qualification that there shall be included in the gross income of such persons all amounts received within the United States, whether derived from sources within or without the United States. The House recedes from its disagreement to amendments Nos. 8, 9, 157, and 385, and recedes from its disagreement to amendment No. 561 with an amendment making clerical changes, and providing that the term "possession" shall not include the Virgin Islands.

On amendment No. 10: This amendment inserts a number of definitions found in the revenue act of 1918, with only minor clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 11: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 12: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 13 and 14: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 15: This amendment is a clerical change; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 16 and 17: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 18: This amendment removes a doubt in the existing law as to the right of a corporation to distribute tax free the increase in value of property accrued prior to March 1, 1913, by providing that such increase may be distributed to the stockholders free from tax after the earnings and profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, have been distributed; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 19: This amendment provides that if a stockholder in a corporation receives dividends paid out of earnings or profits accumulated or increase in value of property accrued prior to March 1, 1913, he shall not be allowed as a deduction from gross income any loss sustained in the sale or other disposition of his stock unless, and then only to the extent that, the cost (or if the stock has been acquired prior to March 1, 1913, the fair market value as of March 1, 1913) exceeds the sum of (1) the amount realized from the sale or other disposition of the stock, plus (2) the aggregate amount of such tax-free dividends; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 20: The House bill provided that amounts distributed in the liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as in part or in full payment in exchange for stock or shares, and any gain or profit realized thereby shall be taxed to the distributee as other gains or profits. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision. The House recedes with an amendment providing that any distribution (whether in cash or other property) made by a corporation to its shareholders or members otherwise than out of (1) earnings or profits accumulated since February 28, 1913, or (2) earnings or profits accumulated or increase in value of property accrued prior to March 1, 1913, shall be applied against and reduce the basis provided in section 202 for the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived or the loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of the stock or shares by the distributee.

On amendment No. 21: This amendment provides that a stock dividend shall not be subject to tax, but that if after the distribution of a stock dividend the corporation cancels or redeems its stock at such time and in such manner as to make the distribution and cancellation or redemption essentially equivalent to the distribution of a taxable dividend, the amount received in redemption or cancellation of the stock shall be treated as a taxable dividend to the extent of the earnings or profits accumulated by the corporation after February 28, 1913; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 22 and 23: These are clerical amendments; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 24: The House bill repeals subdivision (e) of section 201 of the revenue act of 1918, a paragraph of the law relating only to the computation of invested capital for the purpose of the excess-profits tax, such repeal to take effect at the same time as the repeal of the excess-profits tax. The Senate amendment, in accordance with the general plan referred to in connection with amendment No. 3, strikes out the provision of the House bill and inserts subdivision (e) of section 201 of the revenue act of 1918 with an additional clause providing that it shall not be in effect after the excess-profits tax ceases to be in effect; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 25: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 26: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 27, 28, and 29: These are clerical amendments; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 30: The House bill provided that in case of property acquired by gift on or before December 31, 1920, the basis of ascertaining gain or loss from a sale or other disposition should be the same as existing law. The Senate amendment specifies the rule of existing law, which is the fair market price or value of the property at the time of acquisition; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 36: The House bill enacted into law the existing practice of the Treasury Department that in ascertaining the gain derived or loss sustained from a sale or other disposition of property, proper adjustment shall be made for any expenditures chargeable to capital account, and for any item of loss or depreciation or similar expense properly chargeable with respect to the property. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision of the House bill as surplusage and as merely declaratory of a rule which would be followed in the absence of an express statutory declaration; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 37: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 38: The House bill provided that on an exchange of property for other property no gain or loss shall be recognized unless the property received in exchange has a "definite and readily realizable market value." The Senate amendment strikes out the words "definite and"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 39: The House bill provided that if the property received in exchange for other property has a "definite and readily realizable market value" no gain or loss shall be recognized in certain cases. The Senate amendment strikes out the words "definite and"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 40: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 41: The House bill provided that when property held for investment is exchanged for property of a like kind or use no gain or loss shall be recognized even if the property received in exchange has a readily realizable market value. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 42: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 43, 44, and 46: The House bill provided that when in the organization or reorganization of one or more corporations a person receives in place of property owned by him new stock or securities no gain or loss shall be recognized. By amendment No. 43 this rule is limited to reorganizations (organizations being covered by a later paragraph of the bill). Amendment No. 44 provides that the property exchanged shall consist only of stock or securities, and amendment No. 46 limits the securities received in exchange to stock or securities in a corporation a party to or resulting from such reorganization; and the House recedes on all these amendments.

On amendment No. 45: This amendment makes a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 46: The effect of this amendment and the action of the conferees thereon has been explained in connection with amendment No. 43.

On amendment No. 47: The House bill defined the term "reorganization," as used in the paragraph relating to gain or loss resulting from the exchange of property in connection with the reorganization of a corporation, to include a merger or consolidation (however effected). The Senate amendment adds to this definition the case where one corporation acquires at least a majority of the voting stock and at least a majority of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of another corporation, or substantially all the property of another corporation; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 48 to 59, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 60 and 61: The House bill provided, in connection with the provisions relating to the determination of gain or loss in the transfer of property to a corporation, that a group of persons is "in control" of a corporation when owning at least 80 per cent of the voting stock and 80 per cent of all other classes of stock of the corporation. The Senate amendments define control to exist when at least 80 per cent of the voting stock and at least 80 per cent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock are owned; and the House recedes on both amendments.

On amendments Nos. 62 and 63: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 64: The House bill provided that where property is exchanged for other property and no gain or loss is recognized the property received shall for the purpose of determining gain or loss be treated as taking the place of the property exchanged. The Senate amendment also brings under the rule cases where property is compulsorily or involuntarily converted into cash or its equivalent by reason of fire, shipwreck, theft, or other casualties, and the taxpayer proceeds in good faith to expend the proceeds of the conversion in the acquisition of similar property. The amendment also provides that where under other provisions of the bill no deduction is allowed where stock is sold and repurchased for the purpose of realizing a loss the property acquired in pursuance of such a wash sale shall for the purpose of determining gain or loss on a subsequent sale be treated as taking the place of the property sold. The amendment also excepts from the general rule stated in the House bill, and makes proper provision for, cases where the property received in exchange consists partly of property having no readily realizable market value and partly of money or property which has a readily realizable market value, in such manner that the taxpayer must account for any real gain or loss resulting therefrom. The amendment also provides that nothing in the section relating to the basis for determining gain or loss shall be construed to prevent (in the case of property sold under contract providing for payment in installments) the taxation of that portion of any installment payment representing profit in the year in which the payment is received. The House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 65: The House bill provides that, except in the case of the depletion allowance, the basis for ascertaining allowable deductions for loss, exhaustion, wear and tear, obsolescence, amortization, and other like deductions shall be the same as that provided in the subdivision of the law relating to the basis for determining gain or loss in the case of sale or other disposition of property. Senate amendments Nos. 181, 186, 401, and 404 (agreed to by the conferees) added to the law provisions that in case of the depreciation allowance and in case of the deduction for loss arising from destruction of or damage to property, the deduction shall be computed on the basis of the fair market value of the property as of March 1, 1913, if acquired before that date. Amendment No. 65 strikes out the provision of the House bill, above referred to, as being (subject to the exceptions noted above) surplusage and merely declaratory of a rule already followed by the Treasury Department in the absence of an express statutory declaration; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 66: This amendment inserts the section of the existing law relating to inventories, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 67: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 68: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 69 and 70: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 71 and 72: The House bill provided that where a taxpayer sustains a net loss in any taxable year the amount thereof shall be deducted from his net income for the two succeeding taxable years, and defined "net loss" to include only net losses resulting from the operation of a "business." The Senate amendment changes the definition to include net losses resulting from the operation of a "trade or business"; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 73 and 74: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 75: The House bill in effect required that in computing a net loss the taxpayer must include in his gross income the amount of interest received free from income tax, which under the other provisions of the bill is not included in his gross income, but at the same time did not permit him to claim as a deduction the amount of interest paid on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry tax-exempt securities. The Senate amendment requires the taxpayer to include in his gross income for the purpose of computing the net loss only the amount by which the tax-free interest exceeds the interest paid on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry such tax-exempt securities; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 76: The House bill provided that in the computation of net losses the taxpayer can not take as a deduction losses not sustained in his business, but required him to include in his gross income the profits not derived from his business. The Senate amendment allows him a deduction of such losses, not exceeding, however, the profits derived outside of his trade or business; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 77 to 82, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 83: This amendment provides that the benefit of the section relating to net losses shall be allowed to insurance companies under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 84 and 85: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 86: The House bill in providing for the deduction of net losses sustained in any year from the net income of the two succeeding years failed to make provision in the case of a taxpayer having a fiscal year beginning in 1920 and ending in 1921. The Senate amendment provides that if such a taxpayer sustains a net loss during such fiscal year he shall be entitled to the benefits of the deduction for net losses in respect to the same proportion of the net loss which the portion of the fiscal year falling within the calendar year 1921 is of the entire year; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 87: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 88: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 89 to 100, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 101 to 112, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 113: The House bill defined the term "capital assets" for the purpose of the section relating to the limitation of the tax on capital gains to mean only property acquired and held by the taxpayer for profit or investment. The Senate amendment added an additional limitation that such property must have been held for more than two years before its sale; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 114: The House bill provided that only a portion of the gain derived from the sale of stock or shares in a corporation should be taxable. The Senate amendment in effect strikes out this provision; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 115: The House bill limited the tax to 12½ per cent upon capital net gain and similarly limited the deduction allowance for capital net loss in the case of any taxpayer (other than a corporation) whose ordinary net income and capital net gain together exceed $29,000. Senate amendment 115 changes the House method of limiting the tax upon capital net gain, eliminates all reference to capital net loss, and makes this provision applicable to all taxpayers (including corporations) who for any taxable year derive a capital net gain. The House recedes with an amendment providing that in the case of any taxpayer (other than a corporation) who for any year derives a capital net gain there shall (at the election of the taxpayer) be collected, in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 210 and 211, a tax consisting of the sum of (1) a partial tax computed upon the basis of the ordinary net income at the rates and in the manner provided in sections 210 and 211, and (2) 12½ per cent of the capital net gain; but if the taxpayer elects to be taxed under this section, the total tax shall in no such case be less than 12½ per cent of the total net income.

On amendments Nos. 116 to 120, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 121: This amendment inserts in the bill, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the section of the existing law relating to the normal tax on individuals; and also adds a subdivision, made necessary by the provision, concurred in by both Houses, granting married persons whose income is not over $5,000 an additional $500 personal exemption. The reduction of the exemption from $2,500 to $2,000 would result, in the case of a taxpayer having an income in excess of $5,000 and not in excess of $5,020.83, in increasing the tax by more than the amount of the income in excess of $5,000. The Senate amendment provides that the normal tax shall not exceed the amount of the tax payable if the net income were $5,000 (which tax is $100) plus the excess of the net income over $5,000. The House recedes with an amendment transferring the new subdivision added by the Senate to section 216 of the bill, dealing with the personal exemption, and making certain changes in the interest of simplicity.

On amendment No. 122: The House bill limited the maximum surtax rate to 32 per cent. The Senate amendment raises the maximum surtax rate to 50 per cent and makes adjustments in the lower surtax brackets; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 123: This amendment inserts the section of the existing law defining net income, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 124: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 125: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 126: This amendment inserts the first paragraph of the section of the existing law relating to the definition of gross income, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 127 and 128: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 129: The House bill exempted the salaries of the President of the United States and the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States. The Senate amendment restores the language of the existing law placing a tax on the income of these officers; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 130 and 131: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 132: This amendment exempted from income tax the compensation of officers and employees of the United States, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof or the District of Columbia, where the compensation is not paid by the United States; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 133: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 134: The House bill provided that income received by any marital community shall be included in the gross income of the spouse having the management and control of the community property. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 135: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 136: This amendment inserts the introductory clause of subdivision (b) of section 213 of the existing law, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 137: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 138 and 139: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 140 and 141: These amendments insert, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the provisions of existing law relating to the exemption of returned premiums on insurance contracts, and of the value of property acquired by gift or bequest; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 142: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 143: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 144: This amendment provides for the entire exemption from income tax of postal savings certificates of deposit; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 145: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 146 and 147: These amendments insert, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the provisions of existing law exempting from income tax the income of foreign Governments received from certain investments in the United States, the amounts received as compensation or damages for personal injuries or sickness, and income derived from any public utility or the exercise of essentially governmental functions if such income accrues to any State or political subdivision; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 148: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 149: The House bill exempted from income tax the income of a nonresident alien or foreign corporation which consists exclusively of earnings derived from the operation of ships documented under the laws of a country which grants equivalent exemption to United States citizens and corporations; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 150: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes with an amendment making a further clerical change.

On amendment No. 151: This amendment strikes out of the House bill a provision exempting from income tax the salary of the President and United States judges; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 152: The House bill provided that individuals should not be required to include in their gross income so much of the amount received by them as dividends or interest from domestic building and loan associations operated exclusively for the purpose of making loans to members, as does not exceed $500. The Senate amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill. The House recedes with an amendment permitting the exclusion from gross income of an amount of such dividends or interest not in excess of $300 and providing that this exclusion from gross income shall only be in effect from January 1, 1922, until January 1, 1927.

On amendment No. 153: This amendment excludes from gross income the rental value of a dwelling house furnished to a minister of the gospel as part of his compensation; and the House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 154: This amendment excludes from gross income receipts of shipowners' mutual protection and indemnity associations, not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or member, but the amendment provides that such corporations shall be taxable upon their net income from interest, dividends, and rents. The House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 155: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 156: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 157: The effect of this amendment and the action of the conferees thereon has been explained in connection with amendment No. 8.

On amendment No. 158: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 159: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 160: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 161: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the introductory clause of existing law relating to the deductions of individuals; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 162 and 163: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 164: The existing law allows as a deduction from gross income the interest paid on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry Victory 3½ notes. The House bill struck out this deduction and the Senate amendment restores this provision of existing law, but limits the privilege to cases where such notes were originally subscribed for by the taxpayer; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 165: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 166: This amendment is a clerical change correcting a possible misconception of the provision of the House bill relating to the deduction of taxes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 167: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 168: This amendment prohibits an individual from deducting from his gross income taxes imposed upon him upon his interest as shareholder or member of a corporation which are paid by the corporation without reimbursement from the taxpayer. The amendment also provides that, for the purposes of the paragraph relating to the deduction of taxes, estate, inheritance, legacy, and succession taxes accrue on the due date thereof unless otherwise provided by the law of the jurisdiction imposing such taxes. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 169: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of existing law relating to losses sustained in trade or business; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 170: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 171: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 172: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees on Senate amendments Nos. 157 and 385, as explained in connection with amendment No. 8; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 173: This amendment limits to transactions occurring outside of a trade or business the provisions of the House bill prohibiting a deduction for loss claimed to have been sustained in the sale of stock where the same stock is repurchased; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 174: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 175, 176, and 177: The House bill provided that the taxpayer shall not be allowed any loss sustained in any sale of shares of stock where it appears that at or about the date of such sale the taxpayer has acquired identical property in substantially the same amount as the property sold, and that if such new acquisition is to the extent of part only of the identical property, then the amount of loss deductible shall be in proportion as the total amount of the property sold or disposed of bears to the property acquired. The Senate amendment extends the operation of the rule to cases where the acquisition of new property is within 30 days before or after the date of sale, but excepts from the operation of the rule of the House bill cases where the new property is acquired by bequest or inheritance, and brings within the operation of the rule cases where the new property is substantially identical with the property sold, and provides, in case the new acquisition is to the extent of part only of substantially identical property, in lieu of the proportion provided by the House bill, that only a proportionate part of the loss shall be disallowed. The House recedes from amendments Nos. 175 and 176 and recedes from amendment No. 177 with an amendment providing that the loss shall be disallowed only in cases where the property acquired is held by the taxpayer for any period after the sale of the old property, a provision made necessary by the extension of the rule, made by the Senate amendment No. 175, to cases where the new property was acquired within 30 days before the date of the sale.

On amendment No. 178: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 179: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees on Senate amendments Nos. 157 and 385, as explained in connection with amendment No. 8; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 180: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 181: The purpose of this amendment and of the similar language in amendment 401 is to remove a doubt in existing law as to whether the basis of such a loss should be the value of the property on March 1, 1913, or the cost thereof, and provides that in case of losses arising from destruction of or damage to property, where the property was acquired before March 1, 1913, the loss deduction shall be computed on the basis of the fair market price or value of the property as of March 1, 1913; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 182, 183, 184, and 185: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 186: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of the existing law relating to the allowance for depreciation, and adds a clause providing that in the case of property acquired before March 1, 1913, the depreciation deduction shall be computed upon the basis of the fair market price or value of the property as of March 1, 1913; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 187: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 188: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of existing law relating to the deduction for amortization of war facilities and vessels but limits such deduction to any taxable year ended before March 3, 1924, and allows it for such years only if claim was made at the time of filing return for the taxable year 1918 or 1919. The House recedes with an amendment permitting the deduction also in the case of claims filed at the time of filing returns for the taxable years 1920 and 1921.

On amendment No. 189: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of the existing law relating to depletion allowance in the case of mines, oil and gas wells, and timber, adding a proviso that the depletion allowance based on discovery value shall not exceed the net income from property upon which the discovery is made except where such net income is less than the depletion allowance based on cost or fair market value as of March 1, 1913; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 190: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 191 and 192: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 193: The House bill provided for the deduction from gross income of contributions made to certain charitable and other institutions, and the Senate amendment adds to this list posts of the American Legion or the women's auxiliary units thereof; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 194: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 195: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees on Senate amendments Nos. 157 and 385, as explained in connection with amendment No. 8; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 196 and 197: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 198: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 199 and 200: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 201 and 202: The House bill added an additional paragraph to the existing deductions from gross income, providing that when property is involuntarily converted into cash as a result of fire, shipwreck, condemnation, or related causes, the taxpayer may deduct the gains involuntarily realized (or a proper part thereof) when he proceeds forthwith in good faith to invest the proceeds (or a part thereof) of such conversion "directly or through the purchase of stock" in the acquisition of similar property or in the establishment of a replacement fund therefor. Amendment No. 201 strikes out the words above quoted and amendment No. 202 extends the benefits of the paragraph to cases where the taxpayer expends the proceeds of the conversion in the acquisition of 80 per cent or more of the stock of a corporation owning similar property; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 203: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 204: This is a clerical amendment striking out a portion of the House bill rendered unnecessary by Senate amendment No. 64 agreed to by the conferees; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 205: This amendment provides that the provisions of the paragraph in the House bill prescribing the conditions under which a deduction may be taken in respect of the proceeds or gains derived from the compulsory or involuntary conversion of property into cash shall apply to the exemption or exclusion of such proceeds or gains from gross income under prior income, war-profits, and excess-profits tax acts; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 206: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 207: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 208: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees on Senate amendments Nos. 157 and 385, as explained in connection with amendment No. 8; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 209, 210, and 211: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 212: The House bill provided that in the case of a nonresident alien individual the deductions from gross income shall be apportioned and allocated with respect to sources of income within and without the United States under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, such determination to be final. The Senate amendment strikes out of the House bill the clause making such determinations final; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 213: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees on Senate amendments Nos. 157, 385, and 561, as explained in connection with amendment No. 8; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 214: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 215: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the section of the present law specifying the items not deductible from gross income; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 216, 217, and 218: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 219: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 220: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 221: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the introductory clause of section 216 of existing law relating to the credits of individuals in computing the normal tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 222: The House bill provided that for the purposes of normal tax there should be allowed as a credit in computing net income the amount of dividends received from corporations. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and provides that the credit shall be the amount received as dividends (1) from a domestic corporation other than a corporation entitled to the benefits of section 262 (see discussion in connection with amendment No. 8) or (2) from a foreign corporation when it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that more than 50 per cent of its gross income has been derived from sources within the United States. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 223: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of existing law relating to the credit in computing net income for purposes of the normal tax of the amount received as interest on United States bonds; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 224: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 225: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 226: This amendment clarifies the language of the House bill relating to the personal exemption of husband and wife living together; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 227 and 228: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 229: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees on Senate amendments Nos. 157, 385, and 561, as explained in connection with amendment No. 8; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 230: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 231: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 232 and 233: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 234: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 235 to 238, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 239: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees on Senate amendments Nos. 157, 385, and 561, as explained in connection with amendment No. 8; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 240 and 241: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 242: The House bill provided that in computing the gross income of a nonresident alien individual there should be treated as income from sources within the United States interest on bonds of residents, corporate or otherwise, but excepted interest received from foreign traders or foreign-trade corporations and interest on deposits in banks, banking associations, and trust companies paid to persons not engaged in business within the United States and not having an office or place of business therein. The Senate amendment strikes from this exception the interest received from foreign traders or foreign-trade corporations, since the action of the conferees in respect to foreign traders (explained in connection with amendment No. 8) makes this exception meaningless, and extends the exception of bank deposits to include deposits made with private bankers, and adds to the exception interest received from a resident alien individual or resident foreign corporation when it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that less than 20 per cent of the gross income of such resident payor has been derived from sources within the United States. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 243: The House bill provided that in computing gross income of a nonresident alien there shall be treated as income from sources within the United States all dividends received from domestic corporations other than foreign-trade corporations. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and provides that there shall be included in gross income the amount received as dividends (1) from a domestic corporation other than a corporation entitled to the benefits of section 262 (see discussion in connection with amendment No. 8) or (2) from a foreign corporation unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that less than 50 per cent of its gross income has been derived from sources within the United States. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 244 to 273, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 274: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees on Senate amendments Nos. 157, 385, and 561, as explained in connection with amendment No. 8; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 275, 276, and 277: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 278: This amendment strikes out, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, a portion of the House bill relating to the treatment of personal-service corporations and inserts for the same reason the provisions of existing law relating to the taxation of members of partnerships and personal-service corporations, providing, as did the House bill, that after December 31, 1921, such taxation of members of personal-service corporations shall be discontinued. The House bill also struck out of existing law the provision denying partnerships the deduction allowed to individuals of contributions to charity. The Senate amendment restores the existing law. The House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 279: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 280: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 281 to 296, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 297: This amendment provides for the exemption from income tax of the income of a trust created by an employer as a part of a stock bonus or profit-sharing plan for the exclusive benefit of his employees, to which contributions are made by the employer or employees, or both, for the purpose of distributing to such employees the earnings and principal accumulated by the trust. The amendment, however, also provides that the amount actually distributed or made available to any distributee shall be taxable to him in the year in which distributed or made available, to the extent that it exceeds the amount paid by him. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 298: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 299: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 300 to 305, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 306: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 307: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 308: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 309: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees on Senate amendments Nos. 157 and 385, as explained in connection with amendment No. 8; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 310: The House bill provided for withholding at the source of certain incomes of nonresident aliens but excepted from withholding interest on deposits "in banks, banking associations, and trust companies" paid to persons not engaged in business in the United States and not having an office or place of business therein. The Senate amendment extends the exception to such interest on deposits with private bankers; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 311 to 317, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 318: The existing law provides that in the case of so-called "tax-free covenant bonds" the obligor shall withhold at the source a tax equal to 2 per cent of the interest paid if such interest is payable to an individual or a partnership. The House bill provided for a similar withholding in the case of interest paid to a corporation. The Senate amendment strikes out this extension of the present law; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 319: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 320: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of the existing law relating to the administrative provisions governing withholding the tax at the source; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 321: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 322: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 323 to 328, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 329: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees on Senate amendments Nos. 157, 385, and 561, as explained in connection with amendment No. 8; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 330 and 331: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 332: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of existing law relating to the treatment of accrued taxes in connection with the credit for foreign taxes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 333: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 334, 335, and 336: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 337: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 338, 339, and 340: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 341: The House bill made certain clarifying amendments in the section of the present law relating to the income-tax returns of individuals and married persons. The Senate amendment rewrites the section with further clarifying amendments and also provides that every individual, or a husband and wife living together, having a gross income, or an aggregate gross income, of $5,000 or over, shall make a return regardless of the amount of net income; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 342: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the section of existing law relating to partnership returns; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 343: This amendment inserts in clarified form, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the section of existing law relating to returns by fiduciaries of the income of the persons for whom they act, adding a provision that such return must be made if such individual has a gross income of $5,000 or over, regardless of the amount of net income; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 344: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of existing law relating to returns for a period of less than 12 months; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 345: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 346: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 347: The House bill provided that in the case of returns for part of the taxable year the personal exemption and the credit for dependents shall be reduced to amounts bearing the same ratio to the full credits which the number of months in the period for which the return is made bears to a year. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision, which becomes unnecessary because of the action of the conferees in regard to amendments Nos. 349 and 350; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 348: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 349 and 350: The House bill provided that in the case of a return for a period of less than a year the income shall be placed on an annual basis and that the surtax shall be such part of a surtax computed on such annual basis as the number of months in the period for which the return is made is of a year. The Senate amendments make the rule thus established applicable to both normal tax and surtax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 351: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 352: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the section of the present law relating to the time and place for filing individual returns for income tax, adding a provision that in the case of nonresident aliens returns shall be made within six months after the close of the taxable year, instead of within three months, as in the case of citizens and residents; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 353: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the section of the existing law relating to understatements in returns; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 354: This amendment grants to individuals and partnerships the privilege, if exercised within four months after the passage of this act, of organizing their trade or business as a corporation and paying taxes as if the corporation had been in existence from January 1, 1921, to the date of organization. The privilege is granted only if the income of the business was 20 per cent or more of its invested capital, and the amendment further provides that any taxpayer taking advantage of the section shall pay a capital-stock tax as if the corporation had been in existence from January 1, 1921. The House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 355: The House bill amended existing law so as to make the income tax on corporations 12½ per cent, beginning January 1, 1922. The Senate amendment, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, strikes out the provision of the House bill and inserts with clerical changes the provisions of existing law imposing an income tax on corporations at the rate of 10 per cent for 1921 and 15 per cent for each year thereafter. The House recedes with an amendment restoring the House rate of 12½ per cent for the year 1922 and thereafter.

On amendment No. 356: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the first two classes of organizations which under existing law are exempt from income tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 357: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 358: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 359, 360, and 361: The House bill provided that fraternal beneficiary societies operating under the lodge system or for the exclusive benefit of the members or beneficiaries of members of fraternal societies operating under the lodge system should be exempt from income tax. The Senate amendment restores the language of existing law, omitted from the House bill, granting exemption of such societies under this subdivision only if they provide for the payment of benefits to the members of such societies or their dependents; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 362: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 363: The House bill provided for exemption from income tax of domestic building and loan associations operated exclusively for the purpose of making loans to members. The Senate amendment exempts all building and loan associations substantially all the business of which is confined to making loans to members, in lieu of the exemption provision of the House bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 364: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 365: This amendment adds to the list of organizations exempt from income tax not only cemetery companies owned and operated exclusively for the benefit of their members (as under existing law), but also such companies which are not operated for profits, and any corporation chartered solely for burial purposes and not permitted to engage in any other business, if no part of its net earnings inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual. The House recedes with an amendment making clerical changes.

On amendment No. 366: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 367 and 368: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 369: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the provisions of existing law granting exemption from income tax to business leagues, chambers of commerce, civic leagues and clubs for recreation purposes, certain farmers' or other mutual insurance companies, mutual ditch irrigation companies, and other organizations of like character; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 370: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 371: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 372: The House bill provided for the exemption from income tax of farmers' associations organized and operated as purchasing agents for the purpose of purchasing supplies and equipment for the use of members and turning over such supplies and equipment to members at actual cost plus "necessary purchasing expenses." The Senate amendment strikes out the word "purchasing" in the language above quoted; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 373: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the provision of existing law exempting from income tax corporations organized for the exclusive purpose of holding title to property, collecting income therefrom, and turning over the entire amount, less expenses, to an organization which itself is exempt from income tax; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 374: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of existing law exempting from income tax Federal land banks and national farm loan associations; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 375: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 376: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the provisions of existing law relating to the definition of net income of corporations, and adds a provision that in the case of a foreign corporation the computation shall also be made in the manner provided in the section dealing with the allocation of income to sources within and without the United States. The House recedes with an amendment making a clerical change.

On amendment No. 377: This amendment inserts a heading to a section; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 378: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 379 to 384, inclusive: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 385: The effect to this amendment and the action of the conferees thereon is explained in connection with amendment No. 8.

On amendment No. 386: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 387: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the first portion of section 234 of the present law relating to deductions allowed corporations; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 388: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 389: The existing law allows as a deduction from gross income the interest paid on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry Victory 3½ per cent notes. The House bill struck out this deduction and the Senate amendment restores this provision of existing law, but limits the privilege to cases where such notes were originally subscribed for by the taxpayer; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 390: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 391: This amendment is a clerical change correcting a possible misconstruction of the provision of the House bill relating to the deduction of taxes; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 392, 393, and 394: These amendments are clerical changes; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 395: This amendment provides that a tax of the kind generally allowed as a deduction may be taken as a deduction by a corporation if it is a tax imposed upon a shareholder or member upon his interest as such and paid by the corporation without reimbursement from the shareholder, further providing that in such case no deduction shall be allowed the shareholder. The amendment also provides that, for the purposes of the paragraph relating to the deduction of taxes, estate, inheritance, legacy, and succession taxes accrue on the due date thereof unless otherwise provided by the law of the jurisdiction imposing such taxes. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 396: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 397: The House bill, in connection with deductions of individuals for losses, prohibited this deduction in the case of wash sales of shares of stock but in the paragraph relating to deductions of corporations prohibited such losses in case of wash sales of property. The Senate amendment confines this to wash sales of shares of stock in conformity with the provision as to individuals; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 398: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 399, 400, and 401: The House bill provided that the taxpayer shall not be allowed any loss sustained in any sale of shares of stock where it appears that at or about the date of such sale the taxpayer has acquired identical property in substantially the same amount as the property sold, and that, if such new acquisition is to the extent of part only of identical property, then the amount of loss deductible shall be in proportion as the total amount of the property sold or disposed of bears to the property acquired. The Senate amendment extends the operation of the rule to cases where the acquisition of new property is within 30 days before or after the date of sale, but excepts from the operation of the rule of the House bill cases where the new property is acquired by bequest or inheritance and brings within the operation of the rule cases where the new property is substantially identical with the property sold; and provides, in case the new acquisition is to the extent of part only of substantially identical property, in lieu of the proportion provided by the House bill, that only a proportionate part of the loss shall be disallowed. Amendment No. 401 also excepts from the operation of the rule cases where the loss is sustained by a dealer in stock or securities with respect to a transaction in the ordinary course of its business. Amendment No. 401 also provides that in case of losses arising from destruction of or damage to property where the property was acquired before March 1, 1913, the deduction for loss shall be computed upon the basis of the fair market price or value of the property as of March 1, 1913. The House recedes from amendments Nos. 399 and 400 and recedes from amendment No. 401 with an amendment providing that the loss in case of "wash sales" shall be disallowed only in cases where the property acquired is held by the taxpayer for any period after the sale of the old property, a provision made necessary by the extension of the rule, made by Senate amendment No. 399, to cases where the new property was acquired within 30 days before the date of the sale.

On amendment No. 402: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 403: The House bill allows as a deduction in computing the net income of corporations for the purpose of income tax the amount of dividends received from other corporations. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and provides that the deduction shall be the amount received as dividends (1) from a domestic corporation other than a corporation entitled to the benefits of section 262 (see discussion in connection with amendment No. 8) or (2) from a foreign corporation when it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that more than 50 per cent of its gross income has been derived from sources within the United States; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 404: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of existing law relating to the allowance for depreciation, and adds a clause providing that in the case of property acquired before March 1, 1913, the depreciation deduction shall be computed upon the basis of the fair market price or value of the property as of March 1, 1913; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 405: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 406: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of existing law relating to deductions for amortization of war facilities and vessels, but limits such deduction to any taxable year ended before March 3, 1924, and allows it for such years only if claim was made at the time of filing return for the taxable year 1918 or 1919. The House recedes with an amendment also permitting the deduction in the case of claims filed at the time of filing returns for the taxable years 1920 and 1921.

On amendment No. 407: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the paragraph of the existing law relating to depletion allowance in the case of mines, oil and gas wells, and timber, adding a proviso that the depletion allowance based on discovery value shall not exceed the net income from property upon which the discovery is made, except where such net income is less than the depletion allowance based on cost or fair market value as of March 1, 1913; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 408: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 409: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, the provisions of existing law relating to special deductions of insurance companies, but limits the application of these provisions (except in the case of mutual companies other than life) to the calendar year 1921; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 410: The House bill extended to corporations the provisions of existing law allowing individuals to deduct contributions made for charitable purposes, limiting the amount of such deduction to 5 per cent of the net income. The Senate amendment strikes out the provision; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 411: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 412 and 413: The House bill added a paragraph to the existing deductions from gross income, providing that when property is involuntarily converted into cash as a result of fire, shipwreck, condemnation, or related causes the taxpayer may deduct the gains involuntarily realized (or a proper part thereof) when he proceeds forthwith in good faith to invest the proceeds (or a part thereof) of such conversion "directly or through the purchase of stock" in the acquisition of similar property or in the establishment of a replacement fund therefor. Amendment No. 412 strikes out the words above quoted, and amendment No. 413 extends the benefits of the paragraph to cases where the taxpayer expends the proceeds of the conversion in the acquisition of 80 per cent or more of the stock of a corporation owning similar property; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 414: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 415: This is a clerical amendment striking out a portion of the House bill rendered unnecessary by Senate amendment No. 64 agreed to by the conferees; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 416: This amendment provides that the provisions of the paragraph in the House bill prescribing the conditions under which a deduction may be taken in respect of the proceeds or gains derived from the compulsory or involuntary conversion of property into cash shall apply to the exemption or exclusion of such proceeds or gains from gross income under prior income, war-profits and excess-profits tax acts; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 417: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the repeal and reenactment of the revenue act of 1918 instead of its amendment in specified particulars, as explained in connection with amendment No. 3; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 418: This amendment is a clerical change; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 419: This amendment is a clerical change made necessary by the action of the conferees on Senate amendment No. 561, as explained in connection with amendment No. 8; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 420: The House bill provided that in the case of a foreign corporation the deductions from gross income shall be apportioned and allocated with respect to sources of income within and without the United States under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, such determination to be final. The Senate amendment strikes out of the House bill the clause making such determinations final; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 421: This amendment inserts, for the reason explained in connection with amendment No. 3, section 235 of the present law relating to the items not deductible by corporations in computing net income; and the House recedes.

